Rev. Alonzo Monk, Jr., general evangelist, has been engaged to preach in the revival at West Point, Miss., in September. Rev. W. R. Lott, the pastor, and his people are working and praying for a great spiritual revival.

Rev. S. J. Davies, writer of "Safety Signals," writes to say that the word "romanic," which appeared in his article last week should have been "nomadic." We are glad to make the correction. The proof readers some times have an impossible task.

Rev. and Mrs. K. W. Dodson, Minden, La., announce the marriage of their daughter, Agatha, to Dr. Gordon Lee Hastings, on Saturday, June 23. The happy young couple will make their home at El Dorado, Ark. The Advocate extends all good wishes.

Mrs. N. E. Cunningham, of Gibson Memorial Church, Vicksburg, Miss., in a business letter to the Advocate, says: "Our pastor, Rev. H. A. Wood, is a splendid, consecrated minister and has worked untiringly this year for the Master's cause here among us."

Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, Water Valley, Miss., writes: "In April we had a very fine and spiritual meeting in our church, with Rev. O. S. Lewis doing the preaching. Representatives of all denominations say it was one of the best and most uplifting revivals ever held in Water Valley."

A fine meeting was recently held at Natchez, Miss., in which the pastor, Rev. O. S. Lewis, was assisted by his brother, Rev. J. Tillery Lewis, of the North Mississippi Conference. Reports are to the effect that the preaching was of an unusually high order, and that the church was greatly helped by the meeting.

The Daily Vacation Bible School at St. Mark's, this city, is in the third week of a successful session. It has an enrollment of 232, with an average daily attendance of 150. Some of the nationalities represented are: Chinese, French, Greek, Austrian, Mexican, German, with a majority of Italians. Rev. W. H. Giles is pastor of St. Mark's.

The new church building of the Broad Street Methodist Church, Hattiesburg, Miss., is progressing nicely, and it is expected to be ready for occupancy by the first of September. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Thompson, and his people are happy over the prospect. An attractive year book and directory of the membership has been issued by the church.

A beautiful incident of the 11 o'clock service at the Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, last Sunday morning was the presentation of some beautiful flowers to Mr. Ellis Robbert, who completed on that day his fourth year as organist of the church. Appropriate remarks were made by the pastor, Rev. H. L. Johns, and the chairman of the music committee, Dr. R. S. Crichlow.

The meeting at Ackerman, Miss., in which the preaching was done by Rev. W. N. Duncan, presiding elder of the Columbus District, was a very successful one, twenty-seven members being received into the church. The congregation join with their pastor, Rev. C. A. Northington, in saying that Brother Duncan did some of the best preaching it has been their privilege to hear.

Some of our readers will be interested in the following appointments of the Florida Conference, recently held: Fort Myers, First Church, L. M. Broyles; Lakeland, First Church, H. F. Tolle; De Land, J. S. Purcell; University of Florida, student pastor, A. B. Austin; Miami, Trinity, S. H. C. Burgin; Oakland Park and Progresso Mission, J. A. Tolle; Oneco and Samoset, C. F. Tolle; Tampa, Hyde Park, Walt Holcomb.

A Daily Vacation Bible School is being conducted in the First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La. It began on June 25 and will continue for several weeks. Standard courses for Beginner, Primary and Junior children are being taught. The enrollment is 125. Mrs. Dan Runyah, the pastor's assistant, is general superintendent of the school, and is assisted by a corps of competent workers.

Dr. Arthur J. Barton and Bishop James Cannon, Jr., have united in a call for a conference to be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., between July 11 and July 18 to effect an organized movement "for the election of dry Democratic Senatorial, Congressional, and State nominees for public office and for the defeat of the wet Tammany candidate for President." The exact date of the conference is to be announced very soon.

The George Tucker evangelistic party closed a most successful meeting at Hernando, Miss., on Sunday, June 24. This was the second meeting of this party in Hernando. The meeting was held in the Methodist church, but all the other churches of the city called in their evening services in co-operation. During the last week of the meeting, all the business houses closed for the morning service.

Mr. R. W. Stewart died at Alexandria, La., on June 26, and was buried at his old home, Madison, Miss., on the following day. This announcement will bring sorrow to a large number of friends and acquaintances. His wife is a sister of Mr. T. A. Holloman, formerly of Mississippi, but now a resident of Alexandria. The Holloman name is an honored one in Methodism. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family.

The following sad news comes from Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District: "Brother and Sister W. H. Royal's little five-year-old afflicted child, Harriet Elizabeth, died yesterday (June 28), and I conducted the funeral this afternoon in their home at Natalbany, assisted by Brother W. R. Harvell. She will be buried tomorrow at Shreveport. This is the little one who had a stroke of paralysis some four months ago and was carried to Boston for treatment." The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing parents.

The tent meeting under the auspices of the New Orleans City Board of Church Extension, after a successful series of services in the lower part of the city near the Industrial Canal, has been transferred to Canal Boulevard and Taylor Street, with Rev. W. E. Thomas, one of our general evangelists, doing the preaching. The meeting will continue probably two weeks. It is hoped that new church organizations will be effected as a result of these meetings. Such an organization is in process of formation in the Industrial Canal section. Members of the various Methodist churches of the city are asked to co-operate in this effort by their presence and prayers.

The report of the Committee on Itinerancy at the recent session of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, by the adoption of which a bishop was prohibited from transferring a preacher without the consent of a majority of the district superintendents of the Conference into which he was to be transferred, was nullified by an eleventh-hour action, due to the fact that in a Conference where there was not more than two district superintendents the bishop might be deprived of his episcopal function. Zion's Herald gave the action as originally taken, but corrected the item in a later number. The operation of this rule was postponed till the next General Conference.

MISSISSIPPI MOTORCADE TO JUNALUSKA.

The Board of Missions and the Sunday School Board are conducting jointly a Summer School at Lake Junaluska, July 31 to Aug. 14. Courses are given by both, and credits may be had from both. The "Course in Missions" lasts only one week; those by the Sunday School Board, two weeks. For the program for the School of Missions, kindly refer to page nine of the Missionary Voice of July.

Join the Methodist Motorcade to Junaluska! Get a car from your city or charge to go. This will reduce the expense, afford you the best way to see the scenery en route; have the car for use in the afternoons while there (no program in afternoons), visit points nearby of historic or scenic interest. The Motorcade will go by Birmingham, Chattanooga, Knoxville, and Asheville, returning by Murphy, Stone Mountain, Atlanta, and Montgomery.

The expense need not be unreasonable; in fact you will be surprised how cheap you can make it; ask for information about rates.

A chairman has been named for each of the presiding elder's districts in the Conference, who will arrange for the cars from their respective districts: Brookhaven District, Mrs. L. W. Alford, McComb; Hattiesburg District, Rev. J. L. Carter, Mount Olive; Jackson District, Dr. J. L. Decell, Jackson; Meridian District, Rev. W. J. Dawson, Shubuta; Newton District, Rev. M. M. Black, Forest; Seashore District, S. A. Tomlinson, Gulfport; Vicksburg District, Rev. Otto Porter, Port Gibson.

Write to the chairman of your district about the trip, and get some other folks in your church interested in going; it will be of great value to you. I am ready to assist in any way I can to make the trip pleasant and profitable. This trip will afford a fine vacation, sight-seeing, good fellowship, delightful climate, information about the work of the church, and you will return home with the inspiration and determination to do more than we have ever done. What more could you want?

A PARTIALLY CULTIVATED FIELD.

By Dr. J. Callaway Robertson.

One of the most interesting and promising aspects of modern church development is found in the adult class and department of the Sunday school. Twenty years ago the Sunday school belonged almost exclusively to childhood and youth. There were relatively few men and women sharing its privileges and responsibilities. In 1908 the International Sunday School Association accounted for only 1,059 adult classes. Within a decade their records had grown to 60,000. To-day the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has more than 25,000 adult classes with an enrollment that will exceed a half million persons. To complete the picture we shall have to include a vast company of loyal men and women who are serving as officers and teachers in the specialized work of the church school to-day.

The widespread interest in the spiritual enrichment of adult life parallels an international awakening to the values of adult education in general. But even more interesting is a certain relation the enrollment of large numbers of men and women in the Sunday school seems to bear to the greatly expanded program of the church in recent years. Many influences have operated to make possible the wide expansion of the influence and efforts of the church. One of them is the information and inspiration afforded the adult part of the church through the great classes of the Sunday school.

It was after men and women through the Sunday school began to know the world program of the church that the great advances in modern missions were made. It was after a period of instruction through the Sunday school that adults began to hear and to heed the challenge of stewardship. It was after adults in the Sunday school came to appreciate the need of religious training for boys and girls and men and women that the movement for better and more beautiful church buildings was started. It was after adults in the Sunday school faced together some of the facts about social living that the church, with strong hand, took hold of certain situations and effected reforms that are gradually revolutionizing the way of living for many American people.

It would be a display of sheer ignorance to claim that the Sunday school through work with adults has alone made possible the day of larger service for the church. Indeed, the point is not in locating credit or honor at all. It is rather in pointing out a great new possibility in shaping the life of our generation. In our own church we have hundreds of thousands of men and women in Sunday school classes every Sunday. In the nation there are millions. With earnest effort the number can be greatly increased. They are eager to know the truth and to share in the work of making a better world. They can be enlisted for an increasing contribution to the total enterprises of the church.

One of the finest opportunities the church has to-day can be uncovered in the adult class or department of the Sunday school. Here are the parents of our homes and the citizens of the community. In their hands rest the actual management of the affairs of this generation. They may, through misunderstanding, neutralize all our efforts for childhood and youth. The boy and girl must go home after they come to us. With proper guidance they may touch life deftly with the spirit and truth of Jesus Christ.

The General Sunday School Board of our church has wrought out a well rounded and challenging program for men and women. It has in it all the elements needed to make it vital in the enrichment of life and dynamic for a larger Christian service. The program has grown up out of years of earnest effort and study and is to-day actually engaging about four thousand classes scattered over the church. The Board, through the Department of Adult Work, covets the privilege of assisting pastors and leaders of adult classes to make larger use of their opportunity with men and women in the Sunday school.

Protection Against Old Age

LIEUTENANT COLONEL JOHN A. RANDOLPH, A TRIBUTE.

By Rev. J. Q. Schisler.

John Anthony Randolph was born March 16, 1859, near Shiloh, Tenn. He moved with his family when quite young to Mississippi. He joined the church early in life. On Dec. 1, 1880, he was married to Miss Dora Laird. He was licensed to preach and joined the North Mississippi Conference in 1886. He served appointments in Clarksdale, Holly Springs, Macon and other places, as well as the presiding eldership of the Greenville District. In 1898 Brother Randolph volunteered for the Spanish-American war and was appointed chaplain in the army which went to Cuba. Upon the close of the war he was appointed as a chaplain in the regular army. He rendered most valuable service in the Philippine Insurrection. He served in this country in army posts in Texas, Montana, California, and Georgia. He accompanied General Pershing with the expeditionary forces to the Mexican border and into Mexico.

For two years he was over-seas in the World War. Chaplain Randolph was with the soldiers in the trenches at the front in some of the most important battles of the war. He later became the Senior Chaplain in the Second Army in charge of a school for chaplains in France. He was retired from the army, Dec. 1, 1922, with the rank of Lieutenant Colonel and with the highest admiration and respect of General Pershing and other major officers of the army, and of the soldiers.

Since his retirement from the army he has served for brief periods of time as pastor at Jacksonville, Fla.; Sardis, Miss.; and at Inglewood Church in Nashville. Colonel Randolph died in his home at Nashville, June 14, 1928.

Certain characteristics of the life of Colonel Randolph after his retirement endeared him to those who knew him well. The first, was his dislike of sham. He was a sincere and honest man, with a keen sense of justice and right and a deep regard for truth. In the second place, though retired from the army and superannuated as a Methodist preacher, he was young in spirit and mind. Upon recommendation of his Conference Superintendent of Sunday School Work, he agreed to prepare himself to teach some Bible courses in training schools. Not satisfied with his long years of study of the Bible, he enrolled as a student in Scarritt College in Nashville and pursued his courses with all the enthusiasm of a young man. Colonel Randolph was a modest man. Honors came to him in the army which are attained by few men, but you did not hear of these honors from the chaplain himself.

Funeral services were conducted in the home in Nashville by his long-time friend, Rev. J. H. Shumaker, and other friends in the city, and the burial was in the National Cemetery near this city. The sounding of taps by a soldier from one of the near-by army posts added much to the impressiveness of the simple rites at the grave.

THE LAW COULD NOT OUTLAW THIS LAWYER'S DEBTS.

The bankruptcy law takes no account of moral obligations. It is a legal device by which the property of a person unable to pay his debts may be taken and distributed among his creditors, while he himself, if he has made a full surrender of his property and is free from fraud, may start afresh, absolved of legal claims against him. Whether he is free of moral liability for monetary losses other men may have suffered through his shortcomings or misfortunes is a question to be settled by his own conscience.

Back in 1906 Gray Carroll, then a middle-aged lawyer, went through voluntary bankruptcy here in Little Rock. He was legally freed of liabilities totaling more than $24,000. He went to Tulsa, Okla., started there, and prospered. And now, a man of 70, he is of his own accord paying off every dollar of those legally cancelled claims, with interest for the years that have elapsed. For every $1 of the debts he owed in 1906 he is paying an additional $1.25. And he is doing this solely because, through all those years, he remained a debtor in his own mind. For him a legal decree could not cancel a moral obligation. His is the code not merely of the law, his own profession, but the code of scrupulous honor.—Arkansas Gazette.

On April 2, 1928, the spirit of MRS. ROSA SUMRALL STEELE, wife of the late E. W. Steele, took its flight from this life to the life beyond. She was born Oct. 23, 1854, and joined the church in early girlhood, and continued a faithful member until the day of her death. She was married to Mr. E. W. Steele, who preceded her into eternity several years before. To this union were born five children, only two of whom survive, Mrs. Ada Shepherd and Mrs. Leulla Allen, who, together with eleven grandchildren, six great-grandchildren, and many relatives and friends mourn her untimely death and who expect, after having lived faithful to Jesus Christ, to meet her some day where there is no death or sorrow to bring separations or to disturb the happiness of the soul. Sister Steele's body was laid to rest in Georgetown cemetery in the presence of many sorrowing friends and relatives. May God help each of us to emulate the virtues of this good Christian lady and faithful servant of the Master; and live to be with her in the glory of the eternal world.

L. M. SHARP.

MRS. EMMA SHAFFER, wife of Brother George M. Shaffer, of Gibsland, La., was born April 5, 1866, and went to her rest March 24, 1928. Sister Shaffer was a woman of splendid character and her kind and frienly spirit was such that it readily endeared her to those whose good fortune it was to know her. Faithful to her home and to her neighbors, she was no less faithful to her church, and gladly testified both by word and life that her hope was in Jesus Christ. Her home was one that always ministered with its peace, its contentment and its comforts to the needs of the pastor when he was in the neighborhood. Never was this good woman too weary or too cumbered with her duties to make her pastor realize that his presence was a joy and a wished-for blessing whenever he came. Sister Shaffer was married twice, and leaves the following children to honor her memory and mourn her loss: R. B. Cook, B. M. Cook, Mrs. Fred Rhodes, Mrs. Lelia Hines, Mrs. J. B. Day, and Mrs. W. J. Foster; one daughter, Miss Carrie May Cook, departed this life May 15, 1911. During the last years of her life, Sister Shaffer lived with her companion, Brother G. M. Shaffer, in the midst of their children and grandchildren. Her faithful husband, whose long life likewise has abounded with good works and faith, is stricken with grief and loneliness over his loss. But his eyes are turned toward the glorious portals of the City Eternal, where all his heartaches shall be overwhelmed by the joy of his Saviour's presence, and where he shall meet again those whom he has loved and lost.

CHAS. E. McLEAN.

RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Board of Stewards of the Methodist Church at Enterprise, Miss.)

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, in his wisdom, has called from this life our brother and co-worker in the church, MR. J. L. BULLARD, whose departure is deeply felt among us;

And, whereas, he was a true citizen and Christian who desired and earnestly labored for the progress of his community and upbuilding of his church;

And, whereas, the community at large and the church have lost a true and valued friend, and his services and co-operation in both will be greatly missed;

Therefore, be it resolved, That we shall hold in sacred remembrance our association with him in the work, and that we extend to his bereaved family our sincere sympathy.

Resolved, further, That a copy of these resolutions be given his family; a copy spread upon the minutes of the quarterly conference, and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: D. W. Ulmer, Pastor; J. E. Williams, W. P. Bass, F. L. McMullen, Miss Latitia Wright, Mrs. I. L. Hunter.

Winnsboro Granite Monuments Maintain Memories

*"Thou turnest man to destruction * * * They are like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."*

How these words have been impressed upon us. There are some losses we will never forget; some memories we will always cherish.

Visits to the cemeteries where graves are marked reveal that many of the markers and monuments are also of few days, some discolored, others cracking and crumbling, as the ravages of time take their toll.

What a consolation to know that Mother's monument has been cut from a more lasting stone—genuine Winnsboro Granite. How the very rock itself brings back the tender memories of her. One can almost see a vision of childhood days in the stone itself.

OF ALL THE GRAY GRANITES,

Winnsboro Granite

stands preeminently the most lasting, the most beautiful and inscriptions on it most legible.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty, because they contain more deleterious elements, such as water, lime and iron. These elements tend to disintergration and discoloration.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treas., and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: For the past two weeks I have missed the opportunity of writing to you because of our busy times before and during our Assembly. You who had the pleasure of being present know how very busy we were. To you who were not present, I can only say that I am sorry that you didn't have the fortune of enjoying such wonderful fellowship as was ours for eight days.

Of course, I cannot give a very detailed report of everything that took place. I'll leave that job to the Leaguers who returned home to give to the local chapters what they received at Assembly. I think it would be so fine if some of those Leaguers would send to the Advocate tstimonies of what the Assembly did mean to them. How about it, Leaguers?

We opened our tenth annual Assembly at Manafield College on the morning of the 12th, with Rev. James B. Grambling, Dean of the Assembly. We feel that we are greatly indebted to the faculty, chaperones, executive officers, district secretaries, the Mansfield Chamber of Commerce, Shreveport Police Jury, the citizens of Mansfield, Mrs. Sharp, the dining hall matron, and to every Leaguer present for their contribntion toward the success of the best Assembly we have ever had.

The Morning Watch services, conducted by Miss Anna Pharr Turner, were always an inspiration to the young people. Her theme, "Get Right With God," was beautifully developed each morning.

After breakfast classes were conducted in Bible, Missions, a Recreational period and Departmental Methods. The business meeting closed the morning sessions, and the Leaguers were always ready for dinner, but they were never too busy eating to sing, yell, and cheer for their fellow-Leaguers. Each meal was made more pleasant by a "Stunt" presented at the close of the hour by one of the districts. The Ruston District was given the honor of having presented the best stunt.

Immediately after dinner a class in Epworth League Administration was attended, after which the entire assemblage welcomed quiet-hour. The afternoons were spent in various forms of entertainment. On Wednesday afternoon the Leaguers surprised Mr. and Mrs. Grambling with a lovely set of china in recognition of their ten years of untiring service to the Leaguers of Louisiana, and also their tenth wedding anniversary. This was only a small way of showing their love and esteem and wishing them many decades of happiness together and of further associations with the Leaguers who so dearly love them.

On Thursday afternoon the Leaguers were invited to see the Epworth League parlor that had been arranged with very attractive furniture, curtains, rugs and lights, which they agreed to buy as Leagues, Unions, districts or individuals and thus present to the college in the name of the Epworth Leagues of Louisiana. Mr. T. L. James, of Ruston, paid for a handsome bookcase, and Mr. Earl Reid purchased the curtains in the name of Julia Reid. Am sorry that I cannot mention each gift separately. The walls of the League room will contain pictures of each Assembly and of the State officers as they serve the State.

On Friday afternoon the Leaguers had the pleasure of making a motorcade to Shreveport. The trip was made possible by the splendid co-operation of the Mansfield Chamber of Commerce and the Police Jury of Shreveport. After visiting the places of interest in Shreveport, the young people were entertained with refreshments by the Leaguers of the Park Avenue Church in Shreveport.

On Sunday afternoon the Colored Jubilee Chorus of Shreveport entertained the Assembly delegates with a most attractive program in the Epworth League auditorium.

Supper was served at 5:30, and the Vesper services, which are said by many to be the sweetest part of the day, were conducted on the lawn, just at sunset, by the Epworth Leaguers. It was at this service that every Leaguer welcomed the opportunity to tell of his or her love for Christ. It would make the hearts of the older people of our church glad if they could have witnessed the testimonies of these young people. Their prayers and testimonies were inspiring to both Leaguers and leaders.

One of the most enjoyed fatures of the Assembly was the platform hour, when Rev. A. M. Serex led the song service, Mrs. Serex favored us with special vocal numbers, and Dr. F. L. Wells brought us his wonderful messages, telling us how we might take America for Christ. On the last night every Leaguer present expressed a desire for fuller consecration to his service, and twenty-two young people volunteered for full-time definite Christian service. There were twenty-eight former volunteers present, which made a total of fifty life-service volunteers. Rev. Guy M. Hicks was elected as the new Life-service superintendent, to succeed Dr. M. F. Wilson, who has held the office for several years.

After a fellowship period on the campus, prayer meeting groups were held with prayer-group leaders. At the close of the service the Leaguers marched to their rooms singing their Assembly song, "Into My Heart." The bugle taps sounded at 10:15, after which all was lost in slumber.

On Saturday night the Leaguers attended the Oratorical Contest to determine the State winner. There were five contestants, but one of the contestants, Miss Irene Shields, of Minden, could not enter because of sickness. Those who entered were: Miss Mary Matthews, Shreveport; Miss Octavia Rickey, Alexandria; Miss Julia McGowan, New Orleans; and Mr. W. L. McDuff, Monroe. The judges announced that Miss Julia McGowan was the winner. Miss McGowan will be sent to Mount Sequoyah by the State, where she will contest for the Western elimination. We feel sure that Julia will carry all the honors as her oration is splendid in construction and presentation.

On Tuesday, the 19th, a banquet was served as the "final number." The credits and diplomas were then issued by Mr. Grambling. There were 206 registered for the Assembly. Of this number, 187 received credits for work. Fifteen Christian Culture Certificates were given to Leaguers having completed six credits. Nine Christian Culture Certificates were given to Leaguers that had completed their six credits during the past year. Miss Anna Pharr Turner, of Shreveport, received the highest honor that can be conferred in Leaguedom—an Institute Expert Diploma, which represented eighteen institnte and Assembly credits passed on by a strict examination from Central Office. Miss Turner is the only Leaguer in Louisiana who holds this honor.

OLD FOLKS SAY
WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Sunday, June 24, was the first time for me to see the Alexandria Sunday school in session in their new Educational Building. During the lesson period I had a satisfactory conference with the pastor and superintendent concerning their fall Standard Training School, which is dated for Sept. 2-7.

The third session of the Natchitoches Standard Training School opened Sunday, June 24, at 7:30 p. m. Prof. C. F. Myers, of the State Normal, was Educational Director in this school. He and Prof. Maddox took the course on "Program of Christian Religion," taught by Dr. W. W. Drake. The other members of the faculty were: Miss Ruth Nuttal, Dr. Cleanth Brooks, and Prof. D. B. Raulins.

Monday noon, June 25, at the Y. M. C. A., I met with the pastors and superintendents in Shreveport in the intrest of their fall Standard Training School. They elected the District Secretray, Mr. R. H. Nelson, chairman of the Board of Managers, and Mr. W. A. McKennon, Educational Director. The date of the school is Oct. 7-12, at First Church.

While in Shreveport we enjoyed our stay at the district parsonage and accompanied the presiding elder Monday night to Harmon, La., where he was assisting the pastor, Rev. Alvin Smith, in a revival. Prospects were fine for a great meeting.

Tuesday morning, in company with the interesting young pastor at Bossier City, Rev. Don E. Dulaney, we visited Ida, where the presiding elder had called a "set-up" meeting in the interest of the North Caddo Standard Training School. The following pastors were present: Dr. Alonzo Early, Belcher; Rev. J. M. Alford, Vivian; Rev. C. W. Lahey, Oil City, and Rev. W. F. Roberts, Ida.

This group is calling a meeting of the leaders in each local Sunday school, at Belcher, Sunday afternoon, July 15, to decide on the training courses, etc.

At Ida we found a revival meeting in progress, under the leadership of Brother Dan Kelly. The entire group of preachers enjoyed his message on "The Power of the Gospel."

Tuesday afternoon, in company with Dr. W. W. Drake, we made the trip from Shreveport to Natchitoches.

Our office was honored Wednesday with a visit from Prof. D. B. Raulins, President of Mansfield College. Sunday school leaders will be pleased to know that Prof. Raulins has consented to get out a special Mansfield issue of the Sunday School Outlook.

Wednesday night we spent in De Ridder at a meeting in the interest of the De Ridder-Leesville Standard Training School. We had a pleasant visit at Leesville en route to De Ridder—found the pastor, Rev. A. H. Parker, and his leaders willing to cooperate in another great school. The leaders elected Mr. George Ferguson chairman of the Board of Managers, and Mr. W. C. Roaten, Educational Director. The presiding elder, Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., was with us and offered his services for a course on the Bible. The other tentative courses were: "Worship;" "Sunday School Organization or Junior Lesson Material," and "Religious Education of Young People."

While in De Ridder we attended the third quarterly conference, and from the report made by the pastor, Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, every cause and interest of the church is being looked after. We noted he reported forty-five additions to the church during the quarter. The Sunday school has an average attendance of 200. The Young People's Missionary Society reported an enrollment of seventy.

Enjoyed hospitality during my stay in De Ridder at the parsonage.

Rev. J. A. Alford, pastor at Rayville, writes: "Please send us a Sunday School Day Program. Mr. L. L. Greer is no longer our superintendent, and in his stead Dr. John C. Calhoun has been appointed."

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Any pastor would have a right to feel a little queer if one of his stewards should collect quarterage and forget to turn it in to the quarterly conference. Four of the servants of the Conference are wondering why we are forgotten and neglected by some of our fellow-workers. The "Golden Rule" is a very good rule to practice on both sides. We are very grateful to the men who have done something to help along with the work. Do not forget us when you pray; do not forget to lend a helping hand.

The school at Ripley comes to a close Friday. We have enrolled sixty-eight in the fine classes. The Methodists at Ripley have not forgotten the beautiful grace of hospitality. Their doors have been opened not only to the faculty, but to a goodly number of young people who live too far off to come and go every afternoon during the session of the school. What virtue do we mean shall take the place of hospitality? The truth is, we open our doors to such guests as we realiy desire to entertain. Rev. H. P. Lewis has advertised the schooi thoroughly in ali the territory near Ripley. His own people are supporting the school with enthusiasm, and seven of the churches adjacent to Ripley have done quite as well. From present indications we will issue almost as many credits as students enrolied.

Rev. W. R. Hammontree, who works in Monroe and Itawamba Counties; Mr. E. M. Sharp, who works in the big Corinth District, and Rev. Ray Grisham, worker at large, are taking courses in the Ripiey school. These young men are graduates of Millsaps College; they are not afraid of hard work, nor do they shrink from enduring hardships. They are heiping the pastors make surveys, organizing Sunday schools so they can do better work, teaching Cokesbury training schools, spreading the gospel of joy and doing with their might whatever their hands find to do. If any one desires to know the value of the work these young men are doing, ask the presiding eiders under whom they are working. Shall the Sunday School Board use these young men in this work another year? The men who put on the missionary program and observe Sunday Schooi Day are answering the question in the affirmative.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Mr. John R. Pepper, of Memphis, has just sent a copy of a little booklet he wrote several years ago, "Thirty years at the Superintendent's Desk." This little volume has many good suggestions and any one of our superintendents who wishes to read it, we will be pleased to make it possible for you to get the book as a loan at ieast.

The first session of the Seashore Pastors' School is history. This was a small school, issuing 17 credits; but the spirit of the school was excellent and the brethren who took the work are loud in their praises.

Dr. Winfield, president of Whitworth College made a fine impression and endeared himself greatly to the brethren. We received him into full feliowship with all the rights and privileges of a contributing member. I pray God's blessings upon him and ask for him from you a prayer for his good success with our school.

Dr. Jerdine, the pastor of Macon, and for 25 years a missionary to Korea, gave us a fresh view of the conditions and work in the mission fields that made us wish that it were possible for all our official members to hear these iectures and read the book.

Dr. Henry, who was the pastor of Galloway Memorial and First Church, Brookhaven, and now at Emory, made a fine impression, both for the courses of study and for Emory University and for the future of the church.

Dr. R. E. Smith, of Shreveport and Centenary College, delighted his large and appreciative audiences, for it became that, because there were so many who came and went who were delighted to hear him.

We would be pleased to have our same faculty back again and sit under their instruction.

The public lectures of the Divinity School were delivered by Dr. Keyser and Dr. Faulkner, while Brother J. T. Leggett presided in a most kindly and brotherly manner. The brethren heard the lectures with profit and were strengthened in their faith and lives. The weather was ideal and everything moved for a fine fellowship.

Now for the summer pull for the Sunday schools.

Don't allow anything to prevent your school's meeting and carrying on its work. There will be many occasions to dismiss and go some other place, but hold your school together and God will bless you and each member.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

REV. W. E. DICKENS.

No, I am not writing Brother Dickens' obituary; but I was in a meeting recently with Rev. B. W. Ware at Daleville, where Brother Dickens lives, and I just feel like sending these lines to the Advocate about him. In a very true sense our superannuates (some of them, at least), are "forgotten" men.

Brother Dickens got the lumber and his children have built him and his faithful wife a beautiful little dwelling right near the parsonage at Daleville. And they are so thankful for this little "nest" they can call home! But both of them were far from being strong and well while I was there. His wife was in bed part of the meeting—had been in bed a week or more—and he was just up from several weeks of being indoors in bed. He was just able to drive some in the Ford for the mail and milk. How they did seem to appreciate my visit! And the Lord blessed real good and felt so near as we knelt to pray. Brother Dickens said very likely when he left this little home he'd be carried to the cemetery. Oh, how both of them need our prayers and sympathy! Not for their souls—their souls are mounting up as the wings of eagles! But they are human, they remember the days of health, vigor, and joyful work for the Lord, and when they were mixing and mingling with their friends and parishioners; but now they are cut off from practically all this. The people of Daleville love them and keep them in mind, but how lonesome they must get! A married daughter was with them temporarily, and also a little grandson, but when they get better and stronger they are going to have to go to their homes, and then they'll be to themselves again.

My brethren and sisters of the ministry especially, don't entirely forget them—pray for them, send them a line occasionally, and a little material lift would come in so handy!

I write these lines purely because of my love for them and because I want to make their path a little brighter, and it's entirely without their knowledge. God bless them both!

Finding the yoke easy,

J. A. WELLS.

FROM OXFORD, MISS.

Dear Advocate: Oxford Methodists are holding their own with other progressive movements here. Our pastor, Brother S. H. Caffey, is away in the interest of the new church building. We have had visions for a long time of a building adequate to the growth of the town and university.

We had Dr. Countiss, of Grenada, with us last Sunday, and he gave us a fine and thought-provoking sermon from the text, "What Think Ye of Christ?" A full house from all denominations greeted him and honored the message with marked attention.

Brother and Mrs. Caffey are doing a good work here, and are loved by their people and the community at large.

Bishop Moore's sermon at University commencement was a masterpiece. Subject of text, "If the truth shall make you free, ye will be free indeed." He stressed the importance of knowledge and obedience to God's Book—that enlightenment comes with careful, prayerful study and devotion to service.

Blessings on the dear Advocate. It is a wonderful influence in the home. I would that every home could have its weekly visits.

Camp meeting at the Oxford Camp Ground convenes as usual the first Sunday in August, at which time, I believe, Brother L. P. Wasson will be at the gospel helm.

This good month of June must be a Baptist month, as we are almost submerged with rain, and crops in this section are all but lost in grass and weeds. Farmer folk are very much discouraged and depressed over the situation. However, the things we can control are the things that should bother us most. If we are yoked up with God and living in obedience to him, it matters little about the weather. When our new church materializes come to see us.

MRS. A. F. CALLAWAY.

THE WESTERN METHODIST ASSEMBLY, MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

July 22-29 a great camp meeting is to be held on Mount Sequoyah. Dr. W. A. Shelton, of Emory University, will speak every morning and evening. Evangelist Luther B. Bridgers, Gainsville, Ga., will preach each afternoon at 3 o'clock. There will be a devotional service each morning at 9 by other leading ministers. There will also be an Evangelistic Conference here at this time for all our evangelists and evangelistic singers. Efforts are being put forth to make this meeting a great success, and we want as many of our people present as possible. Please write and make your reservations early, because at this time, a week before, every room is engaged for the big "Leadership School," beginning July 5. Send reservations to Rev. S. M. Yancy.

Here's Speedy Relief For Tender, Aching, Swollen Feet

Moone's Emerald Oil Must Give Complete Satisfaction
Or Money Cheerfully Refunded

Your feet may be so swollen and inflamed that you think you can't go another step. Your shoes may feel as if they are cutting right into the flesh. You feel sick all over with the pain and torture; you'd give anything to get relief.

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the swelling reduces. And as for Soft Corns and Callouses a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off.

No matter how discouraged you have been with powders, foot baths or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn.

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins.

Every good druggist guarantees Moone's Emerald Oil to end your foot troubles or money back.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

There are many other attractive features of the Assembly that I would like to tell about, but I am just wondering if Brother Carley is going to let all of this letter get by the press without cutting it in two. I'll just have to continue my news in my next letter. By the way, you might like to know that I am to serve you as your Field Secretary for another year. May I ask for your earnest co-operation and prayers that 1928-29 may be the biggest year the Leaguers of Louisiana have yet known? I am proud of the honor of serving you, but I must have your constant support if we are to succeed for our Master. In my next letter I will name all of the new officers for the coming year in order that you may know to whom you are entrusting the work of the Leagues of Louisiana.

Yours for a greater year in his service,

ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

ZONE MEETING.

Zone No. 3 had their regular quarterly meeting at Mangham, La., in the school auditorium on Sunday afternoon, June 24. A short business session was held. In answer to roll call all places in zone were represented but two.

Mrs. F. B. Hatch, district secretary, brought echoes of the Council meeting held recently in Nashville. She described beautiful Belle Bennett College, reminding us that it is not only a memorial to Miss Bennett but every Southern Methodist woman. She stressed the study of the new Mission study books and asked that the adult auxiliaries get busy and organize the young people and baby divisions.

Only two baby divisions in the Monroe District!

Law enforcement was urged, each auxiliary was asked to send a telegram to the Louisiana delegation at Houston to vote for no candidate not in favor of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Four little girls from Buckner Junior Missionary Society sang "Spelling Love,"

"America's Obligation," a pageant depicting the responsibility of Christian America to give the gospel to all men everywhere, was very impressively given by members of the three churches of the Mangham charge. Men, women and chiidren, dressed in appropriate costumes, representing all organized work and workers of Home and Foreign fields, presented an appealing picture to America, church and missions—"that if America is to remain the Christian nation that the United States Supreme Court has declared her to be, she must take the lead in propagating a potent church."

"Noblesse Oblige." Rev. Mr. Faulk, pastor of Mangham chrage, took the leading part, that of chronicler. Rev. Mr. Holt, of Mangham Baptist church, and Dr. Smith of Alexandria, who is holding a Baptist revival, gave gracious assistance. Special music was given by Mangham Junior and Senior Orchestra.

The choirs of Mangham Methodist and Baptist churches gave the appropriate songs which so fittingly depicted the spirit of the pageant. Special numbers were given by Mrs. T. A. Judd and Mr. Cannon.

Refreshments were served to an appreciative audience.

A TONIC

GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC restores Energy and Vitality by Purifying and Enriching the Blood. When you feel its strengthening, invigorating effect, see how it brings color to the cheeks and how it improves the appetite, you will then appreciate its true tonic value. 60c.

Liver Pills

A package of Grove's Liver Pills is enclosed with every bottle of GROVE'S TASTELESS CHILL TONIC for those who wish to take a Laxative in connection with the Tonic.

The Holy Communion

THERE is no time in the Christian's life when he comes into closer and more intimate relationship with the Divine than when he sits at the Lord's table. Why not approach its celebration with unalloyed joy; discarding all fears; thinking only of the wonderful privilege?

"The Sanitary" INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION Cups

It is now generally recognized that the Sanitary individual cup increases the attendance because it removes all fear of uncleanliness, and promotes a deeper reverence in the communicant. The Sanitary Communion Outfit Company offers an improved and satisfactory outfit throughout, including the highly polished beautiful mahogany tray here shown, which eliminates all noise, is lighter and more easily handled than others and is more in keeping with the furniture of the church than a tray of any other material.

Make your communion service all that it should be; send for free booklet and catalogue (with quotations).

FROM THE DELTA CIRCUIT.

The Delta circuit is the youngest charge in the Conference, yet we have all reasons to be thankful. The several preaching points are well established, services well attended, the spiritual state of the people is good.

The church at Port Eads is doing splendidly; a collection of $5 for our orphanage at Ruston, and another of equal amount for the superannuated cause has been made, and many of the folks are securing Bibles, which we use at the Bible study hour before every service.

At Burrwood, we have the largest attendance; yet this work is not yet organized. Here many New Testaments have been distributed and the interest is good. I promised to give any child who would attain the highest percentage in his class in the public school a Testament, and a Bible to the one who would graduate with the highest honor; a girl and a boy worked so hard that it was impossible to decide who the winner was. The boy is Catholic, the girl a Methodist; she waived her claim in favor of the boy, but I want to give her a Bible; will some one send me a Bible for this girl?

Pilot Town, Pointe-a-la-Hache and Laing are doing fine. At Pointe-a-la-Hache we have an organization now, and we are doing fine.

Traveling down the river is rough at times; mosquitoes are very healthy and powerful in this section; in my trip, aside of my Bible, I carry a sqnirt gun with some Flit, and I try to meet conditions the best way possible.

The reader will please pray for this work.

Yours sincerely,

LEON PICONE,

There's peace in the household guarded by Castoria. Peaceful sleep for Baby. Uninterrupted rest for Mother. For a few drops of pure Castoria will quiet any fretful infant. Or put the little one to sleep when there's an upset during the night.

Parents, don't try to do without good old Castoria! It isn't fair to the baby, and it makes things hard for you. You can't give Baby medicine meant for grown-ups—or shouldn't! Castoria is the solution. It is always safe. It always does the work. And although it acts as swiftly as an opiate or a narcotic, it contains neither. Castoria is purely vegetable. Give it whenever there's constipation, colic, diarrhea.

No less than five million modern mothers have come to depend on Castoria, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Get yours today; don't wait for some night when it's needed, and the drugstore is closed!

ZONE MEETING AT CROWDER, MISS.

The fifteenth meeting of the first zone of Greenwood District Woman's Missionary Societies convened in the Crowder Methodist church Tuesday, June 26.

Meeting opened by all singing zone hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers;" invocation by the Rev. Mr. Guinn, of Marks; devotional led by zone chairman, Mrs. C. G. Jones.

The Marks Society presented a beautiful pageant of a historical nature, depicting the earnest, untiring efforts of a few consecrated Christian women in perfecting the first organization of a Conference Missionary Society in Nashville over fifty years ago, taking for their first missionary project Mrs. Lambuth's mission school in Shanghai, China.

The pageant was presented in a very commendable manner, calling forth much praise and admiration from all present.

Another enjoyable feature of the program was the rendition of several musical numbers by Mrs. Gordon Cooper, of Lambert.

Following dismissal by the Rev. M. E. Scott, of Lambert, refreshments were served by the hostess society.

Next meeting will be held in Lambert, with Crowder Society furnishing the program.

MRS. TOM RICHARDSON,
Zone Secretary.

MOUNT SEQUOYAH.

By Dr. Burke Culpepper.

Every dam has to have a spillway; every engine a pop valve; every automobile an exhaust; every organized school a playground; for the world has learned that man has a social as well as an intellectual and spiritual nature. Man has to have some outlet—some avenue through which he can best lubricate his brain, build up tissue, regain control of spent energy and rebuild nerve centers.

For several years the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has endeavored to help ministers, laymen, and workers in general in buiiding up this energy, nerve force, and spiritual power. In an effort to do this the church, through wise counsel and forethought, has beautified Mount Sequoyah, overlooking Fayetteville, Ark., one of the most picturesque little cities in the far-famed Ozarks, whose sky line challenges Alpine beauty and grandeur.

Each year programs have been put on, and on these programs some of the most spiritual and intellectual men and women in the church have had a part. There have been spiritual, recreational, and social features connected with this great assembly that have been second to none. The best talent possible has been secured, and to-day Mount Sequoyah is known far and near as a place where one may go and receive inspiration that few places can give.

This year, under the capable leadership of Rev. Sam M. Yancy, Mount Sequoyah offers more than ever in the history of its organization. Almost every phase of church work and church activities will have a place on the program. This program is comprehensive and will be a spiritual feast to all who take advantage of it. Superintendent Yancy has spared neither time nor expense in getting the best talent, and a casual glance at the program will convince any one of the advantage to be gained by going to Mount Sequoyah for at least a part of their summer vacation.

Cool nights, comfortable cottages, good water, a splendid cafeteria, together with the best of mental diet, are some of the attractions there this year, made so by new additions of cottages and a desire on the part of the management to make this the best place in all Southern Methodism to spend a few weeks during the torrid months of June, July and August.

Write to Rev. Sam M. Yancy, superintendent, for a program of the activities and make reservations at once for yourself, family, and friends, and enjoy the spiritual feast that is prepared.

APPRECIATION OF SECULAR PRESS BUREAU.

The following resolutions, adopted at the Jubilee session of the Woman's Missionary Council at Nashville, refer to the Secular Press Bureau of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

"Whereas, the Associated Press has carried notices of the work of our church in its various activities throughout the past year, thus placing before the news-reading public the work of its various Boards and Commissions in an attractive, discriminating and dignified manner; and,

"Whereas, this splendid contribution to the religious life of our country has been largely due to the Secular Press Bureau through its representative, Mrs. Maud Turpin; therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Woman's Missionary Council commend this work of the Secular Press Bureau under its efficient manager, and express the conviction that the relation which the Board of Missions has established with the bureau is of great value and should be maintained."

Te hospital at Tunda Station in the Congo closed the year 1927 with a record of only three deaths, though over 800 patients passed through the hospital during the year and more than 5,600 treatments were given in the dispensary. The work could have been greater had there been more equipment and more supplies.

Very many chiefs of the Congo, having been impressed with the improvement in those villages where native evangelists have been stationed, have asked that evangelists be sent to their villages also. Some have even gone so far as to erect suitable church buildings, but they are now standing idle, as there are not enough missionaries to train a sufficient number of evangelists to answer the demand.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

A REVIVAL.

Revivals follow the law of indirectness. They do not come as the direct result of a movement mechanically organized to produce a revival, but as the indirect result of the faithful presentation of the gospel of salvation to a sinful and needy world. Revivals do not spring out of corporate consciousness of need, but out of an acute personal consciousness of need. A revival may spread, but men and women are converted individually. It is as impossible to set the place and time of a real revival as it is to set the time and place of a shower of rain. The showers will come; and sometimes the showers will continue and grow into a great deluge, swelling the streams into great torrents that sweep away all in their path. So sometimes showers of grace will grow into great outpourings of grace, and thousands will be brought into the kingdom of God.

So far as we recall, none of the great revivals of history has been expected and arranged for in advance. These revivals have begun—some of them, at least—in the most unexpected places and at most unexpected times. Thus it has been that in such revival periods men have always marveled at God's power and God's ways.

We do not mean to suggest, even remotely, that men should not do all in their power to bring about a revival; we are simply saying having a revival is not like building a railroad or digging a canal. It is not a mechanical process.

Multitudes will not be saved until and unless individuals are saved. Is it not likely, therefore, that we should direct our preaching for a season to the individual, rather than to the social mass? Society may realize its own sins and shortcomings without the individual's realizing his personal sins and his acute need of a Savior from sin. Perhaps it is possible for what begins as a social uplift movement to result in arousing the individual to a realization of his personal delinquency; we think it is more likely, however, that the sound conversion of individuals will result in great social betterment.

We remember that John the Baptist began his ministry by proclaiming, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand;" and we remember that Jesus likewise began his preaching with the text, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

There can be no great revival without great repentance. Sin must be got rid of before grace can rule in the heart. It may be that we need to shift the emphasis of our preaching back to the individual, and that we need to do more preaching about sin and repentance. We have never known a man to feel the agony of conviction of sin and pass through the experience of true repentance without experiencing the joy of forgiveness and the exaltation of a new life.

It is still true that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

VACATIONS.

We believe in vacations—and if we could, we would take one every year. Happy ought to be the man that can so arrange his work and provide for his responsibilities as to make it possible for him to take a vacation. Unless he can do that, he has no business with one.

The trouble about vacations is that many of us do not understand their real purpose. Too many people seem to think that a vacation is a time to squander energies that have been laid up through the year for just such a period of relaxation; as a matter of fact, a vacation is a provision whereby a man is enabled to recuperate the energies that have been expended during the year in the faithful performance of his duty.

The man that comes back from his vacation "worn to a frazzle" has lost more than he has gained.

PAYING DEBTS.

It is our privilege to come into rather close contact with laymen in various sections of the church. Perhaps we have a certain kind of advantage over some of our ministerial brethren in the fact that we sit in the pew a good deal, thus being on the receiving rather than the sending end of the service. We have learned a good deal in this position.

One thing we have learned is that the laymen have great respect for the ministry, being nearly always sympathetic in their attitude and ready to make allowances for the shortcomings of their pastors. We honor these laymen for their loyalty and devotion.

But we have discovered that one of the hardest things for a layman to overlook in his pastor—or any other preacher, for that matter—is his failure to pay his debts. They take, we think, a very reasonable and sensible view of the matter. They say that it is not right for a preacher, any more than any other man, to incur obligations beyond what he has a reasonable right to expect to be able to take care of with his income; but if he should find himself in debt to an embarrassing extent, he owes it to himself, to the church, and to his fellowmen to use the most rigid economy, even to the point of sacrifice, to enable him to meet his obligations. We have discovered that the laymen have the utmost respect for the preacher "whose word is as good as his bond," and that they have mighty little use for the one that calmly ignores his financial obligations and goes serenely on his way, leaving his creditors "the bag to hold."

The only other thing we know of that forfeits the respect of the laymen so quickly and completely for a preacher is gross immorality.

SOME SUMMER SUBSCRIPTIONS.

We hope the brethren will not forget that the summer is a good time to get subscriptions for the Advocate—good for two reasons: In the first place, it is a time when they have more general access to their people than at any other season, on account of good weather and good roads and on account of protracted meetings; and, in the second place, because it is a season when the paper itself is in great need of all the financial assistance it can receive. There is no "slack season" in the expenses of the Advocate—those expenses are like the brook that goes on forever. It costs just as much to print the paper in July as it does in December. But there is a "slack season" in receipts—and the summer is that season.

If it were possible to accumulate a surplus during the winter, the summer could be taken care of very well; but the winter receipts are not large enough to provide that surplus.

The club rate having expired, the subscription price of the Advocate is now $2 a year—the regular rate. We earnestly ask our pastors and others interested to do their best to secure some subscriptions during the summer. The people need the paper and the paper needs the money, and the paper is worth the subscription price.

"A friend in need is a friend indeed," and we shall be especially grateful for subscriptions received at this time.

FUNNY!

According to the daily press, the anti-gambling committee of the New Orleans Association of Commerce addressed a communication to Governor Long recently, asking him to use his authority and the resources of the State to close the gambling establishments that are said to be flourishing in the parishes adjoining New Orleans. At the same time the committee assured the Governor that it was studying the situation in the city itself and that it would do all in its power to suppress the gambling establishments in New Orleans.

Well and good, and we hope both city and neighboring parishes will "put the lid on" these places at once and keep it on forever. But it is a bit funny to us that the great race track gamble goes on unabated, even being approved at the recent hearing before the committee of the Legislature by prominent citizens of the city as a great business asset. We venture the guess, without knowing the facts, that as much gambling is done on the races during the season as in all the gambling joints of the city and adjoining parishes during the year. Why not get rid of the races?

ONLY A TRIFLE, BUT—!

As we sat at a table in a restaurant not long ago, our attention was attracted to a party of four at another table. Three of them we took to be husband, wife, and child, and the other we guessed to be the father of one of the parents. All were nicely dressed and bore all the outward marks of culture and refinement. They were more than ordinarily attractive in appearance. But as we looked, we saw the young woman take an extraordinarily big bite from the roll she was holding in her hand. We attached no moral value to the act—but the violation of a simple rule of etiquette started a train of thought. Trifles sometimes have a profound effect upon opinions.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

This country of ours is now in imminent danger from backsliders. We are saddened again and again, by the articles from some of the leading writers who apparently have lost their convictions as to the benefits and blessings that have come to us from the enactment of organic and legislative statutes against the selling of inoxtcating liquor. I have just read a contribution from a talented woman on what one might call the futility of prohibition. It is but a rehash of the same old arguments of liquor, or the saloon in some form, that have been palmed off on a patient, long-suffering public for years and years. Yet this lady confesses that she was formerly an earnest worker for prohibition. Now she has changed and assigns as reasons for her change frequent violations of the law. This kind of argumentation is so old and threadbare that moths would starve to death trying to feed on it. As our country is soon to have this question tested again in the nomination of presidential candidates, I wish to give a simple statement of some facts from observation and experience. I believe these teachers are persona grata in and out of the seats of knowledge and wisdom. In the old days—the good old days of the open saloon—I was accustomed, as a circuit rider, to journey through the country places no Saturday to meet my appointments at my country churches on the following Sabbath. In passing country stores these places would be crowded with Negroes, men and women, drinking, brawling, while the keepers, white men, served them freely with the vilest of liquors. These stores were common in almost any section of Louisiana.

I have walked through the streets of a river town by night, on my way to church, and seen white men dancing with Negro women in the blazing light of an open saloon.

I have seen white men shooting dice, craps, for the drinks over saloon counters with their Negro customers.

I have helped to pick up from the dust and mire of the road, leading citizens of our country towns, so drunken they were helpless, and helped to lug them home, bathe their sodden faces and put them to bed.

I have walked arm in arm with poor, drunken friends through city streets and steadied their meandering footsteps to save them from arrest by the police and possible imprisonment.

On a certain Christmas Day I walked through the main thoroughfare of a certain central Louisiana town. There were four or five saloons on this street. I must have seen and met at least sixty or seventy men. If any of these were sober, their conduct did not show it, for they were loud, hilarious, boisterous. Something has stopped all this open shame and disgrace. Blind tigers are better than open eyed, thirsting tigers; speakeasys are better than loud drunken, yelling and swearing. White mule may have a deadly kick, but does not have the dynamic power of the saloon to ruin homes and wreck the lives of women and children. Why any sensible American citizen who loves his country and its institutions wants such a hideous sore as the open saloon to be grafted on the body politic of our great commonwealth—well, he should move so far away from these prohibitionists that he might have all the liquor and license his thirst and inside inclination demand.

We have had lots of rain recently, but it was pure water, the kind the good Lord sends. May he deliver us from a cloudburst of beer, gin, and whiskey. Say Amen, brother, and vote right.

PATHWAYS TO POWER.

By Rev. James W. Sells.

"All things are yours." I Corinthians 3:21.

We are taught in our courses in sociology that there are two primal instincts of mankind, and that most of our actions are a result of these hereditary instincts and cannot be escaped. These two instincts are: Hunger, the demand for food and shelter, and self-perpetuation, or an animal instinct for sex-gratification. There is another instinct or an urge that is not listed with these by some of the psychologists, but should be, for it it is as important as these two. And that is, The Urge to be Great, or that desire, instinct or demand of the inner ego which insists upon our personalities' being recognized upon our worth realized, upon a place in the life of those around us in accordance with our worth and our ability. It is this urge to be great that causes the creative work of the world, that is responsible for the initiative shown by any individual and is the desire back of ambition.

It is well that we acknowledge the desire for power prevalent in the world to-day. This desire for power is the ultimate expression of the urge to be great. Greatness brings power, power brings greatness. Wealth is power, fame is power, goodness is power. A powerful life is that life lived to the fullest extent possible, developed in accordance with its own peculiar personality.

In our study of power in its relation to the life of the individual, the first consideration should be for the individual to make up his mind as to certain things. The most important of these is one's goal. What do you really want? What do you want to have, to be, or to do? Streeter in his book "Reality" says: "The essence of common sense is to know exactly what you want to achieve, to make sure that your object is to you worth the price which must be paid for it, to estimate accurately the assets you possess and how best to utilize them. It is not common sense at all to strive after things which other people value, but which you yourself do not, or to strive after things which you do desire, but without counting the probable cost, and being willing, if necessary, to pay it."

The first pathway to power, then, is Vision.

Jessie B. Rittenhouse describes the limitations we put on ourselves in the following poem:

"I bargained with Life for a penny,
And Life would pay no more,
However, I begged at evening
When I counted my scanty store.

"For life is a just employer;
He gives you what you ask,
But once you have set the wages,
Why, you must bear the task.

"I worked or a menial's hire,
Only to learn, dismayed,
That any wage I had asked of Life,
Life would have paid."

So I say there must first be the vision necessary to see what we want in life, to see what we might become, what we might do, to see what we might be.

This of course entails imagination. Nothing can be accomplished in the sense of creative accomplishment that is not a product of the imagination. The architect sits in his study, possibly with feet upon his desk, a pipe in his mouth and eyes closed, apparently asleep. But his imagination is at work and he is constructing a building. The outline is formed, then the curves, the peaks, the projections; finally it takes form and hastily he places a sketch of the imagined outline on paper. Then he fills in the details, working in the minor outlines and dimensions. Soon he begins to draw to scale, then to figure proportion and to place a complete picture of the building on paper. After this comes the cost, the kind of material to be used, and whether it be possible to construct such a type of building with the funds at hand. We term all this preceding work as the imaginative process. It is the same with the building of life. Cannot you imagine that your life should be just as creative as the imagination of the architect? Should you not have the ability to envison your life as a complete whole, a distinct outline of an abundant life? Yes, you should.

"We can do only what we think we can do, we can be only what we think we can be, we can have only what we think we can have."

Therefore think, imagine, dream of what you want, of what you can be, of what you can do. Do not merely envision your own life as a selfish entity. Dream in what manner you can make the greatest contribution to the growth of your own community, State and nation; think of the impact of one's life on the sum total life of the community; realize how one man can change the current life of a whole people. Read history and see how all crises of history are the result of some individual standing out against the stream of civilization, head and shoulders above the crowd, with the tumultuous torrent of circumstances against him until the tide is stemmed and life is different after him. Whether it be Savonarola, Wesley, Napoleon, Abraham, or Jesus, the test is the same. These men all envisoned the power of one life and placed that power into action.

Do not be content to drift through life, as worthless scum afloat, blown by the winds and tossed by the tide. Have a desire to be, to do, to have. it is easy to drift; it takes no trouble to drift, and it is popular to drift, but those who drift are the worthless ones. They have been beaten into insensibility and have not the desire necessary to make the effort.

The first pathway to power is vision, a calm secret vision in the quiet of your own soul, with a firm determination to see the vision accomplished.

The second pathway to power is courage.

And courage has for its opponent in life fear.

There is a devastating influence exerted by fear. It controls our lives, changes our lives, and keeps us from achieving our vision. James Harvey Robinson says: "It is fear that holds us back. And fear is begotten of ignorance and uncertainty. And these mutually re-enforce one another, for we fully try to condone our ignorance by our uncertainty, and our uncertainty by our ignorance."

To be fearless, banish fear. Whip it out completely. Refuse to think of the results of failure or defeat. Absolutely banish it from your thinking and never let fear get a place in your life. For fear, substitute courage, the courage necessary "to jump off the dock" if called for; the courage that will enable you to gamble your all on the outcome. If you win, you win big; if you lose, you lose big, and your abilities to start again are that much better, for you know you gave your best, and you were not to blame. You are not held back by half-hearted attempts at success, which are always made by those who knew to start with that they are whipped. Have the courage to fight and fight to a finish. The dictionary says that courage is "Calm and persistent bravery in the presence of moral as well as physical dangers." Some of the greatest instances of physical bravery are to be found in the history of the recent exploits of the air. Men have braved death in every horrible emergency imaginable to achieve their goal, to win fame, honor and a place in history for themselves. It is easy to exhibit physical courage; our desire for a fight, our animal heritage, our love of battle and rivalry breed physical courage. A higher type of courage is that of David Buick, creator of the famous Buick automobile. Buick founded his company, was well on the way to success when a nervous breakdown came and then financial ruin. After regaining his health he found his automobile company gone, everything lost and only a job as a day laborer in the machine shops ahead of him. Years afterward at the advanced age of 74 he states that he has never been whipped, that he has lost but never whipped. The victories may have gone to others, they may have gained wealth, but he has gained complete mastery over himself and to-day is happy in the life of the laborer that he is living. That is courage. That is true victory.

This life we live to-day is too soft. We are not trained to be hard and face life front foremost. Our fathers and mothers want to shield us from the hard things of life; they do not want us to have to labor and slave as they did. And just in proportion as they try to shield us, just in proportion do they harm us. We need the hardening of the Spartans to face life of to-day. Do not let them make a mollycoddle of you—get out and get in the fight. The best moral stimulus that I can give you is to get, read, re-read and digest Emerson's essay on Self-reliance.

The second pathway to power in this life to-day is Courage.

The third pathway to power is Faith.

First I would say faith in God, in his divine goodness, his wisdom, his desire for the best things in life for you and his care for you. Have faith in the kind of God that Jesus had faith in, a God that was "Sublimely sensible, absolutely reliable and wholly loving."

Then have faith in your fellow-man. Barton in his latest book relates the story of August Bender and his comeback. It seems that Bender was down and out, a drunken sot. A missionary came to the western town he was living and persuaded him to become the church clerk, because he could write with a neat hand. This faith the missionary had in him finally enabled him to regain his self-respect, and with his self-respect came a desire to put into practice a formula that he had discovered years before. This faith led him to correspond with experts in Germany and Chicago. They informed him that his product was valuable if it could be gotten from the ore, and he knew how this might be done. This faith in Bender that the missionary had led Bender into the paths of fortune for himself and family, self-respect for himself, and the respect of the community.

And have faith in yourself. It is said that when Philip II of Spain sent the Duke of Medina Sidona against Drake at the time when it looked as if England would be wiped out hy the Spanish Armada, the Duke requested that he not be sent. He claimed that he could not navigate, that he became seasick, that he had no experience in sea battles and that he knew he would fail. Phillip II tried to encourage him, sent a faithless leader at the head of the supposedly invincible Spanish Armada. Spain sent a man who was whipped before he started; England depended on Drake, and the result was, as you well know, that Drake and his faithful crew saved England from defeat.

It is absolutely necessary that you have faith in yourself, that you show this faith in the self-confident manner by which you control yourself. Attack any job with the firm belief that if it is possible for it to be done you will do your best toward doing it. Believe and you shall have. Have faith in yourself and you shall have, do and be.

Therefore we say that the third pathway to power is faith.

The fourth pathway to power is religion—not church membership, not denominational affiliation, not inherited beliefs, but real religion. Quoting from Streeter again: "For in exact proportion to its truth and our sincerity, religion is power." Conceive of God as Christ conceived him, make a genuine effort to trust him and to follow Christ, and experience shows that prayer, communion and meditation will prove to be the road to power. Salvation, that is, inspiration and deliverance in one, is within your grasp. Salvation, deliverance from the lower and inspiration to the higher, is indeed yours. Then if we make suffering an opportunity, if we make loss a stepping stone to gain, and find in failure retrieved and pain conquered—if we do these things, we will find that we have acquired the secret of power.

These then are the pathways to power: Vision, Courage, Faith and Religion.

The two ways offered to man are well expressed in Edward Rowland Sill's poem, "Opportunity:"

"This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream:—
There spread a cloud of dust along a plain;
And underneath the cloud, or in it, raged
A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
Shocked upon swords and shields. A Prince's banner
Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes.

"A craven hung along the battle's edge,
And thought, 'Had I a sword of keener steel—
That blue blade that the king's son bears—but this Blunt thing—' he snapt and flung it from his hand,
And lowering crept away and left the field.

"Then came the king's son, wounded, sore bestead,
And weaponless, and saw the broken sword,
Hilt buried in the dry and trodden sand,
And ran and snatched it, and with battle shout
Lifted afresh he hewed his enemy down,
And saved a great cause that heroic day."

Will you play the part of the coward, and throw away the opportunity that the king's son makes success of? Or will you play the part of a son of the king and make success of defeat through Vision, Courage, Faith and Religion find that Pathway to Power that will indeed make "All things yours?"

LETTER FROM REV. G. D. PARKER.

Sant' Anna do Livramento,
Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil, May 23, 1928.

My Dear Friends: I have just returned from a three weeks' absence from home, during which time I held three quarterly conferences, one district conference, attended three district conferences, conducted three Sunday school institutes, co-operated in two district Epworth League conferences and one Life-work conference, addressed the students in three of our boarding schools, preached to the prisoners in State penitentiary, addressed the Y. M. C. A. at Porto Alegre on Mother's Day, collaborated in the editing of the next number of the "Cruz de Malta," official organ of the Epworth League, and helped stage a pageant that I wrote for the Sunday school institutes.

This completes the round of Sunday school institutes in the South Brazil Conference, one having been held in each presiding elder's district. Our work practically covers this great State of Rio Grande do Sul, and the difficulties of travel, especially for the young women, make the district institutes more practical than the Conference institutes. The signal success of this recent experiment convinces us that the time has come for us to attack more seriously the problem of the preparation of Sunday school teachers. To accomplish this we will need a secretary that can give full time to this important work.

The Young People of Brazil.

I was impressed more than ever before in Brazil with the intelligent enthusiasm of our young people in all these student assemblies and noted that they are beginning to resemble student bodies in the United States of America. We are reaching a better class of young people, holding them longer, and appealing to older students, as we have not been able to do in the past.

Recently I held a series of services for the students in Union College, Uruguayana, making two addresses a day—in the forenoon to the advanced students and in the afternoon to the lower grades. Every student in the former group expressed publicly a desire to follow Christ.

Our five boarding schools in this Conference are filled to capacity and large numbers of students are turned away for lack of space. The principal of Collegio Americano, our school for girls at Porto Alegre, the State capital, told me that she had to refuse more than thirty boarders, and the principal of Porto Alegre College, our school for boys in the same city, stated that among others he had had to turn away the son of his Secretary of State for lack of room. In addition to the two schools mentioned above, our other boarding schools in the South Brazil Conference are Union College at Uruguayana, Institute Gymnasial at Passo Fundo, and Collegio Centenario at Santa Mahia, the latter being a school for girls.

There were forty-one choice young people, picked men and women, from our Leagues, Sunday schools and colleges, in attendance upon the Life-work Conference held in Santa Maria during the month of May, and I have never seen a more earnest body of students. From such groups must be enlisted our recruits if we are to win Brazil for Christ and build up a strong autonomous church.

During the past summer there were eight Daily Vacation Bible schools held in the South Brazil Conference, in which were matriculated 323 students and forty-six volunteer teachers employed.

Nearly all of our seventy Sunday schools in this Conference are organized into missionary societies and are raising money to help support a missionary in the Madeira Islands, from which has come a loud and long Macedonian call.

Cordially yours,

G. D. PARKER.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Price and the Gilbert Charge.

Gilbert and Boueff Prairie form a splendid charge of two half-stations. To this charge Brother J. C. Price was sent by the last session of the Annual Conference.

Brother Price is a systematic worker and has made a splendid impression on the Methodists of his charge. He is one of that large group of preachers in our Conference who go tirelessly and quietly about the work they have in hand, and who year after year hring high-grade reports to the Conference sessions. Last year from Mangham charge Brother Price carried up a full report, the first time in the history of the charge everything was paid in full. This year hids fair to see such report returned to Conference from Gilbert and Boueff Prairie.

The church at Gilbert, practicaiiy new, will be paid out either late this year or eariy next year. it is a hasement church and in that low country has been giving trouble in the way of seepage. The Board of Church Extension made a donation recently, and this very great defect in construction may now happily be overcome.

This charge will grow with the passing years. There are few more splendid farming sections in the South than surrounding these churches, and with the surfaced road now under construction out to the Boueff Prairie country, we may expect large gains in our interests there.

ELMER C. GUNN, Presiding Elder.

CHRIST'S ALONE.

"'Who answers Christ's insistent call
Must give himself, his life, his all,
Without one backward look;
Who sets his hand upon the plow
And glances back with anxious brow
His calling hath mistook.
Christ claims him, wholly for his own—
He must be Christ's, and Christ's alone.'"

—John Ozenham.

TWO ITEMS OF GOOD NEWS FROM FIRST CHURCH, BATON ROUGE.

On July 2 the First Church, Baton Rouge, paid $40,000 in cash on its church debt. Thirty-five thousand dollars of this amount was used to retire bonds which would be due in 1929, 1930 and 1931. The other $5,000 was used to pay interest and to cancel some smaller obligations which had been assumed by the church debt committee. This means that the bonded indebtedness has been reduced to $70,000 on property valued at $300,000.

The other item of good news is that we have engaged the services of Mr. Charles H. McEuen as Secetary of Young People's Work, with special reference to students at the university and as director of music. Mr. McEuen has been holding a similar position for several years in the University Church at Austin, Tex. He will bring to the program of First Church valuable experience in a field of service in which he has been eminently successful.

We feel that the Methodists of the Louisiana Conference will be especially interested in the following facts: During the past five years the congregation of First Church paid into the building fund $130,000, this includes a few contributions from friends of the church who reside in Baton Rouge. During the past ten years, according to the statistics in the Annuals of 1918 to 1927, the congregation contributed to benevolences, including the Centenary and Christian Education and the annual benevolences of the budget, $80,133.

There is great rejoicing in the congregation. We will be able to give them a "breathing spell" for several years before putting on another campaign for the church debt. They deserve this "breathing spell" because they have done splendidly under a heavy burden of obligations, as has been given in the figures above. We are thankful to God for the tokens of his guidance, and we face the future with radiant hope.

FRANK L. WELLS, Pastor.

"THE LOST CHORD OF METHODISM" AND REVIVALS.

By Rev. Howard G. Roberts.

My Dear Brethren: Several years ago I became very much interested in revivals. My brethren were using me all the time that I could afford to be away from my charge, until a dreadful state of insomnia—nothing else—forced me to forego all such efforts. But I am thankful to say that I have won the fight, and am now able, ready, and anxious to resume such work. I am sleeping like a laboring man—haven't had a break since the fall of 1924. I shall be glad to assist my brethren anywhere.

I think that I have found the secret to successful revivals. The secret is clearly set forth in the writings of Mr. Wesley and the early Methodists, as well as in the Scripture. In tracing up this secret I dipped into some fifty different books, making a stack five and one-half feet high, from which I gathered some valuable information, and many points that are practicable and usable today. I have during the past sixty days compiled many of these facts into a little booklet of twenty-nine pages for free distribution. My brother, Rev. Luther L. Roberts, had me have 1,000 copies printed at his expense. The title of the booklet is "The Lost Chord of Methodism and How to Reclaim It." It is a brief review of what Mr. Wesley termed "The grand depositum of Methodism;" "the purpose for which God has raised us up." It is a supplementary revision of my former booklet written nine years ago during a siege of insomnia, and consequently not with a steady hand. But this one, I think, will bear investigation and stand the test.

It seems that the spiritual state of the church has ebbed and flowed from the time of Abraham. It has been no less true with Methodism since the founding of those first societies by Mr. Wesley. If I read history correctly, Methodism has been blessed with three or four great revival periods. We are now in the midst of our third or fourth general relapse or backslidden state. Our bishops and the General Conference have issued a call for us to engage in a special effort in behalf of another great revival period. History shows that whenever they get in dead earnest about the matter, the thing came off—something happened. Sinners by the multitude were converted, and believers were sanctified. I observe that every one of those great revival periods was brought about by reverting to the original doctrines and purpose of early Methodism. There are some among us to-day who ridicule the very idea of reverting to first principles, "the good old days;" they say in derision, "Times have changed." Fortunately, however, many of the laymen—educators, statesmen, editors, and business men are crying out for an old-time revival of religion. Thoughtful men on both sides the Atlantic have paid high tribute to those great revivals that spread over the world, first in Europe, then in America, both in the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers. I give the facts and the dates in my booklet which I offer from the pulpit after preaching on some phase of the subject. My first effort was in the form of Pentecostal services in my own church. It has gone into fifty of my homes in this way. I am anxious to load my Chevrolet down with these and other books and Bibles, and put them on display in churches and preach to my hearer's content for any of my brethren who might need my services.

If any of my readers desire a copy of my booklet, send a 3-cent stamp for postage.

Flora, Miss.

ON THE ROAD TO EMMAUS.

Chesterton somewhere says he has often had a fancy for writing a romance about an English yachtsman who slightly miscalculated his course and discovered England under the impression that it was a new island in the South Seas. "There will probably be a general idea that the man who landed (armed to the teeth and talking by signs) to plant the British flag on that barbaric temple which turned out to he the Pavilion at Brighton felt rather a fool. But," the writer goes on, "how enviable was his mistake!"—to discover all over again for himself what had been discovered long ago.

Rediscovery.

And what is true life but stage after stage of discovering all over again for ourselves the beauty and the wonder that lie behind familiar things, of seeing with new eyes the glamour of another spring-time, say, or the pathos and preciousness of human love, or that boon all undeserved that transfigures every other, the nearness of Jesus Christ in all the glory of his Resurrection?

"Their eyes were opened." So it is written of two wayfarers who journeyed to Emmaus in the gloaming of a spring day long ago, and it may be, if we join them for a little, the scales may fall from ours. We need no passport to their company, for who does not know how swiftly the doors of twilight open upon the unseen, nay more, who has never had a sore heart? Jesus of Nazareth was dead. "There's not a joy the world can give like that it takes away." The light of their life was quenched and out. They had loved, and they had lost.

Ah, if beside the dead
Slumbered the pain,
Ah, if the hearts that bled
Slept with the slain,
If the grief died—but no,
Death will not have it so.

Bewildered grief was crying out for even a glimmer of light on that appalling cross. How real was their dilemma! Either God was wrong or Jesus was wrong, and the bare idea of either was intolerable. "Cursed is he that hangeth on a tree," said the Word that was God's voice. Blessed beyond all hope of telling was every memory of their Master. Would the light ever break?

They are hammering at that enigma when there is a footfall in the dusk and a stranger asks them of their trouble. Dumbfounded, one of them can only say he must have lived in Jerusalem remote and aloof never to have heard of it—O irony! —he, the cynosure of all eyes, who had been at the very heart of the fire. "What things?" says he, harrowing only that he may heal, and how humanly they both break out, as though they must, of one who had come wielding triumphant powers, and kindling exalted hopes—how near had seemed the kingdom of their dreams!—and now the unbelievable, ghastly end two days ago—nothing left of him but women's tales. Tenderly he upbraids them for reading their Bibles wrong, for selecting only what pleased themselves, and lighting up and linking old, half forgotten words he reveals how all down the years blessedness had come through heartbreak and pain. The great truth, as he spoke on, went thrilling to their hearts that actually God was in all this. Jesus was taking the one inevitable road. The disgraced outcast was more than ever the beloved Son. And so, led on through amazement and relief and gratitude to new faith and expectation, it needed only—what was it?—a tone or a gesture as they sat at meat at the journey's end, and they knew him for their lost friend. Who could tell the gladness of that crowning hour?

O, glory of the lighted soul!
The dawn came up on Bradlaw Knoll,
The dawn with glittering on the grasses,
The dawn that passed, and never passes.

The Every Present Science.

Can we let another Eastertide slip by without seizing upon a truth so plain? At every single step of life there walks with us also through the feeble twilight of this world (and closer to us than the world our senses tell us of) one whose message of the Father alone makes sense of life, who, if there be but a lowly heart that looks to him, will pour in triumphant power and his own deep peace. How unspeakably blind we are!—staggering through a pitiful, unequal struggle with fear and care and pain and sin, and all the time here by our side the eager love of the Redeemer is holding out to us all "the powers of the world to come." "If you only knew," he said to the woman of Samaria. "If you only knew," he cried in tears to the city of his fathers. He says it to us all to-day, "if you only knew—I am alive or evermore for you. All power is with me, and I am with you always to the very end."

But he is depending upon us. No more than to those travelers of old does he say, when he joins us, who he is. Faith in this world will never become sight. He leaves it to every one of us to put him to the proof. Does it seem incredible that the poorest human being among us should be so royally befriended? He lavished his love that day on two unheard-of-men who were on the mere fringe of his following—one of them has no name. Whoever you are, though the teeming millions of the earth and the vastness of the universe seem to come between you and a Saviour's grace, cast yourself upon his love, believe that in spite of the poor past years he will never give you up, that each hour of your little day is his infinite concern —just live as if that were true and, centuries of believing men being witness, you will know what is meant by eternal life—the light perpetual, the rest eternal, and the joy that cannot be spoken. "O taste and see!"

We kneel how weak, we rise how full of power;
Why therefore should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong?—
That we should ever weak or breathless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy, and strength, and courage are with thee?

—The Rev. A. W. Burnet, in the Scots Observer.

A PRAYER FOR THE DAY.

By Edith Dunn Bolar.

I thank thes, God, at early morn
For all the day may bring of good;
For duties with the new day born.
Oh, let me llve the day as should
A child of thine.

And as I meet my feliow-man
In bustling shop or market piace,
May I rsflect as best I can
Soms measure of thy kindiy grace
And love dlvine.

And may those held by me most dear
Within the fastness of my heart,
At no time fsel that I appear
To mistrust thee, or walk apart,
Dear God, from thce.

Lord, when the tasks of day are done,
Let quiet cheer and peacefui rest
My portion be. May there be none
Of sinfulness to be confessed,
O God, to thee.

A MESSAGE OF REALITY.

By Staniey H. Mullen.

Yes, it was just a common bush that grew along ths way, but it disclosed a secret which most men have been unable to appreciate.

You remember that story of a shepherd who, while walking along with the sheep, was attracted by a bush. No doubt, he had looked at the bush many times before when it was just as beautiful as it was on that particular day. But never before had he really seen it. And how true that is of all of us! Ths eternal, in one form or another, is continually knocking at our minds and hearts, but most of the time we are not aware of it. Often he has to wait until some tragic event overtakes us before he can get our attention. I doubt not that such was the case with thls shepherd. His people were down in a foreign land and severely persecuted by a foreign ruler. A deliverer must arise to rescue them. From whence would he come? Who would he be?

Such was the burden that bore down upon him. He was shepherding sheep, but his interest was elsewhere. He was searching for some power that would assure him of deliverance for his people. Perhaps he was saying over and over: "Where is the Power that formed the rocks and gave beauty and strength to the forests? If there is such a Power, why is he asleep to the needs of his people? If there is such a Power, I must find him this morning."

With such questions in his mind and with a great burden for his people on his heart, he stopped in meditation before a bush. As he looked at ths bush, other questions may have arisen. "What Power made you? Who gave you color? Is that Power alive, and does it see all things? Would it make you, a mere bush, so beautiful and let my people suffer? Where are you? Ars you the same Power that sustains my being? Can't you come to the rescue of my people? Can't you raise up a leader for the task?"

While hs thought upon these things, hls eyes were opened, and he saw as he had never seen before. That bush, hitherto so common and meaningless, became alive with the presence of God. Ths more he looked at it the more meaningful it became. It was more than a mere bush; it was the living garment of the Eternal. Out of that visible garment came a voice that the ears of his soul could hear. it had a message for him. It said: "Moses, go down into Egypt and tell Pharoah to let my people go."

"But, God," replied Moses, "who am I that I should go? I am no orator, and I know not what to say. They will want to know who sent me, and what shall I say?"

"Teli them I sent you," answered the Voice.

"Yes, Lord, but that will not satisfy them. They will want to know who you are, then what will I say?"

"Tell them I am that I am," said the Voice. "You will not need further message. That which is, is self-evident to those whose eyes are open, and no proof is needed. Just be faithful in revealing Reality, and you will win. Pharoah may try to overcome you, but he can't win against Reality. It is a case of unreality versus Reality. That's all, Moses. Don't you see it? It's everywhere, Moses. The very ground under your feet is its habitation."

And that is the experience and the message that the world is hungry to hear. How different it is from some of our cheap, sensational, so-called evangelistic preaching. Is it any wonder that the Pharoahs of sin have kept God's children in bondago so long? We need leaders who have experienced Reality. Only messages of Reality can win in the fight against the Pharoahs of unreality. And such messages come only to those who experience the immanent and Christlike God.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

THE LOVE FEAST.

Some denominations even to-day are very jealous of their "closed" communions. The subject occasionally causes annoyance and is even spoken of disrespectfully. Our love feasts were "closed," but it might be said that they automatically closed themselves.

These occasions were truly the upper room—the transfigured mount. When the "local preachers' plan" reaveaied that a love feast was to take the place of the usual prayer meeting after the Sabbath evening preaching service, the congregation knew without announcement that those who remained at that meeting were those whose deeply spiritual experiences would meet upon a common ground, and as the wafer was partaken, and the glass of cold water was passed, and the devout prayers of those simple country folk were offered to the Heavenly Parent, the Spirit manifested himself in a wonderful manner. A searching quietness prevailed—a quietness almost resembling that in a meeting of "Friends," or Quakers; for rash utterance and ill-advised words were not indulged in at the love feast. This service differed from the Holy Communion in that these simple elements were distributed to those present while they remained in their pews. The dignified privilege of distribtion was made by the class leaders. And what a feast it was!

After the Holy Spirit's presence had been invoked, and the people had partaken of the emblems, the outflow of their hearts was given of their experience in living in the presence of God—of his daily leadings. These folks were human, very human; faults were theirs and failings, but they had a triumphant faith. Men there were who had drunk deeply of the draught of sin, but had been redeemed—reclaimed, with their feet placed upon the rock. Experience? Certainly! A rare one! And gladly they spoke of the power of the Cross!

Some were there whose faltering tongues refused to respond to the promptings of the Spirit within them, while others grew eloquent in their simple language, speaking of the leading of the Divine Hand in their lives. Enoch of old was not the only one who walked with God, for many of these saintly souls, whose hearts the Lord had touched, were not unfamiliar with the rare experience of holding close, sacred converse with him who declared, Lo, I am with you alway.

Hymn books were not used in this sacred service, but hymns, grand and glorious, came spontaneously from hearts and lips, as the responsive chord of a related "experience" was struck.

"And can it be that I should gain
An interest in the Saviour's blood?
Died he for me who caused his pain,
For me, who him to death pursued?
Amazing love! How can it be,
That O my God it found out me?"

The spirit of these meetings was carried by these people into their daily lives. It was no uncommon occurence to hear them greeting each other upon the street with passages of Scripture in place of the ordinary greeting, such as: "Brother Lukey, it is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation. . . ." And the response would be: "Of whom I am the chief—but, ah, his grace is sufficient."

These men, and women, too, were the salt of the earth. Perhaps these conditions are only a memory, but such memories have been productive of good which cannot be measured by human calculations. And this leads one to ask: Is the arm of the Lord shortened? Is there no balm in Gilead? Are modern conditions such that men do not desire the rare privilege of being in the secret of his presence? Or is it their preference to be associated with the material things of the world by which they would obtain satisfaction?

Does the Lord delight in the work of men's hands—skyscrapers, and giant air and ocean ships and the like? Yes, peradventure, he does:

"But saints are lovely in his sight,
He views his children with delight;
He sees their hopes, he knows their fears,
And looks and loves his image there."

WHERE IS GOD?

A noted infidel once met a plain countryman going to church. "Where are you going?" said the infidel. "To church, sir," said the countryman. "What are you going to do at church?" "Worship God." "Is your God a great or a little God?" "He is both, sir." "How can he be both?" asked the infidel. The countryman replied: "He is so great, sir, that the heaven of heavens cannot contain him, and so little that he can dwell in my heart." The infidel declared that this simple answer had more effect upon his mind than all the volumes the learned doctors had written against him.

Here is a secret all of us need to learn. How different it would be with us if in those bitter moments of sorrow, or temptation, we could only feel that God, the loving Father, is near us? If in times of trouble and affliction we love to have those near us who love us most, even if they can do no more than sympathize with us, how much more consoling it is to realize the presence of him who not only loves us with infinite love, but is also able to do for us far above all that we ask or even think.—Gordon H. Baker, in "Christ's Cure for the World."

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Oak Grove and Buck.

Oak Grove has had the new experience of full-time preaching this year, and Brother Buck has made a splendid record there. At the second quarterly conference held recently all current expense finances were reported up to date, the first time such has been the case in the history of the church thus far, and progress was noted along all lines.

Brother Buck has a way of getting his church to follow him in all his undertakings. He has a program for himself as pastor, and for every organization of his church. He gets behind this program and carries it through. The result, as may well be expected, is that he builds his church.

Oak Grove likes the "full-time" arrangement, as churches do when once they try it, and henceforth we may be confident that all movement of this charge will be forward. There are indications that next year will see a substantial increase in the budget, and that marked progress will be noted in every phase of church activity. We are praying and looking toward this end.

ELMER C. GUNN, Presiding Elder.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY—ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

At the following Conference, the Bishop moved me to Lafayette and Plaquemine Bruile circuit (Lafayette was then Vermillionville). Here we stayed two years. Here, on Feb. 26, 1877, was born our first son, Percy Erwin.

Conference that year was in Opelousas. I was appointed to Moorlngsport. We left Lafayette in the mornlng, reaching New Iberla too late for the boat, of course. We found a hotel. It happened to be a frlend of mine, Mr. Ollie Hilliard, that was keeping it. The pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, came to see us and to apologize for not entertaining us. This was Wednesday and we could not leave until midnight Sunday. We reached Berwick the next day and could not locate any of my baggage. Finally they found lt had all gone to New Orleans.

On we went again and arrived in New Orleans too late for the boat to Shreveport. None would leave tlll the middle of the week. So again we went to a hotel.

Finaliy the boat was ready and we went aboard. We shipped with a very nice and kind captain.

We were several days getting to Shreveport. En route, as we neared Alexandria and Coushatta, the coffee got very weak. I called the steward to me and asked if there were a great many lakes and ducks in that country. This was done in the presence of the waiters and they were all ears. The steward sald there were lots of both. I replied I thought so, as the coffee indlcated that a graln had been tled to a duck's foot and the water dipped up behind lt and served to us for coffee. It seemed the walters would almost spilt their sldes laughing, any they certainly guyed the steward. 1 received good coffee after that, all the way to Shreveport.

When we got to Shreveport it was very cold, with snow on the ground. I was out of money; what should I do? Twenty miles to my work and no way to get there. "Trust in the Lord and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land and verlly thou shalt be fed," had been my motto. I sought the preacher in charge, Brother Joel T. Daves. "I would like to take care of you and your family, Brother Davls, but my family are sick," he said. If preachers can't and will not sympathize with each other, who will? He took me to his office. Where were my hopes? Cold as blizzards and compelled to leave the boat, with no money to go to a hotel with my wife and two llttle chlldren. We reached the preacher's office and had not been there long before one of my maln stewards, Brother Moore, stepped into the office. "Well," says Brother Daves, "you're all right now, here is your steward, Brother Moore. This is your pastor and he needs help to get hls family to Mooringsport." "I will send a comfortable hack to the boat to get them right away," said Brother Moore. Some good friends provided us with warm wrapplngs and we were soon on our way.

On and on we went in the cold. The roads were terrlble, and about sundown we began to inqulre for a stopping place for the night. Calling at a gentleman's house we lnquired if we could stay all night. "No, we are golng to have a party here for the llttle folks and won't have room." I then asked how far it was to the Mooringsport work, and he repiled, "you are right in the middle of lt now." "Well," says I, "I have been appolnted pastor for this year and am tryling to get there." "Weli, you can't go any further to-night, Brother Davls." "Yes, I must try to get to the place you referred me to." "You are my pastor, and I and my wife will find a piace for you and entertain you as best we can. Get out, Slster Davis, give me one of the chlldren; how many have you? Two? Well, come in out of the cold." Oh, we were so glad. We stayed of course and spent a good time with them.

At the supper tabie when the children came in my wife said, "You ought to name those boys Tom, Dick and Harry." "That is exactly their names."

We spent two very pleasant years on this work, though during this time our littie boy Erwin died. This nearly killed me. Here also, on Oct. 14, 1879, our second daughter, Mary Leona, was born.

We went next to the North Bossier work for the years 1880-81-82. The parsonage was supposed to be at Benton, but had burned and we had to take a cabin out from the town on a blg red hiil overlooklng the Red River. Little Lonle died here and our oldest llvlng daughter, Gussie, was born on Dec. 10, 1881.

While on thls work my heaith failed. I suffered with dyspepsla, yellow jaundice, etc. Every one thought I would not live slx months. I would have to be carried to the church in a buggy and llfted into the pulpit and sit in a chair to preach. But I seldom missed an appointment, thanks to the kindness of the good brethren around me. Sufferlng excruciatlngly, I went to the blessed Lord and told him: "O Lord, if thou hast any more mlnisterlal work for me to do, let me get well, for I cannot serve thee as I should In this suffering body. If there is no more work for me to do, take me home to glory." I quit the medicine I was taking, passed the first day without much suffering, then the second and thlrd day without pain, so I shouted, "Glory to God."

Conference was held in New Orleans that year, so I took my family to papa's in Opelousas and let them stay until after Christmas. I sold my horse and buggy in order to go to this Conference.

While in Opelousas Gussie took whooping cough from papa, the third time papa had it. Her mother almost died when she was born, due to the carelessness of a drunken doctor. The old Negro nurse used snow and hot water bottles to save my wlfe's life.

I was next sent to the Many charge for 1883. This was a hard but happy year.

Next I spent the years 1884-86 on the Montgomery and Colfax work. I taught school, heid protracted meetings, and traveled considerably.

In 1884, on the first day of August, May was born, and on the 17th of December, 1885, Emma came to us, both born at Montgomery. 1 was getting quite a houseful of chiidren, but there was room for them all, bless their hearts.

We went next to the Coushatta charge, spending two years of hard work.

Shortly after we arrlved there I was sitting on the parsonage gallery when a pistol shot, followed In quick succession by another, rang out. I told my wife that meant no good, and sure enough two men had killed each other. I burled both of them in the town cemetery.

Brother Cassidy was my presiding elder and he was a widower. He told my wife if she would persuade her cousin, Ludie Day, who lived with us, to marry him he would see she got the best appointment in the Shreveport Dlstrlct. Of course she could not promise this. Ludie was one of the most beautiful and lovable women I ever knew. She was llke a daughter to us, and our chlldren lover her as a slster. She came to us an orphan, graduated at Mansfield while we lived at Coushatta, taught in the college and then married Rev. L. L. Picket at our house in December, 1888.

THE MAIN HIGHWAY.

By Ralph W. Sockman, D.D.

There is only one main thoroughfare to God the Father. There are varlous other trails Godward. Along those trails people in all ages have come near enough to discover something of the divine nature. Along those paths certain great strong souls have come near enough to get very noble conception of God. But along those roads no natlon has ever been able to move in a great social advance toward a kingdom of God. The travelers by those trails have never caught the full glory of God. It was not until Jesus of Nazareth came as "the way, the truth, and the life" that humanlty had a perfectly improved through road lnto the Divine Presence.

The acid test of the good highway is bad weather. A few weeks ago I was giving some addresses In a Kansas town. The plan for my departure was to drive me some slxteen miles to a junctlon of a trunk line rallroad. Between my town and that junctlon polnt was a fairly good looking clay road. The night before my leaving a heavy rain fell. The result was that I did not drive. The clay road was impassable. Good enough in fair weather; it was almost useless in foul weather. If that had been one of our modern improved automobile thoroughfares, rain and storm would not have stopped me. The superiority of the road Christ made between man and God is best seen in life's bad weather. When the storms of calamity come and the rains of trouble fall, the other Godward trails that men follow become very difficult. In such times it is most clearly seen that "No man cometh unto the Father," but by "the way, the truth, and the life" of Jesus Christ.

One form of bad soul weather that so often hinders the spiritual journey of those who are not using Christ's main road is irreligious moods. Some men allow non-religious moods to settle upon them. No normal man, I suppose, feels religious all the time. There are times when he feels quite the opposite. There may be whole weeks of low visisiblity when spiritual things seem very dim and unreal. It is treacherously easy to allow these non-religious moods to grow on oneself. A man does not go to church or pray to-day because he does not feel like it. To-morrow he will likely have a little less appetite for those things. So the taste disappears. And if religious progress is left to the feelings merely, most people soon come to a standstill. The highroads of Christ is not blocked by such moods. The traveler on his road gets through, for when a man's feelings no longer propel him Godward then he can keep going on Christ's road by using other parts of his nature. Jesus said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life."
—The Christian Advocate.

THE ONLY WORTHY AIM.

"Is it thy meat and drink 'to do the will of thy Father which is in heaven?' Is thine eye single in all things? Always fixed on him? Always looking unto Jesus? Dost thou point at him in whatsoever thou doest? In all thy labor, thy business, thy conversation? Aiming only at the glory of God in all—'Whatsoever thou doest, either in word or deed, doing it all in the name of the Lord Jesus; giving thanks unto God, even the Father through him?' "—John Wesley.

ONE SHORT HOUR WITH THEE.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak; we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong,
That we are overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with thee?

—Archbishop Trench.

HELP US FIND THE WAY.

Dear Father, there are so many things that I cannot understand, so many questions come into my mind that I cannot answer. Help me to find my way in the darkness. Give me the confidence in thee that a son should have in his father. Where I cannot see, give me faith and trust to go with thee. When doubts and difficulties trouble me, may I never prove false to the truth, to the pure life, to the right, to my conscience and to thee. So may my strength grow under the stress and struggle, so may I steadfastly and surely hold on to the things which cannot fail and to thee in the name of him who endureth all things for my sake. Amen.—Thomas C. Richards.

REDHEAD.

By Marion Richardson Heath.

"Redhead! gingerbread!"
Hear the voices calling.
Saucy taunt and merry gibe
On our ears are falling.
School is out and on the street
A noisy group is teasing.
And they think it's lots of sport
To use a name displeasing.

"Redhead! gingerbread!"
Don't you mind their guying!
They couldn't match your shining head
By bleaching or by dyeing.
Heads of brown are all about,
Black or tow or sandy—
All of these are well enough,
But copper heads are dandy.

"Redhead! gingerbread!"
Sure, you're proud to own it!
Just the shade you would have picked
If you could have known it.
Brown-eyed lad with freckled face,
Hold your head up proudly!
It's just because they envy you
That they shout so loudly.

POLLY SPEAKS.

Little Dorothy Adams and her parrot were the best of friends. And they were just as happy as they could be.

It happened that Dorothy's daddy was a shoe dealer. He sold lots of fine shoes to little children, and to big folk, too. And his small daughter, Dorothy, was very fond of shoes; especially new ones.

On this particular forenoon, Dorothy was reading an interesting book. But Polly didn't like books. She could not read, you know, and she wanted Dorothy to talk to her.

So, to attract Dorothy's attention, she began to talk as fast as any bird could possibly talk.

"Set the table, Dottie!" she called, but Dorothy went on reading. "Naugh-ty b-o-o-k! Daddy coming! Daddy bring—shoes! shoes!"

"No, daddy won't bring me any shoes to-day," Dorothy finally declared, as she stopped reading for a few seconds.

Polly was delighted, so she went on repeating all the things that her small mistress had taught her to say. She wished Dorothy would put up that book.

From where Polly sat near the wide window, she could see lots and lots of things. She often saw Dorothy at her play, and she almost always saw her when she returned from school. She could see a long way down the street. That is how it happened that she frequently saw Dorothy's daddy coming home to dinner. On such occasions, she would perk her head and call: "Daddy coming! Set the table, Dottie!"

This morning, Polly wanted to talk about shoes all the time, so she kept calling over and over again: "Daddy bring shoes!"

"Now, look here!" Dorothy exclaimed, shaking her finger at her pet. "I'm going to finish this book, Miss Polly, and you're going to keep quiet. Do you know what you are, Polly Parrot? You are a big chatterbox!"

Polly looked at Dorothy, and put her head over on one side. Then with just one eye she gazed at the little girl. Polly didn't know just what a chatterbox was, but she knew Dorothy called her by that name only when she wanted her to be quiet.

Polly kept still for a minute or two, but that was all. "Daddy bring shoes!" she said. Then, "Naughty Poll!"

Dorothy laughed. "You're a darling old Poll," she exclaimed, "but listen!"

Polly looked right at the small finger that Dorothy shook at her, and kept as quiet as a mouse.

"Now, Miss Polly, you must keep quiet. Don't you speak again, unless it's really necessary. Not a word, unless it's really and truly necessary."

"Dorothy," said mother as she looked into the room, "when you see daddy coming, set the table, won't you, dear?"

"Yes, Mother," Dorothy replied, as she moved her chair up close to the window.

Polly knew Dorothy very well, but she didn't speak. She just kept her eyes on the road, while Dorothy continued with her reading. But Polly was getting a bit anxious. It certainly took a long time to read that story. Suddenly, she saw a familiar figure coming up the street.

"Yes," said Polly to herself, "that's daddy! My! I must speak. I just cannot keep still another second."

So she turned her head, and looking at Dorothy called: "Set the table, Dottie! Daddy coming. Daddy bring shoes! Set the table!"

Dorothy looked up in amazement. Yes, sure enough! There was daddy coming, and she hadn't put a single thing on the table. She had forgotten all about it.

"You darling old Polly!" she exclaimed, as she hastily closed her book. "You remembered what I told you, didn't you? And Dottie forgot all about the table. You're a darling old Polly."

Polly was happy indeed. She perked her head once more. "Pretty Poll," she said. Naugh-ty bo-ok!"—Margaret B. Elms, in Zion's Herald.

THE KING OF MECHANICS.

Two professors at the American College at Samokov discovered recently the "king of mechanics."

They were returning from the earthquake zone by automobile when their engine broke down twenty miles from Sofia. They spent three hours in vain attempts to make repairs while daylight rapidly faded. They had reconciled themselves to sleeping in the fields overnight when another automobile approached.

"Can I help you?" the chauffeur of the second car said in Bulgarian as he drew up beside the stranded Americans.

"Yes, but we are afraid you cannot do much," they answered. "We have monkeyed with the engine for three hours without success."

Throwing aside his coat and hat, and rolling up his sleeves, the friendly young chauffeur, whom the Americans noticed had a strikingly studious and refined face, proceeded to raise the hood covering their engine and to examine the carburetor, magneto and spark plugs. Within ten minutes he had put his finger on the seat of the trouble.

"Try it now," said the Good Samaritan motorist, his face and hands smeared with grease. One of the Americans put his foot to the accelerator and the car started with a rush. In their flight one of the professors suddenly remembered. "We didn't give that poor fellow a cent for his trouble."

Ten miles further on the second car caught up with them and the Americans were amazed to see the whole countryside saluting and bowing in homage to the young man who had extricated them. They were stupefied later when they found that he was King Boris of Bulgaria.—New York Times.

THE SMILE THAT REACHED BOTH EARS.

Patsy was a little Irish boy with curly hair and big blue eyes and a smile which almost touched both ears. Patsy's mother took in washing, and his father—well, Patsy's father was drunk most of the time, and Patsy himself ran errands all day long for a man who lived on Twenty-third Street, and it was Patsy's smile that helped to give him his position. This is how it came about: The rent was due, and there was scarcely any money even for food, and Patsy's father kept on getting drunk. One day Patsy started out to look for work. Many days he walked the streets. His mother became sick, and the money was all gone. He worked harder than ever; but people only turned and smiled at him, and some of them laughed, he was so little. One day he picked up a newspaper a man had dropped and laboriously spelled out the words of the advertisement: "Wanted—a good, clean boy to run errands, carry packages, and for other odd jobs. 265 Twenty-third Street."

Mr. Kendrick looked in astonishment at the first boy who had come in answer to his advertisement. Patsy smiled, his teeth were clean, and not quite all his curls were rumpled.

"You're too small, my little man," explained Mr. Kendrick kindly but firmly. "See, this is the kind of packages I meant." And he pulled out one which Patsy was barely able to lift, and that was all.

"I could get some sort of a little wagon to wheel them in," he ventured.

Mr. Kendrick smiled. "I'm afraid you wouldn't do. You see, there are other things besides carrying the packages, which you could not do either. Have you had experience in anything?"

"No, sir," answered Patsy.

"I'm sorry," exclaimed Mr. Kendrick.

"All right, sir, I'll try another place," Patsy said with a bright smile, although he had had no dinner and very little breakfast. "Well, good day, sir."

There was something strangely fascinating about his curls, which needed cutting, and the little outgrown cap placed rakishly over one ear. Mr. Kendrick watched him out of the window, and suddenly Patsy turned and looked up at him and smiled in spite of the rain that was coming down in torrents and the knowledge that he would go supperless to bed that night.

That was too much for Mr. Kendrick. He motioned him to come back. "I was mistaken," he said. "I guess you're the boy I want after all."

If you should ever by chance or mischance happen into No. 265 Twenty-third Street and ask to see the head of the establishment, you would, to your great delight, be ushered into the presence of a pleasant-faced man with a winning smile which nearly reaches both his ears.—Exchange.

"TIME OUT."

Little Cohen: "Dad, we learned at school to-day that the animals have a new fur coat every winter."

Old Cohen: "Be quiet, your mother is in the next room."—Gemuetliche Soches, Leipzig.

"So you're a salesman, are you? What do you sell?"

"Salt."

"I am a salt seller, too."

"Shake."—Exchange.

Roscoe: "The only thing I admire about Gertie is her natatorial prowess."

Alicia: "You don't do her justice—she's a wonderful swimmer, too."—Judge.

"My wife explored my pockets last night."

"What did she get?"

"About the same as any other explorer—enough material for a lecture."—Judge.

"That fellow next door threw a stone through the window while I was playing a piece on the piano."

"Silly fellow! Now he will hear you all the plainer!"—Exchange.

Visitor: "Can you spell horse?"

Hostess' Little Girl: "I could if I wanted to, but what's the use of spellin' anything so out of style?"—Exchange.

Professor: "You look weary, my son."

Student: "Yes; opportunity has been knocking at my door so much that I can't sleep."—Arizona Kittykat.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mrs. C. A. Powell, Hattiesburg, Miss., has our thanks for a subscription recently received from her.

Rev. A. K. McLellan and Rev. J. H. Bowden will teach an approved Cokesbury Training School at Ethel, La., Sept. 16-22.

We are informed that the School for Pastors, scheduled for July 9-20 at Shreveport, has been cancelled.

Miss Elizabeth Langford, Field Secretary of the Epworth League work of Louisiana, has recently been ill, but is now recovering.

Rev. E. S. Lewis, Mrs. Lewis aud their daughter, Miss Virginia, recently visited in Greenville, Miss., where Brother Lewis was formerly pastor.

In sending in his renewal, Brother T. J. Matthews, of Extension, La., writes: "Hope to be able to read and take the paper for many more years.

Rev. J. G. Snelling, of New Orleans, Conference Missiouary Secretary, will do the preaching this year at the Oakland camp meeting. Rev. J. S. Rutledge is the pastor in that section.

Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, our pastor at De Ridder, La., has recently suffered a spell of sickness which kept him in bed for several days. He is now recovering.

Rev. Theodore Copeland, one of our general evangelists, is now engaged in a union revival in Elizabethton, Tenn. The interest is good and the outlook is bright.

The second Standard Training School for the Baton Rouge District will be held at Amite, La., Aug. 27-Sept. 1. Dean aud Mrs. R. E. Smith have heen engaged to teach in this school.

Brother W. C. Wafer, of Coushatta, La., in writing for some information concerning a large type Bible, states that he is 84 years of age and that he has been a reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate all his life. May the blessing of God be upon this good friend of the Advocate.

Dr. Mark Terrell, general evangelist of our church, has recently closed a good meeting at Avinger, Tex., which resulted in many accessions to the churches of the town. He will go from Avinger to Banks, Ark., for a community-wide revival.

Mrs. R. S. Colier would like her friends in Louisiana to know that she is now living with her daughter at 1134 West Theodore, Route B, Box 24-N., San Antonio, Tex. She writes that her health is very bad but that the Lord is her refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms.

Mr. W. A. McKennon is now completing his twentieth year as superintendent of the great Sunday school of our First Church at Shreveport, La. He is attending the World Sunday School Convention at Los Angeles, which began on yesterday.

Miss Eleanor Allen, student of Whitworth College, and a Life Service Volunteer, taught during the month of June in a Daily Vacation Bible School in Biloxi. She would be glad to secure some other church work to keep her employed throughout the summer. Her address is 248 Cedar Street, Biloxi, Miss.

In sending in the appreciated renewal of his Advocate, Brother John H. Green, of Barlow, Miss., speaks of the Advocate as "our good paper," and says that he thinks that all good Methodists should subscribe to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. We thank Brother Green for the renewal, also his kind words concerning the Advocate.

The Seashore Camp meeting will begin on the night of Aug. 2 and continue till the second Sunday in August. Rev. Luther Bridgers will do the preaching, Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, and neighboring pastors cooperating in the carrying on of the meeting. A cordial invitation is extended to all to attend this meeting on the old Camp Ground along the beautiful Mississippi coast.

The Eliza-Stephens-Remmel Hall, Mount Sequoyah, Ark., is now in process of building. The first floor, already completed, is being used for classroom. The second floor will be used as a woman's dormitory. The third floor will be used as a library and reading room this summer. The entire cost of the building will amount to $40,000, this amount being borne by the twelve contributing Conferences of the Western Division.

Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, New Orleans has lost one of its most valuable members and Sunday school workers in the tragic death of Perry Roehm. Brother Roehm, who was Athletic Director of the local Boys' High School, was attending a summer camp in North Carolina with a party of New Orleans boys. During a thunder storm he and others of his party sought shelter under a tree which was struck by lightning. Brother Roehm and three of the boys were killed. His remains were brought to New Orleans and interred.

Brother J. A. Wells writes as follows: "Wednesday night, July 18, Dr. J. M. Sullivan, Conference Lay Leader of the Mississippi Conference, is to address the Wesley Brotherhood at Bay Springs. The 'Ever Ready' ladies are to serve a luncheon preceding the address, and special music is expected at the banquet. The date has been changed from Thursday night, 19th, to the night of the 18th. Come, Methodist men, from each church on the charge, and from Louin, Dusau, Montrose, Rose Hill and other places, but notify J. B. Horn, Bay Springs, Miss., in time to get your 'name in the pot' if you intend coming."

The thirty-eighth annual Bluff Creek camp meeting, near Oaknolia, La., will begin on Friday night, Aug. 3, and continue through Sunday, Aug. 12. Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, will do the preaching, and Rev. A. M. Wynne will lead the singing. This camp ground is delightfully situated among the hills of East Feliciana Parish, a few miles east of Clinton, and is an admirable place to combine a religious uplift with healthful recreation. Further information may be had from Mr. O. E. Townsend, Oaknolia, La.; Rev. B. D. Watson, Clinton, La., or Mr. H. C. Lipscomb, Istrouma, La."

Under date of July 9, Brother M. L. Lifsey, evangelist singer, writes: "I am now engaged in evangelistic services here in Centreville, Miss., with our pastor, Brother Mellard, and General Evangelist W. Hardy Neal of Green Forest, Ark., who is doing the preaching. Brethren who might desire my servicse while I am in this territory can save time by communicating with me at Centreville, Miss. We opened up well on yesterday. Brother Mellard is a fine, brotherly man and has a fine, loyal people here. Brother Neal is a strong and forceful preacher and ranks among the highest of our evangelists. The outlook is encouraging."

Rev. E. C. Kilgore asks us to state that his present address is 293 North Bellevue Street, Memphis. He writes: "The condition of my health is such as to render it impracticable for me to engage in revival work, though I am still able to be out some. Have just passed my fifty-fourth anniversary as an authorized minister of the gospel, and while my life has been a busy one, I feel now that my work is about finished and I only have to wait for the Master's call to go home. Of course, if it should be the will of the Lord that I should yet remain to do more work, I shall gladly obey his will. I would like to express my thanks to the brethren here and there for many favors extended to me and mine along the way, and I pray God's blessings upon all."

AN APPRECIATION.

By Rev. J. A. Alford.

Mrs. Barbara Lutz (nee Weihing), was born in Wurtemburg, Germany, on Sept. 15, 1841. She was baptized and confirmed in the Evangelical Lutheran Church. She received a liberal education in the schools of Germany. In 1866 she came to America and settled in New Orleans. In 1868, she was married to Michael J. Lutz in New Orleans, whom she had known in her school days in Germany. Four children were born to them, three of whom survive her, Misses Cena and Barbara, who live in New Orleans, and Rev. Albert S., now presiding elder of the Alexandria District, living in Alexandria, La.

During a great revival held at Craps Street Church, New Orleans, she was converted at the altar under the preaching of Evangelist Paulis, one of the flaming preachers among the German Methodists. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the pastorate of Rev. Crowder, to which, through a long and useful life, she remained loyal and true. The joy of her life was to attend the preaching services, and speak words of encouragement to her pastor. Many have been the pastors, this writer among them, whose lives have been crowned with benedictions of blessings by her saintly, and motherly influence. Her words of comfort and encouragement have kindled hope and inspiration, and quickened the step of many a weary traveler along the way.

She lived a long and useful life, and attained the ripe age of 86 years, when she passed to a well earned reward on May 28, 1928. Her last illness was of short duration, and so out of self and into others had she lived, that even to the end her thoughts were full of comfort to those about her, her dear ones and friends.

She was a lover of good literature and kept abreast of the times in reading, not only home papers, but also international magazines. Her early training equipped her thoroughly for the duties that fell to her lot, and in the field of philosophy and mathematics she was a genius.

The wise man's praise of a "Good Woman," Prov. 31:10-31, too long to quote, gives Mother Lutz a fair description.

Upon her death, friends from all over the city of New Orleans came to pay her tribute. People in all walks of life, and from all religions, Jewish, Catholic, and all Protestant faiths came to see her whom they loved to call "Mother Lutz," and who had been truly a mother to all of them. She was optimistic in spirit and full of good, wholesome humor, a daily reader of the Bible, the book she loved above all others, and a generous supporter of all the benevolent causes of the church, a lover of missions and the social uplift of humanity. Love and patience were her dominant characteristics.

With her going away from us passes out one more of the old line Methodists, one more of the staunch Christian characters who have been community builders, and kingdom promoters, who remembered the labors of the Methodist preachers of New Orleans, as far back as Bishop Linus Parker, whom she greatly admired. And while we are sad at the loss we have sustained, we are glad, and the church is stronger and better because of that which she gave. The lives of her children, each of them by their labors of love, the sons, preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, and the daughters, devoted Christians, and the scores whom she has blessed, make us thank God for giving us "Mother Lutz."

CAMPAIGN FOR MILLSAPS.

Como Methodist church will begin its campaign for Millsaps College Sunday, July 15. Mr. L. E. Foster, of the Jackson Chamber of Commerce, will be the principal speaker on that date. The pastor is Rev. C. M. Chapman, and the chairman is R. P. Brown.

Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder, spoke in connection with the campaign at Carrollton on Friday, July 6, at a meeting of the joint quarterly conference of Carrollton, Acona, Black Hawk, and Price Memorial of Greenwood. Carrollton church was the first to raise its quota in the campaign.

Dr. D. M. Key will speak on Sunday, July 15, at the First Church of Corinth, Miss. Rev. A. T. McIlwain is the pastor, and they plan to start their campaign on July 15.

D. W. Bufkin will be the principal speaker at the Aberdeen church next Sunday, when their campaign will be launched.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan, professor of chemistry and geology at Millsaps, will be the principal speaker at Water Valley on Sunday, July 22.

Silver Creek charge begins its campaign at New Hebron on Sunday, July 8. Dr. D. M. Key will be the principal speaker. Rev. C. Y. Higginbotham is the pastor.

Other churches have signified their intention to start their campaigns from the 22nd on, but have not yet designated the exact date.

THE LORD'S NEED—A MODERN PARABLE.

By Mary Foot Lord.

Once there was a man who never tired of talking about Matt. 21:3; Mark 11:3; and Luke 19:31-34, and as he talked he sighed and wished for the good old days.

One evening he arose in prayer meeting, sighed once more, and told the assembled congregation how much he wished he had lived in the days when Jesus was upon earth, and how delighted he would have been had the Lord sent to him for a colt to ride into Jerusalem upon. "What a happy man that must have been to whom the disciple said, 'The Lord hath need of your colt.' Think of it, brethren! To have something that you could lend to the Lord! Why, I'd come nearer to being jealous of that man than of any other living person!"

Now our blessed Lord was in that prayer meeting that night and he heard what the wishful man said, and the Lord had great need that season of the year; so the next day he sent the man a letter, written, not in an ancient language that would be difficult to decipher, but in plain English, such as the man could read and understand, and he asked for help for a great need in the man's own town.

The man looked at the letter, gave an angry exclamation, tore the paper in two and threw it into the waste basket, saying, "Another of those everlasting drives on!"

The Lord heard what the man said, but he excused him, saying: "My people are dull of hearing and slow of seeing. I must be patient and lead on gently."

So the Lord sent the man another letter, written, as before, in the man's own language, saying one of the disciples had failed to keep his pledge to the Lord's cause, and asking the man to step into the breach. To remind the man of his oft-expressed desire to be of service to his Master, the Lord added, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."

Again the man destroyed the letter, crying, "There ough to he a stop put to these begging letters."

The Lord, who is not willing that any should perish, gave the man yet another chance, and to try to make him understand that the letter came from himself, he wrote asking for money for some starving children in the land where the disciples and the colt and Jesus himself had been, and at the close he added gently, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my children, ye have done it unto me."

Now if the man had read the letter with his heart and with his soul and with his strength and with his mind he would have seen invisible ink stand forth as drops of blood in these words, "The Lord himself hath need of this!"

But the man tore the letter in pieces, saying: "Let the Near East look after its own children. We've got enough causes and drives in our own country to drive a man crazy."

The man still attends prayer meeting, and sighs for the good old days when Jesus walked and talked with men and when a person had a chance to really do something for Jesus, but curiously enough the dear Lord never seems to enter the prayer service any more until this particular brother is through testifying.—The Central Christian Advocate.

DR. ELMER T. CLARK ON PROGRAM OF WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

Dr. Elmer T. Clark, of the General Board of Missions, will be one of the speakers at the tenth convention of the World's Sunday School Association which is being held in Los Angeles, July 11-18. The Sunday schools of fifty nations will participate, and many of the world's leading Sunday school workers will have part in the program.

Dr. Clark's subject will be "The Influence of Religious Experience," and it will contain a study in psychology of religion which he has recently completed and the results of which will be made public for the first time during the convention. Dr. Clark's study and investigation of his subject covers four years and involves an analysis of nearly 2,500 personal records of individual religious experience which were obtained for him by sixty professors of psychology and religious education in as many institutions of learning located in every section of the United States and including every type of school and affiliation.

Delegates to the convention from Methodist Sunday school headquarters in Nashville are A. L. Dietrich and Dr. C. D. Bulla.

MISS SARAH LOU SMITH was born in Springhill, La., Oct. 10, 1910, and died Sunday morning, June 10 1928. There remain to mourn, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Smith, her father and mother, and Master Robert Charles, together with a host of other relatives and friends. One and all say, "If any one was prepared to go, she was." She arrived home from Galloway College, Searcy Ark., only eight days before her death, where she passed her sophomore examinations with grades of from 85 to 100 per cent. From early childhood she had been a member of the church and loved it as few of her age do. Her Bible was her constant source of help, as the many markings show. She loved everybody and everybody loved her. The funeral was held at the Methodist church, and was conducted by her pastor, Rev. James E. Selfe, assisted by Rev. K. W. Dodson. Not half of the people were able to get in the church. Flowers were every where, and some sixteen or more young men and women friends formed a bodyguard from the house to the church, each carrying a spray of flowers. She laid down the duties of this life for the crown prepared for her. Surely hers was a beautifully developed Christian character at an early age.

WHAT HAS THE REVIVAL ACCOMPLISHED IN KOREA?

By M. B. Stokes, Director of Evangelism.

Not only has the revival campaign in Korea already resulted in a large ingathering of souls, but it is being used of God to stir up our preachers and our people to undertake greater things for him.

In the Seoul District alone, two new churches have been organized and some of the old ones are making good progress in their efforts to win souls for Christ. All over the district the people have been greatly blessed through the meetings held during the revival campaign.

The finances of the Seoul District are in good shape. The full amount assessed by the Conference for Conference missions has already been paid in full and sent to the Conference treasurer. One of the great movements inspired by the revival campaign is the plan to make the Seoul District entirely self-supporting after the next Conference. If our present plan works out, all the charges except one will become self-supporting, and that one will be taken care of by the other charges, so that no charge will become a burden on the Conference Board of Missions. We expect also to make contributions to the work of the Board so that the district will really be more than self-supporting.

The fact that we are able to plan for self-support in spite of the very difficult economic situation in Korea and just at this time when there is such general retrenchment all over the church, is proof of what the revival has already done for us in the Seoul District of Korea.

Seoul city and the surrounding country are now wide open for the gospel. This is the time to strike, now while the iron is hot! But how little we can nndertake because of lack of funds! May the church at home stand behind us at this critical time!

Seoul, Korea.

The Sunday school of the Methodist church at Plzon, Czechoslovakia, has 160 members, organized into three departments, with twenty officers and teachers who meet regularly with the pastor, the Rev. J. Paul Bartak, to pray and prepare the Sunday school lesson. The Epworth League and the Woman's Missionary Society of the church are doing a fine work, and recently a church board of lay activities was organized.

Greatest 6 Months IN WILLYS-OVERLAND HISTORY!

Willys-Knight and Whippet sales already exceed total for 1927

2,000,000 CARS AND GOING STRONG!

JULY marks the production of the two-millionth automobile by Willys-Overland. This event happily coincides with the culmination of the greatest 6 months in the company's 20-year history.

Production during the half-year just completed greatly exceeded the entire output of 1927. This unit volume now makes Willys-Overland the industry's third largest producer.

The reasons are plain:—

In the 4-cylinder Whippet the public is getting a light car value absolutely without parallel. Powerful engine; BIG 4-wheel brakes; silent timing chain; full force-feed lubrication, and many other features.

The new Whippet Six is the world's lowest priced 6-cylinder car. Demand has always exceeded production. It is equipped with 7-bearing crankshaft, Invar-strut pistons, and silent timing chain.

The Willys-Knight Standard Six offers the exclusive advantages of the patented Willys-Knight double-sleeve-valve engine at the lowest price in history. The Special Six and Great Six complete this masterly line of motor cars.

Whippet Four-cylinder Touring $455; Roadster (2-pass.) $485; Roadster (with rumble seat) $525; Coupe $535; Cabriolet Coupe (with collapsible top) $595; Coach $535. Whippet Six Touring $615; Roadster $685; Coach $695, Coupe $695. Standard Six Coupe $1045; Sedan $1095; Touring $995; Roadster $995. Special Six prices from $1295 to $1495. Great Six prices from $1850 to $2695. All prices f. o. b. Toledo, Ohio, and specifications subject to change without notice. Willys-Overland, Inc., Toledo Ohio.

MOUNT SEQUOYAH, ARK.

Elza-Stephens-Remmel Building.

On June 20 the Executive Committee of the Board of Control of the Woman's Building on Mount Sequoyah met in Fayetteville, Ark., with the chairman of the Building Committee.

Great joy and enthusiasm pervaded the entire meeting. The building was erected at last. The roof was being put on and the sight of the stately lines and magnificent proportions thrilled the whole committee.

The views from each floor seemed more beautiful than the last one, and when the party reached the roof garden the rapture was complete.

After much consultation with the architect as to possible plans for interior work that might make at least a part of it available this year, it was decided to accept Mr. Ratliff's plan to put in plumbing and lights and single partitions on the second floor, giving us twelve rooms for this summer. To place partitions on the first floor to make three large class rooms available. This work will be done for $1,900, and the prospects from the letters received from the Conferences seemed to justify this move.

A brick terrace will be placed across the front of the building, making the entrance beautiful and accessible. This will cost $275. The committee voted to allow the assembly to put tables and chairs on the third floor and use it as a library and study for the Leadership Training School.

A furnishing committee was appointed and selected the necessary furniture for the second floor bed rooms. Mrs. A. M. Robertson has been employed to have charge of the building after the 20th of July, at which time the contractor promises to have the rooms ready.

Of course a very limited number can be accommodated this year, but if the Conferences are prompt in their obligations it will all be ready next year.

Any auxiliary or individual may furnish a room and place a name on it by the payment of $100 above the quota.

No debt has been contracted up to the present time, and if the promises are kept none will be necessary.

MRS. E. R. STEEL.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The district conference for the southern half of the Vicksburg District, Woman's Missionary Society, held its regular session at Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, on June 21, after an inspirational program on the preceding evening. Mrs. G. P. McKeown, of Woodville, district secretary, presided over the meeting, and Mrs. J. B. Cain, of Fayette, was elected as secretary. Devotional services were conducted at the morning and afternoon sessions by Rev. O. S. Lewis, of Natchez, and Rev. J. B. Cain, of Fayette. Delegates were present from societies at Fayette, Gloster, Greendale, Mispah, Washington, Woodville, as well as a number from the local society at Jefferson Street.

At the morning hour Mrs. McKeown read the report of the district secretary and Miss Janet Head, of Natchez, recent graduate of Scarritt College for Christian Workers, spoke on the spiritual cultivation of the Jubilee year. Reports were given from the auxiliaries present on spiritual cultivation in their own societies. Mrs. W. T. Hegman, of Holly Bluff, Conference Superintendent of Supplies, reviewed certain books on the Jubilee bookshelf. Mrs. Stanley Wilson, of Meridian, Conference Superintendent of Children's Work, and Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, of Meridian, Corresponding Secretary of the Conference, presented the work of the children and young people, after which Mrs. J. C. Lowery, of Gloster, made announcements of the young people's rally in August at Gibson Memorial Church.

Lunch was served by the ladies of Jefferson Street Church in the substory of their building. After lunch two Epworth Juniors from Fayette, Rose Marie Croxton and Frank Headley, gave an interesting dialogue. Catherine Clark read the report for the Natchez Juniors. Other interesting matters were discussed befor adjournment, and a vote of thanks was given the Natchez Society for their entertainment.

MRS. J. B. CAIN, Secretary.

JUBILEE MEETING.

On Thursday afternoon, June 7, the members of the Missionary Society of the Methodist church in Verona held its Jubilee meeting.

In 1878 the Verona auxiliary was organized and has the distinction of being the second auxiliary in the State of Mississippi, Columbus being the first. The Young People's Society of Verona was the first of its kind to be organized.

During the earlier days of this Missionary Society a number of ladies now living in Tupelo were its pioneer workers, and one of them, Mrs. B. T. Clark, is a charter member; she and Mrs. R. G. Porter, are the only charter members now living. Mrs. Porter is the widow of Rev. R. Gilderoy Porter, who was pastor at Verona at the time.

Mrs. Virginia Battle, 84 years of age, joining the society forty or more years ago, is yet a member, and has done valiant service for the Master. The idea was conceived that a meeting be called in honor of these ladies especially, thus showing an appreciation of their lives and example in years gone by, and making it possible for us to hold a truly Jubilee meeting.

Mrs. R. W. Garmon, president of Verona auxiliary, presided and read the nineteenth Psalm.

Mrs. Paulk read an interesting paper on "Service." Mrs. C. A. Roberts read the "History of the Verona Missionary Society," which was beautifully written by Mrs. M. O. Clark. Short talks were made by Mrs. T. M. Clark, Miss Sallie Kilpatrick, Mrs. B. T. Clark and Mrs. Battle. All were in a reminiscent mood," as one speaker remarked. True Christian fellowship was enjoyed for s short season, and no doubt all felt stimulated to do for the Master more efficient service in the years to come.

A duet, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," sung by Misses Winnie and Sybil Wharton; a trio, "My Creed," by Misses Wharton and Mrs. G. W. Clark, were greatly enjoyed.

As a token of appreciation and love, Mrs. Garmon presented small gifts to Mrs. B. T. Clark and Mrs. Battle in the name of the Verona Missionary Society. "Blest be the Tie That Binds" was sung, after which we adjourned for a social half-hour. Ice cream and cake were served.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

To the present date nine standard training schools have been held in the Conference during the year. The attendance in two of the schools, Amory and Ripley, were satisfactory. Incessant rains and sickness cut the attendance in the others below normal. It is possible that we shall have to hold two or three schools at the same date to escape hot weather school commencements and other interferences. A larger number are doing work at home than formerly. If we are to have a sufficient number of trained workers we must have an ever increasing number of classes taught in the local schools. This is hard work for some one to do, but it is worth the effort. There is still opposition to religious education, even after it has been demonstrated clearly, that it is the need of every person whether he be teacher or parent or leader of any kind. I know of no one who has taken as many as four courses who criticises Religious Education or is afraid of its outcome in character building. The objection that many have to this method of establishing the kingdom of God it is hard work. There is no way to get some one else to do it for me. It is of such tremendous value that it will win its way in time. Victor Hugo said: "There is one thing more powerful than an army with banners, that is an idea whose time has come." What do you suppose it is that impels the people to spend money for modern church buildings? It is an idea. And that idea is to give the children sound religious instruction, to train them to worship, and to direct their Christian activities The idea of Religious Education can not be stopped in its onward march by any amount of opposition on the part of those who do not understand its significance. The fair-minded man is willing to give it a trial. The Cokesbury schools have multiplied more than tenfold. The study of the courses offered will stimulate the people to want more, and out of these schools an army will be raised to fight spiritual illiteracy and careless living. The ultimate aim is to make people holy in heart and in practice. Yes, Scriptural holiness that the sane will not shun, but rather seek.

Childhood and Youth Week is not far ahead of us. This project does not mean that the children are to be exploited or trained for a public exhibition, but that the parents are to be led to think of the worth of childhood, its infinite possibilities and to do something tangible for the training of childhood. For a wonder, not even a "collection" is to be taken. It will pay to investigate this project and give it a trial.

Quite a number have ordered Sunday School Day programs and are waiting to observe the day. A small number have not ordered programs and think the time has passed for the observance of the day. A lot of time has passed, but there are three months yet before harvest. We shall keep the matter before those who have not heeded the call. The reason is the whole thing is in behalf of defenseless, helpless childhood. Be a man and do this one thing.

A School of Distinction

Morgan School has been known to the writer many years. He also knows intimately Prof. Robt. K. Morgan, its founder, the high ideals he has for the school and the high type of work done. The school is a Christian institution; and building character in the boy, along with a high scholarship, is the chief aim of the school. When parents entrust their boys to Prof. Morgan for training, they need have no fear for the future. Mr. Morgan loves boys, understands and helps them. Thousands of former students can attest to this. Boys are taken and under his skillful guidance moulded into men of the highest character. If you have a boy to educate, write to Mr. L. I. LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Dr. Cleanth Brooks, pastor First Church, Alexandria, reports securing Dr. C. D. Bulla, of Nashville, to teach the course on "Evangelism" in their Standard Training School, booked for Sept. 2-7. The other courses to be offered in this school are: "Beginner Lesson Material" "Primary Lesson Material," and "Spirit and Genius of Methodism."

The writer spent last Sunday in Winnfield in interest of their fall Standard Training School. The leadership of the co-operating schools was unanimously in favor of putting on a great Training School. The school in this section of the Minden District was held in Rocbelle last year.

Miss Pauline Wynn, Educational Director of the Older Girls' Camp Conference to be held at Lake Arthur Aug. 7-17, has sent us a program, and prospects are we are going to have a great conference.

The courses and instructors for this conference are: "Principles of Teaching," Mrs. G. F. Winfield; "The Missionary Message of the Bible," Dr. W. W. Drake; "Worship in the Sunday School," Miss Pauline Wynn, and "The Organization of the Small Sunday School" (Cokesbury), Rev. A. K. McLellan. Each student will be allowed to enroll in two courses, and credits will be given for satisfactory work.

Miss Wynn has been fortunate in securing a great leadership for this conference. I note with interest that Miss Julia Reid, our own missionary in Cuba, will be with us in some of our programs. We all know and love Miss Julia and will look forward to seeing her again.

Boating, swimming, nature hikes, pageants, treasure hunts, track and aquatic meet, stunt night and camp fire programs are listed among our recreational activities. A good time is in store for those who would like to spend a real profitable vacation.

Registration cards with $2 fee should be sent to Miss Pauline Wynn, Lake Charles, La., by July 20, if possible.

We will publish our Sunday School Day offering to date in our August issue of the Sunday School Outlook, so if you have not sent in yours, do so at once and have your school listed among the first to observe Sunday School Day.

EXTENSION SECRETARIES.

(Mohler, Hammontree and Sharp, North Mississippi Conference.)

Report for April, May and June.

Cokesbury class taught, 11; pupils enrolled, 188; credits made, 113; Standard C Schools taught, 3; pupils enrolled, 99; credits made, 71.

Places.

Standard Cokesbury Schools: Belmont, Verona and Wrin. Cokesbury classes: Coldwater, Abbeville, Duck Hill, Williamsville, Courtland, Waterford, Greenbriar, Rienzi, Bethel, Rienzi charge, Sallis and Macon circuit.

Recapitulation.

Cokesbury Standard Schools and classes taught since Conference: Schools taught, 44; people enrolled, 1,096; credits made, 767. In these schools the pastors and superintendents gave whole-hearted co-operation and did not hesitate to say that these schools "toned up" the work of the entire charge and made a distinct contribution to our rural work. We are trusting before the Conference year closes to have 100 schools, enrolling 2,500 people and to issue 1,500 credits. We have engagements for forty schools for the summer months. We are doing this work with the least possible expense, endeavoring religiously to get value received for every dollar set in to the Sunday School Board.

Other Works.

In addition to the above work your Extension Secretaries are constantly giving sympathetic supervision over little schools, checking schools, holding institutes, and workers' meetings, making surveys, organizing new schools, reorganizing schools, preaching, holding revivals, traveling thousands of miles, writing and answering letters, sending out cultural material, issuing a monthly bulletin, attending Standard Training Schools for better personal squipment and doing the work of an evangelist generally. We shall not rest until every man, woman and child in the bounds of our Conference shall know the teaching of God and live the standard of Christ.

Better Support Needed.

Members of our Board tell us that unless we can increase the Board's income they will have to retrench, curtail our program, reduce the working force. This in the face of the fact that one of our sister denominations has at work in the State twenty-five all-time workes. We have only four all-time worker. Brethren, this should not be. The remedy is easy. Let the Sunday schools know the value of this work and then let all the schools observe Missionary Sunday, give missionary instructions and make a monthly offering, and, second, observe Sunday School Day. if a large majority of our schools will do this (Disciplinary requirement) we can go forward instead of entertaining an idea of retrenchment. Retrenchment would be more than humiliating—it would be a disgrace.

We Crave Your Support, Prayers and Sympathy.

Brethren, pray for us. Help us to do the work of an evangelist. Open the doors for us and speak words of commendation and approval wherever you go. Let the people know that this work is the Conference program—ordered and endorsed by our Conference. We care not for honors, praise of men, but we do crave to bulid permanently the kingdom of God within our Conference. Constructive criticism invited.

Sunday School Day Offerings.

So far only ninety-one Sunday schools have sent in Sunday School Day offering (see June bulletin), amounting to $811.13. We need at least 200 schools to observe Sunday School Day, making a total offering of $2,500 for the Conference year. Send all Sunday School Day and Dual-Special offering to Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Remember the support of our work—your work—comes mostly from Sunday School Day and the observance of Missionary Sunday (fourth Sunday-Dual-Special).

Respectfully submitted,

E. G. MOHLER,
Rural Extension and Missionary Secretary.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUES.

The North Mississippi Epworth Leagues are making plans for a very extensive program of work this summer. At the last Assembly at Grenada College in June, Miss Katherine Bryson, of Tupelo, Miss., was given the work of Field Secretary of Epworth League. She is devoting all of her time to this great work, and is visiting Leagues, reorganizing Leagues, and organizing new Leagues. All District Secretaries and pastors should seek her assistance in the work in their districts and charges. She is planning to hold an institute in every district this summer, and perhaps two institutes in some of the districts. There seems to be a lack of knowledge throughout the Conference as to how Epworth Leagues should be organized and run. So many of our Leagues do not know enough about the Standard of Efficiency to work for it, and this is the type of work that Miss Bryson is anxious to help all Leagues in. The first Sunday in July, the League at Plantersville was visited and the plan of League organization was studied. During the first week in July, the Leagues at Verona, Smithville, and Fulton were visited and courses in the Handbook were taught at these Leagues. All League presidents and pastors are urged to get in touch with the Field Secretary and arrange for her to visit their League.

LOUISIANA LEAGUERS NOTICE.

Those Leaguers desiring to go to Mount Sequoyah for the Epworth League Assembly Aug. 15-24, notify Miss Elizabeth Langford, Box 260, Alexandria, La., of your plans. If you have a car that you would like to fill up with Leaguers Miss Langford will assist you in getting the crowd and will show you how you can make your car pay for its trip.

Write at once, as time is short. We want a caravan of Leaguers going from Louisiana.

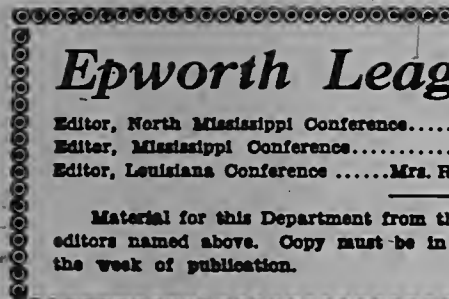
MINDEN CHAPTER NEWS.

The first business meeting of the new League year was held in the church Tuesday evening, June 26, with the new president—Jennie Searles—in the chair. Committees were appointed to draw up policy and budget for the year. The roll was divided, each member being placed on the roll of a department. Mr. Luther Hortman, vice president, explained the duties of the Watch Committee, and held a meeting of same following the business meeting.

The new officers are: President, Jennie Searles; Vice President, Luther Hortman; Secretary, Irene Shields; Treasurer, Aileen Hyslap; First Department Superintendent, Marguerite Lowe; Second Department Superintendent, Eris Mouzingo; Third Department Superintendent, Sara Ratcliff; Fourth Department Superintendent, Mrs. Drew Dial; Hi League Counsellor, Mrs. I. W. Shields; Epworth Junior Society Superitendent, Mrs. Richard Garrison.

Fourteen members of the League at Minden drove to Haughton, Thursday night, to attend the revival being conducted there by Rev. L. I. McCain. The church was decorated in League colors, with reserved seats for the Minden Leaguers. Miss Mary Searles made a brief talk in behalf of the League work as a whole; a chorus was sung by the entire group; a vocal solo was rendered by Jimmie McCain. All the young folks enjoyed Brother McCain's sermon, as we always do, and enjoyed the fellowship of the folks at Haughton.

On Sunday, July 1, nineteen members of the League at Minden drove to Caddo Lake, near Mooringsport, to the Norwela Council Boy Scout Camp. The purpose of the trip was the conducting of a service for the Scouts in their rustic open-air chapel. A short program along patriotic lines, following a good song service, was rendered by the Leaguers. Leaders and scouts alike seemed to thoroughly enjoy the afternoon. It is being of some service, and perhaps of some inspiration, to others, in little ways like this which makes League work, and life itself worth while. We hope that we shall never lose sight of our motto, "All for Christ," but may follow it always.



In Five MILLION HOMES TONIGHT

There are times when all a mother's love can't soothe a fretful baby. No way of telling just what's wrong, yet something must be done. Castoria time! A few drops, and Baby has dropped off to sleep. Yet this marvelous means of quieting a restless infant is utterly harmless. There is not one ingredient but what all doctors know and approve, and would let you give your baby every day in the week. In fact Castoria is a purely vegetable product. Gas pains, constipation, even diarrhea can be dispelled in this same manner. Castoria is older than you are, but physicians still say "nothing better for babies." An old-fashioned remedy if you count its years, but parents are old-fashioned who still raise babies without its aid! And at least five million modern mothers keep it handy day and night, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Buy yours now; don't wait until you need it.

WILLYS-OVERLAND ADDS 1,516 NEW DEALERS SINCE JAN. 1.

New dealers appointed by Willys-Overland this year, following the reduction in Whippet prices in January and the announcement of the two new models built by the company, the Willys-Knight Standard Six and the new Whippet Six, total 1,516 according to an announcement just released by the sales department.

New dealer contracts continue to be signed up at a rate consistent with the growth of the dealer organization since the first of the year, and all points report an oversold condition on nearly all models. In the week ending June 17, there were seventy-seven new dealer contracts signed and the list of dealer applications on file for future action shows an undiminishing dealer interest throughout the country.

REVIVAL MEETING AT ANTIOCH.

Over in the Aberdeen District, on the Smithville charge, there is a little church known as Antioch. Many pastors as well as laymen will remember Antioch when we say that it is Aunt Martha Rye's church, for she has been serving God in this church for about seventy years, during which time she has seen many souls brought into God's kingdom.

On July 1 we closed a revival meeting at Antioch in which the church as a whole was greatly benefited. There was a general reconsecration of the members, and a total addition to the church of thirty-six members. Twenty-eight of these came on profession of faith and baptism, two from other denominations, and six by certificate.

Brother G. C. Schwartz, of Iuka, did the preaching, and he is truly a servant of Jehovah. Brother Schwartz preached most excellent sermons, and his co-operation with the pastor and work as a whole was of the highest type and efficiency. He came to us filled with the Holy Spirit, and we thank God for having sent him our way. He seems to be just the type of man that God is able to work through, and in his work one sees not the man, but God.

In a revival meeting like this we are made to know that God is ever with those who are seeking to establish his cause and kingdom in the hearts and lives of men.

W. L. PEARSON, P. C.

FROM SHAW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed what old citizens of this place say was the greatest revival in the history of Shaw. Rev. Herman A. Butts, general evangelist of the Memphis Conference, and Moody B. Cunningham, evangelistic singer of the West Texas Conference, led the forces of God to victory. The devil was deeply intrenched in Shaw, but by the soul-stirring sermons, honored by the Holy Ghost sent from heaven, the backbone of sin was broken. I do not think any man in the ministry could have done what Brother Butts did in Shaw, because he is a special vessel, chosen of God, and thoroughly fitted for the work of an evangelist. He preaches the old-time gospel, and God honors it, and sends the Holy Ghost from heaven, to convict, and regenerate souls. Cunningham does the most constructive work with the young folks of any man I know. Besides he is a great solo singer, and leader in song. No man among us who has a worldly church will make a mistake in securing these consecrated men to hold a meeting for him. The finances for the meeting come easy. There is not a word said about paying the evangelist till the last services. Then there is a free-will offering taken, and he is satisfied. Brethren, you are in your own light if you do not use these men. There is a big place in the church for God-chosen, Spirit-filled evangelists.

Now, what are the results of the meeting? First, when they came here there was not a male member that would lead a public prayer. I think three-fourths of the women from all the churches played cards, and many of them attended the dance. Some of them carried their little girls to the dance. I think every teacher in the high school danced or played cards. And many other things that I could tell that no preacher except those that have served this charge know anything about.

The meeting ran three weeks, interest increasing with every service. The last night of the meeting the house was packed to its capacity.

There were about two hundred conversions and reclamations, forty joined the Methodist and Baptist churches; twenty-seven joined the Methodist and thirteen joined the Baptist. And right here I want to say that the Baptists played a great part in fighting the forces of sin in this meeting. God biess them. They wiii go to the last ditch with you if you fight sin. There will be some more received at Litton, a country church connected with Shaw. There are now more people that will lead a prayer than can be used in a prayer meeting. There is a business men's prayer meeting which wiil meet in some of the piaces of husiness each Wednesday morning. The ladies voted to continue their cottage prayer meetings weekly. The young people meet in a devotional service and prayer meeting each Wednesday night. They met last night, and every one present led a prayer. There were eight offered themselves for life service; nineteen family altars were erected, and twenty-four pledged to tithe. This is only a short report of the meeting. Eternity alone will tell the full results.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 75—No. 29. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3710.

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1928. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

NO DISSENT FROM THE POSITION OF MY CHURCH.

In view of many letters inquiring concerning my position on pending matters political, and asking advice upon the same, the following statement is made:

I see no reason to dissent from the position of my church on the subject of personal and party politics as that position has been proclaimed authoritatively by its leaders from the beginning of its history as a Christian body.

On the 17th day of August, 1865—before the clouds of war had been dispersed and while the most irritating conditions were prevailing in our country—Bishops James O. Andrew, Robert Paine, and George F. Pierce met at Columbus, Ga., and issued a pastoral address to the ministers and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, giving timely counsels and admonitions concerning the course to be pursued in the midst of the trying situation which confronted them. Bishops Joshua Soule and Hubbard H. Kavanaugh were prevented from attending the meeting by the disordered state of railway transportation, but they approved the address issued by the other bishops when it was sent to them.

With reference to political matters the address contained the following exhortation to the preachers:

"Know your high calling. Preach Christ and Him crucified. Do not preach politics. You have no commission to preach politics. The divinity of the church is never more strikingly displayed than when it holds on its ever straightforward way in the midst of worldly commotions."

In the spring of 1866 the General Conference met in New Orleans, La., and the bishops said in the Episcopal Address to that notable body of able and devout men:

"We do not attempt in this brief address to enter into a detailed account of the general state of the work. We thank God that we have so safely passed through a most painful and fiery ordeal; that the church has preserved under His blessing her integrity; that she has in no wise become complicated with political affairs; but keeping in view her own high mission, has been satisfied to perform her legitimate duties.

In that expression of the non-political mission and work of the church all the bishops heartily united, and the General Conference approved it.

The General Conference elected to the office of bishop Dr. William M. Wightman, Dr. David S. Doggett, Dr. Enoch M. Marvin, and Dr. Holland N. McTyeire, all of whom went forth to their new fields of labor in perfect agreement with the sentiments of their older colleagues and the General Conference concerning the subject of the church and politics.

Some years later that most saintly man, eloquent preacher, and wise bishop, Bishop Enoch M. Marvin, published a very strong article in which he discussed the duty and destiny of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the closing paragraph of which he said:

"We must stand in our lot. The future must be left to the men of the future and to God. Those who shall have the affairs of the church in charge fifty years hence will be as wise as we. Let us pray that they may be much more wise. Fifty years hence God will be listening to the prayers of his people. Fifty years hence—we cannot doubt it—there will be a Methodist church in the land, in poise amid the factions of the hour, pure amid its temptations, her candlestick still in his place, her light burning with the pure flame of inspiration and faith, her eye lifted, her hands clean from bribes, her robes of linen clean and white, the righteousness of saints washed in the blood of the Lamb, revered by all who love the Lord Jesus, and hated only by His enemies; her children dwelling in peace in the South and in the North, in the West and in the East, with Republican and Democrat, Radical and Conservative, alike calling her blessed. She will excite the suspicion and hatred of none by allying herself with an adverse party upon issues that arouse the passions of the hour, but lie outside of her proper sphere. She will move with a grand but quiet energy amid the affairs of men, the representative of Christ to all, the political ally or enemy of none. She will stand for Christ, recognized by all, upon a plane far above the level of those contests which come and go with the energy and swiftness of a tornado. She will abjure both the riches and power which might reward a lewd and bewitching coquetry with some successful party in the State. She will be known, and loved, and hated, as the chaste spouse of Christ. Her character will give full force and meaning to the Word of God committed to her.

"This is the destiny of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a destiny that she cannot alienate. She must stand in her lot to the end of the days.'"

At the General Conference, held in Memphis, Tenn., May 3-21, 1894, the bishops said in their address to the body:

"It is not amiss to repeat what has often been declared—that our church is strictly a religious and in no wise a political body. Our sole business is to preach and serve the kingdom of God. There are many questions, economical, social, and in part ethical, of burning interest in this day, which our pulpit and churches may be tempted to substitute for the simple gospel. Men claiming to be advanced thinkers and wide-awake philanthroplsts may sneer at us as unpractical dreamers and devotees of shadows and abstractions, because we give ourselves wholly to things spiritual and eternal. But Christ is the Rock, and only those who build on Him build safely. The more closely we keep ourselves to the one work of testifying to all men repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, the better shall we promote the highest good of our country and race. As a church we are not related by affiliation or antagonism to any political party. As a citizen every man should carry his judgment and conscience into politics and all other spheres of life."

From this established and Scriptural position of my church I feel no disposition to dissent or depart. It is in agreement with the words of our Lord when He witnessed His good confession before Pontius Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John xviii:36).

Offering no criticism of others, I propose to abide unfalteringly by this principle, discharging conscientiously my duties as a citizen and fulfilling with fidelity my commission as a minister of Jesus Christ. On that I stand. I cannot do otherwise. May my Lord help me to serve my generation by the will of God; finish my course with joy and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus to testify the gospel of the grace of God; "fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life."

WARREN A. CANDLER.

Atlanta, Ga., July 11, 1928.

IN THE CHURCH.

A man in great trouble came to see me on a recent Sunday after morning service. He was a man who had sinned deeply but seemed to have been punished out of all proportion to the offense. He was not embittered by it, but sobered and humbled. What troubled him was not his own afflictions so much as the seemingly undeserved agonies that he had come across in the lives of other people. This is what he said to me:

"I do not think you preachers and church-going people in general have the least idea of the terrible troubles that afflict ordinary folk beyond your borders. There is something repellent to me in the sight of a comforble-looking congergation assembled for worship. But what have you to say to the tribulations of the Christless world?"

I was greatly touched by the appeal, as who would not be? but was forced to smile at the assumption behind it. "Comfortable congregations." I know my people better than that. "Christians who knew nothing of the tribulations of the Christless world."

"Do you know what you are saying?" I asked. "Probably there is not one man or one woman in the house of God on a Sunday morning who does not know at first hand something of the sterner and darker side of life. A good many of them are drawn to the Cross of Christ by that very fact. They feel that there or nowhere is the solution of all the problems of human ills. The Christless world knows nothing that we do not know." The difference between the two is just that we who have found Christ have found a source of strength and consolation which others miss. "Our sufficiency of God."—Dr. R. J. Campbell, D.D., London, preaching in Kingsway (Wesleyan) Hall.

THE LAYMEN.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

Leave it to the ministers, and soon the church will die,
Leave it to the women folk, the young will pass it by
For the church is all that lifts us from the coarse and selfish mob,
And the church that is to prosper, needs the laymen on the job.

Now a layman has his business and a layman has his joys,
But he also has the training of his little girls and boys:
And I wonder how he'd like it if there were no churches here,
And he had to raise his children in a godless atmosphere.

It's the church's special function to uphold the finer things,
To teach the way of living from which all that's noble springs:
But the minister can't do it, single-handed and alone,
For the laymen of the country are the church's corner stone.

When you see a church that's empty, though its doors are open wide,
It is not the church that's dying, it's the laymen who have died:
For it's not by song or sermon that the church's work is done,
It's the laymen of the country who for God must carry on.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Some one should write a book on the courage of love. We have much of the tenderness, beauty and sacrifice of this master passion. These elements have been emphasized, even exploited and glorified, and yet the dominant note of its doubtless courage, its daring emprise, undertaking the conquest of a world as its supreme object, has claimed the attention of but a few. Nowhere else in all history, as we may know history, is there an incident of such abandonment of discretion, such a venture of almost seeming madness, as when Jesus called the eleven together in that tryst in Galilee and said: "Go take the world for me." The Duke of Wellington said that commission was his marching orders. But in all his splendid military career he never issued any that evinced greater courage. No doubt in some of the great paintings that hang in the art galleries of the Old World, an artist of skill has depicted that scene, as I in some measure, at least, imagine it must have been. The Master, bearing yet in his form the wounds and scars of Calvary, his face, I think, lighted with a glory that was born of his confident victory over death and the grave. But I wonder if any artist can paint the supreme courage, the divine heroism, that must have shone and flashed from his eyes like more than sunbursts from out the wings of the morning; and that spirit was infectious, for the waiting band of apostles caught its fire and glow, then went forth to do, to dare, and when need came, to die. One cannot account for the great campaign that followed on any other ground. It was heaven-born, and it stands an epoch in the centuries, as a supreme evidence of the deity of Jesus. None other than he, the Christ of the ages, could have dared to issue such orders, for he knew full well the source of power given. Matthew, the publican, by all the tokens a man of culture, caught the inspiration of that supreme moment, and framed the edict, then hung it in the hall of immortal memorials, where it abides to-day the challenge to the church of the living God—"Go teach all." Only the dauntless courage of infinite love can redeem a lost world. And the church needs this courage to confront the evil and meet the heart-searching and brain-racking problems of this generation.

Yes, beloved, real love is brave. It does not flinch in times of danger. "It beareth all things, endureth all things." Call to mind this scene: The breath of the morning was bathing the Galilean shore and sea. Peter and his crowd had gone a-fishing—probably had concluded this was about the best thing they could do, since their Lord was gone, as they thought, forever from the world. Heavy and worn after a night of useless net dragging, Jesus standing on the beach greeted them. "Cast the net on the right side." All night they had been on the wrong side—men always are, without his presence. Obeying his command the net is filled. John is very exact about this. He must have counted them—one hundred and fifty-three. But he knew his Lord and told Peter it was Jesus. Peter forgot net and fishes. Great, big, child-man he was, no stretch of Galilean water should now separate him from his Master. Grieved, penitent, broken hearted, he just wanted to fall at his feet and confess how mean and unworthy he was. After breakfast, Peter is given his chance. Peter had only one answer to the searching questions put to him—"I love thee," with the climax, "Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest I love thee." Peter, love has courage. It will take all you have to quit fishing and "feed my sheep." Let the men and women of our fair land, who "love righteousness and hate iniquity" take the lesson to heart. Love is not a weakling, it is the noblest, bravest, grandest thing in God's universe.

OBSERVATIONS AND ELSE.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

The Democratic Convention at Houston, Tex., ran true to form. Hot-air speeches, sensible speeches, screaming speeches, speeches that left the spell-binder hoarse and tired. The condition of the delegates may be left to the imagination. Thinking of an Indian war-dance with all the accompaniments would help some. Whooping and yelling, banner-waving and fist fights, bitter arraignment of others and fulsome praise for themselves, disorder and tempest-like demonstrations, wild assertions, wilder predictions, pandemonium.

The voice of woman was not wanting. She was helping save the country with one Al Smith, of New York, and her lung power was not to be despised. Listening in over the radio was like listening in on a Dempsey-Wild Bull of the Pampas fight. Hot. Sweat and lung power well scrambled. Bands playing different tunes, flags waving, the chairman vainly rapping for order. Order! How could order be obtained while it took such expressions as "Riotous," "Gives lie to Bishop," "Banners Trampled," "Knuckles are Cracked," "Police Clubs Fly," "It's a convention and anything is all right," and other choice expressions for the newspaper men to get the idea before their readers? One writer compared the "smell of the pine" in the convention building to a "Methodist camp meeting." Pine don't smell so bad. I am glad he said it was the pine that gave forth that odor.

All is not lost, brethren. Andy Gump lives, and little Chester will be found by Uncle Bim. Abe Martin has not lost his punch, and Dog Hill paragraphs survive. Will Rogers still makes merry. The vanity box is not outlawed. Some new epithets may yet be coined for the benefit of the Fundamentalists and Modernists. Our ubiquitous Tom Cats have not lost their musical sense, and there are enough back-yard fences left to furnish a "platform" from which to give a midnight serenade. The president of Columbia University has not lost his voice. And there is at least one man left in Mississippi who votes for Bilbo. I nearly overlooked the caps and gowns our boys and girls graduate in. Life is still worth while.

An intelligent layman said to the writer while it was going on, "The convention is intended to be a hot-air emporium. Less than that or more than that would be disappointing." He was not disappointed.

If I ever hear another democrat criticize a camp meeting, or any other kind, because of the "excitement" involved I shall take great pleasure in bursting a young balloon over his head. The church never saw the day when she could make so much noise, provoke so many fool things, or claim to believe so many absurd things.

The echoes from the Convention are already heard. "Now is the time for all good men to come to the help of the party." "The Democratic party is dry." Sure. It has been out of office long enough to be rall dry. "Turn the rascals out." "Our" candidate can ride two horses at the same time despite the fact that they are going in opposite directions. Whoop-la. A reeking wet riding a dry platform. If things keep on some good man is going to laugh himself to death. The Black and Tan against the Wet and Dry! Tammany Society possesses a vanity case and other modern necessities, not to say luxuries, and is smiling like an old maid at a bachelor convention. Shut your eyes, fellow-citizens, hold your facial projections tight, gag and swallow. It is a bitter dose, but you must save your country. And don't forget your "yeller dog philosophy." You need it. True, the donkey wearing the lion's skin but his voice is unchanged.

"I must confess, with many a sigh,
That I have told you many a lie;
But who would with scheme in view
Miss it for a lie or two?"

Thus sang the enraptured poet of yesterday when telling his best girl good-by for the last time. There was in it the glint of a tear, the murmur of a heart that was sad. But all past lies were to be forgotten. All past records were on the ash-heap.

The donkey has a lion's skin,
Listen to him roar;
He's scaring all the voters out,
Just as heretofore.

"Stand by your party, as a vote for the Republicans means a vote for Perry Howard, Bob Church, Cohen, Davis, etc." "The drys have the platform. The wets have the candidate. That ought to make everybody happy." All of which means just one thing—Put the party before principle.

The South likes Sambo—in the cotton patch. The North likes Sambo—at the polls. Both like him, but not at the same place. Sambo is taking on his quadrennial proportions. The church is trying to save his soul. The North is trying to save his citizenship. The South is trying to save his labor. Hoover is trying to save his social standing. Smith is trying to save his "personal liberty." Sambo is like a wet nurse in a dry home—a very important nuisance.

Is it too much to dream of a day when voters will decline to be swayed by prejudice, local or otherwise? May we have reasonable hope of an intelligent ballot, a ballot that represents the truest and best judgment of the citizen? Is it unreasonable to hope for a ballot that is not necessarily based on the idea of winning regardless of the principles involved? A sane, sound, constructive ballot cast for the man himself, as well as what he represents, would do much to reduce graft, and bring about a wholesome spirit of law observance. Possibly the nomination of Hoover and Smith may be the beginning of a better day for the whole country. Let us do some real thinking and honest praying before we cast our ballots for either of these men.

"BU TAO WUNG."

A group of Chinese came one day to the editor's residence all aglow from the interchange of reports. And these reports covered the year of the most anti-Christian persecution that China has seen for a long time! "We can plainly see," said they, "that Christianity is non-downable!" Then they added, "We have come to call Christianity the Bu Tao Wung!"

The Bu Tao Wung is the Chinese term for the little dolls which are filled with lead at the bottom and always bob up when knocked down. A very heartening thing it must have been for those Chinese leaders to hear the same story of inner victory come from every part of their great land. Their experience has been that of Paul and the rest of the early Christians: pressed on every side, but not overcome. One of the Chinese friends said: "All of these reports can be summed up in one sentence. The past year has been one of persecutions and there has been some external loss, but, on the other hand, great inward gain."

And just so it has always been with the Christian enterprise, no matter in what clime or at what time. With the Christian, business is always good! In one of the devotional addresses at the Central Conference, Bishop Birney gave many illustrations of how the Chinese, during the past year, had by their Christian character and lives proved the existence of God. He said our one business was to show men our God, and for that purpose, any time or condition will do. "We can do that, no matter what happens!" Indeed, the Christian's business, his real business, is usually best when times are worst. Christianity grows brightest and grows fastest when it is hammered and pounded most.

Poor deluded persecutors of the Christians of China! Know ye not that where ye strike down one Christian, ten will spring up? One of the finest things that have recently come to our ears is the testimony of a famous Chinese who is not in mission work. "Just wait," said he, "and you will see the death of Doctor Williams in Nanking, and the spirit in which his family reacted toward that deed, will some day work mightily for the cause of Christ in China." "And now abideth . . . love." That's the point. Love abides. You can't down it, and you can't kill it. It is a Bu Tao Wung. All the "strike downs" in the universe cannot down Love. That has been one of the great services of the Revolution of 1927-28 in China. It has demonstrated to the Christians and the non-Christians, but especially to the former, that you cannot down what they have in their innermost possession! So the outcome of this trial of strength in China between Christ and his adversaries is that Christ has a firmer hold in China than ever.—Edtorial in China Christian Advocate, Shanghai.

HAS SCIENCE INCREASED LONGEVITY?

Has science, by its marvelous progress, increased the longevity of human life or is the statement of Moses more than three thousand years ago still true, "The days of our years are threescore years and ten."

Has science found anything to approximate the fabled "Fountain of Youth," the dream of Ponce de Leon, and thus lengthened human existence? Science itself is compelled to answer in the negative and declare that the old Bible truth still holds.

A friend, a thoughtful judge of this city, thinks that many men, by getting the idea fixed in their minds that seventy years is the appointed span of human life, surrender and die before their time. But this matter is controlled by something stronger than the will to live, though not discounting the persistence of the will.

Chauncey Depew expected to live a hundred years. Though it is true that he lived to reach 94, pneumonia carried him away when he thought his expectations would be realized. Though determination is helpful in prolonging life, it is not the most potential factor that determines the final results.

Some one has said that men are like clocks, which are made to run eight days and no more, and seem to be built to run about seventy years. Exceptional cases do a little better, many less. There is a woman in New York City who boasts that she is 133 years old. Close observations and a mass of statistics have convinced Professor Raymond Pearl, of John Hopkins University, one of the leading biologists of this country, Sir Humphrey Bulleston and other experts that conditions have not changed. Nobody knows why the human body stops when its appointed time has been run. Perhaps the heart has so many beats to make before it is exhausted; perhaps the brain has only so much energy to expand for hours of consciousness; perhaps some other organ puts a limit on man's life time, as the strength of the main spring limits the time a clock will run. These things are beyond the ken of science and are still in the twilight of speculation.

The basis of the limits of man's longevity is in the change in his physical structure. The cartilages of the backbone harden, the angle of the lower jaw loses its acuteness and produces the weasened appearance that indicates age, but worse than all the heart has a thickening enlargement with advancing years. These are beyond the help of medical or surgical treatment.

A few months ago Mr. and Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, of Chicago, donated a million dollars to found an Institute for the study of diseases in middle life—disorders such as heart disease, rheumatism and cancer which affect, if they do not shorten, the lives of thousands who are already past fifty. Scientific men hailed this study as extremely useful, but it is doubtful if the best informed expect one month to be added in this way or any other way, to the maximum span of life. The best that can be expected of research work like that the Lasker fund contemplates will be to protect many people from dying prematurely or losing their lives to disease at ages of fifty or fifty-five, when they ought to be able to live until seventy or a little beyond.

Professor Edwin Grant Dexter, a student on the effects of the weather on human life and health, took the trouble some months ago to compute the ages of notable old individuals of each century from the time of the Greeks to the present day. He found absolutely no sign of change. If anything the old men of ancient Greece lived to be actually older on an average than old people of to-day. While modern sanitation and medical science have reduced the mortality of infants and have lengthened the lives of the enfeebled, the average old man and old woman in the United States will not live longer than their grandparents.

Therefore, science, according to its own statements, brings us no ground to expect long life beyond what life has been since the days of Moses, and we may well pray the prayer, to the Author of life, "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

FROM FIRST CHURCH, CORINTH.

Dear Dr. Carley: We thought it might be of interest to former pastors, presiding elders and other friends throughout the Advocate territory to read a few lines from First Church, Corinth. In looking over the records for the past eighteen months we find that a few things have been done that are worthy of note. When I came here as pastor I soon found that the superintendent of the Sunday school, Dr. R. B. Warriner, had his heart set on draining the seep water out of the Primary Sunday school rooms and painting same. This was badly needed and we did not allow anything to get in the way of this movement until it was accomplished. We now have as comfortable and attractive quarters for the Cradle Roll, Beginners and Primaries as is possible to have in a basement.

Early in this Conference year we arranged with our Conference Superintendent for a Standard Trainnig School, which was held in our church June 10-15. The rains and Chautauqua interfered with our attendance, but we issued fifty credits, and the work and spirit of the school was up to high water mark. Our people say they want another school next year. Along with other equipment we have added three pianos to the Sunday school this year, giving the Sunday school six pianos in all.

Beginning last fall, the ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society began to beautify the church and parsonage grounds. They have planted a variety of beautiful shrubbery around both church and parsonage, and with a little more growth our church and parsonage grounds will be one of the most beautiful spots in our fair city.

On June 24, we finished raising the full amount of the old church debt of $5,700. Our church is now out of debt and some of the brethren suggest that it might be well to stay out. But this doesn't mean that we are not going forward. Plans are already under way to build a much needed Sunday school annex, or, perhaps better, an A type building, new out and out. We have added forty-three new members to the church this year, thirteen by profession and vows and thirty by certificate. The Mission Special, Golden Cross, Grenada College Special, Superannuate Endowment and all other claims of the church have been looked after, or will be in due time. We have a fine, loyal bunch of Methodists here at First Church, and no preacher ever had a finer bunch of co-workers than we have in Cunningham, Bullard and Nabors. "'Scusing" the writer, the interests of Methodism are in good hands up this way. Come to see us, Mr. Editor, and we will let you preach to a large congregation any Sunday morning.

MOVING, BUT GETTING NOWHERE.

"One of the things we have to remember nowadays," I heard a speaker say in a recent address, "is that motion doesn't necessarily mean progress."

My mind at once went back to a curious contrivance which a generation or so ago was frequently to be met with. Mr. H. G. Wells immortalizes it in one of his books, and here is his description of it:

"In the days when everybody was bicycling, an ingenious mechanism called Hacker's Home Bicycle used to be advertised. Hacker's Home Bicycle was a stand bearing small rubber wheels upon which one placed one's bicycle (properly equipped with a cyclometer) in such a way that it could be mounted and ridden without any sensible forward movement whatever.

"In bad weather, or when the state of the roads made cycling abroad disagreeable, Hacker's Home Bicycle could be placed in front of an open window and ridden furiously for any length of time. Whenever the rider tired, he could descend—comfortably at home again—and examine the cyclometer to see how far he had been."

Motion without progress—I wonder how many of our activities in the church to-day come under that heading!—Ezra, in Methodist Recorder.

REV. ROBERT SELBY—AN APPRECIATION.

The many friends of the late Robert Selby, while mourning the passing away of this noble man, will be glad to learn something of the circumstances of his sudden and tragic death.

At the time of his death he was in the midst of the second year of his service as presiding elder of the Meridian District. He was an active and industrious man, and, apparently, in the enjoyment of perfect health. To his more intimate friends, however, he was known to be troubled with a weakness of the heart, and since his death it has become known that his physicians had warned him of the possible seriousness of his physical condition.

On Saturday, May 5, he had gone to Pachuta, about thirty miles south of Meridian. He held a quarterly conference Saturday afternoon and spent the night with the Rev. R. A. Allums, the preacher in charge, who reports that in the morning he spoke of having slept unusually well and assured his hostess of his enjoyment of his breakfast. After breakfast he and the pastor, each driving his own car, started on a ride of ten miles to the country church where he had made an appointment to preach at 11 o'clock. On the way he spoke to Brother Allums of feeling ill; but after taking some simple remedy he seemed relieved and resumed his journey. Arriving at the church, the pastor remarked that the Sunday school was still in session, and advised that he remain in his car until time for the morning service. After an interval, he had the pastor called from the church, and was found to be very sick and in great pain. A doctor was sent for and arrived in half an hour; but before his arrival our beloved brother had died while sitting in his car.

The body was brought to Meridian Sunday evening, and on Tuesday morning the funeral services were held in the Central Methodist Church. The services were conducted by Rev. J. L. Decell, Rev. W. B. Jones, Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, Rev. W. W. Moore, and the writer of these lines. The respect and affection in which he was held were attested by a large congregation of ministers and friends. In the afternoon, attended by the family and a number of friends, the body was taken to Vicksburg, where, in response to earnest and repeated requests, the interment took place in the beautiful cemetery of that historic city. He left no dying testimony; but the church treasures the living testimony of a life devoted, laborious, consistent and useful.

Robert Selby gave forty-three years of faithful service to the church, having been admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference in December, 1885. In the pastorate he served every grade of appointment, from the humblest circuit to the most prominent stations in the Conference. He was three times appointed to the presiding eldership, and became conspicuous for his efficiency in this office. He served several years as Conference Commissioner for Emory University, adding substantially to the endowment of that great institution. He was three times a representative of his Conference in the General Conference of the church; and at the time of his death was a member of the Connectional Board of Education.

As a preacher Brother Selby was scriptural and strong. He was thoroughly conversant with the doctrines of the church and believed them implicitly. As a pastor he was diligent and systematic. As a presiding elder he was prompt, faithful, and thoroughgoing. He knew the Discipline, and believed that the preachers should "keep our rules, not mend them." Socially he was cordial and genial, and, to his intimates, affectionate. His family relations were almost ideal. He was an obedient and devoted son, an affectionate and considerate husband, and a loving and not too indulgent father, who took a worthy pride in the confidential relation existing between himself and his children.

In his devoted and consistent life Robert Selby was a worthy exponent of the best traditions of out itinerant ministry, and his name will long be held in affectionate remembrance.

HOW THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE WORKS.

The Prohibition Amendment imposes upon the citizenship of this nation, and especially all officers, not only the duty, but also the obligation to obey and support the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and its resulting laws.

The true test of patriotism is obedience to law. The individual who disobeys the law is not a good citizen.

The Anti-Saloon League is the church in action against the illegal liquor traffic. We are doing all we can to encourage obedience to, and enforcement of the law, by:

1. A program of moral education.
2. Dissemination of prohibition literature.
3. Personal appeal.
4. Guarding against adverse legislation.
5. Public addresses in churches and schools.
6. Co-operation with officers of the law.
7. Helping citizens in matters of enforcement of the law.
8. Helping elect dry men to office.
9. Arousing public sentiment in favor of and obedience to an enforcement of all laws.

From July 1, 1927, to July 1, 1928, we have distributed 1,500,000 pages of prohibition literature.

During that same period of time your superintendent has driven his car 17,685 miles, and traveled more than 20,000 by rail. He has also delivered 189 public addresses.

The Louisiana Anti-Saloon League now has two additional workers, Rev. Spurgeon Wingo, a Baptist preacher, and Rev. S. G. Jones, a Methodist preacher. I bespeak for these brethren your most hearty co-operation.

We are doing our best. But our success depends entirely upon the measure of co-operation we get from you in moral and financial backing.

Come, be a good sport! Play the game! Help make the world a little better by contributing of your love, sympathy and money. Yours for a dry State, a dry nation, and a dry world.

O. L. JONES,
Superintendent Louisiana Anti-Saloon League.

ANOTHER PLAN TO GET MEN TO READ THE BIBLE.

June 28, Mr. John R. Pepper has a very interesting article on "How to Get Men to Read the Bible," and relates the experience of Mr. J. M. Way, of Nashville, and also his own experience with his Sunday school of First Methodist Church, Memphis.

Mr. Pepper's article attracted my attention because of a plan our pastor, Rev. S. L. Pope, has been using in our Wednesday night prayer meeting here in Durant, since February, 1928. I pass the plan along in the hope it may be of some service, and bless others, as it has inspired and blessed our church.

On Feb. 8, the pastor presented to the prayer meeting, thirty-seven in number, a Prayer Meeting Register, with the request that each person register and note the number of chapters read during the week opposite each name. The book of Galatians was given as our Bible reading for the week. This simple plan has now been in operation for six months. Two notable results have been achieved: First, our attendance has increased steadily—a few Wednesday nights ago we had a registered attenance of 125; and, second, I give below the number of chapters we have read these six months:

Galatians, 500; St. John, 303; Philippians, 156; St. Mark, 300; St. Matthew, 807; St. Luke, 762; The Acts, 1,009; Romans, 1,001; Proverbs, 1,075; The Psalms, 1,210; Ecclesiastes, 1,432; James, 454; First and Second Peter, 591; Hebrews, 503; Revelation, 913; Jude and Hosea, 400. Total, 12,436.

The Book for the week is always given on Sunday in our church bulletin, and the entire membership urged to join in reading it. I think it should be noted that this has been accomplished in the prayer meeting, usually considered the smallest attended service in the church. Somehow there has been born a delightful fellowship and oneness and freedom in our weekly services that we never had before; maybe it is the fellowship of the Word of the living God.

I felt impelled to pass this plan along. It has been and is blessing us, and I believe will be a blessing to others who will use it.

A MEMBER.

THE RELIGION OF MODERNISM VERSUS THE CHRISIAN RELIGION.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Part I.

Modernism is defined by Mr. Webster as "certain methods and tendencies which, in Biblical questions, apologetics, and the history of dogma in the endeavor to reconcile the doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church with the conclusions of modern science, replace the authority of the church by purely subjective criteria; so called officially by Pope Pius X." This definition of Modernism is given in Webster's International Dictionary because Modernism had its beginning in the Roman Catholic Church, and in the year 1907 Pope Pius X issued an Encylical concerning the movement in which he denounced the writings of the Modernists.

Later, when the movement began to find its way into Protestantism, it came to mean something slightly different to the definition given it by Pope Pius X. With him it signified the rejection of the authority of the church; in Protestantism it meant the substitution of the "inner experience" for the external authority of the Bible, and the supremacy of reason. Dr. G. W. McPherson says: "Modernism is a good term, and was coined by Pope Pius X to describe the teachings of professors who were dismissed from the Catholic universities of Europe. According to the Pope's 'Encyclical,' it stands for an attitude of mind which rejects the authority of both the Scriptures and the Catholic Church. This term has been taken over by the Protestants, and, to them, it signifies an attitude of mind which rejects the Bible as a basis of authority in the Christian religion, and which views the individual as the sole basis of authority. It signifies the supremacy of reason as above the Bible or a supernatural revelation."

It is to be doubted that the term modernism is "a good term," as Dr. McPherson states, because it carries with it the idea that its teachings are of recent origin when, in fact, in the form of so-called Higher Criticism it dates to Spinoza, a Jew and a pantheistic philosopher, who, in the year of 1670, was among the first to deny the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. In fact, Modernism had its origin in the early ages of the Christian church. Professor Thornton Whaling, D.D., says: "The so-called progressive theology is reactionary, antiquated and anachronistic. It is a reversion to Gnosticism, Neo-platonism, or Pantheism discarded by the churches ages ago. Heterodoxy is just as old as orthodoxy. The Hindu cosmogony and beliefs, the Grecian Idealism and Pantheism, wrought out in different language, with some change of terms, is the core of Absolute Idealism upon which the so-called modern progressive theology is based."

Modernism is insidious and, therefore, the more dangerous. Camouflaging itself in Christian verblage, it is deceptive. While denying every fundamental tenet of the Christian religion and its creed in its entirety, it constantly employs Christian terms and phraseology. It is, therefore, calculated to deceive those who do not read and think for themselves. It is a veritable wolf in sheep's clothing; but those who refuse to shut their eyes to outward appearances may clearly discern its cloven hoofs. So far from being allowed to conceal its real nature with pious vernacular, it should be dragged out into the open. Like the lepers of old, it should be forced to throw up its hands and cry, "Unclean," thereby saving the world from its moral pollution. In other words, it should be taught to be honest toward those who are not familiar with its insidious and sinister methods.

Modernism is tantamount to infidelity—if not worse, since the latter is at least honest. Mr. Robert Blatchford, the socialist infidel and editor of the London Clarion, reviewing a book written by Rev. R. J. Campbell, an English divine, who was among the first religious leaders in Protestantism to preach the principles of Modernism, said: "Mr. Campbell is a Christian minister, and I am an infidel editor; and the difference between his religion and mine is too small to argue about. It is Tom Paine in a white tie—the Ingersoll fist in a white glove—there is nothing that Mr. Campbell believes that I deny, and nothing that I believe that he denies. Mr. Campbell rejects the doctrine of the fall and the atonement. He denies the divinity of Christ, the virgin birth and the resurrection. He denies the inspiration and the infallibility of the Bible, and he rejects the idea of divine punishment and everlasting hell. So do I. Mr. Campbell abandons the orthodox theory of sin, and says that selfishness is sin, and that unselfishness is morality and salvation. So do I."

I have said that Modernism is tantamount to infidelity—or worse. Infidelity is outspoken in its attack upon Christianity; Modernism parades itself in the garb of Christianity. Infidelity is bold in its assaults upon the Christian religion; Modernism is stealthy and insidious. Indeed, by its crafty attacks upon Christianity, Modernism has made the way easy for organized infidelity in America. While I write, there lies on my desk before me a bulletin entitled, "The Bible in the Balance," issued by Charles Smith, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, who teaches the same things taught by Modernism. Hear him: "The so-called books of Moses were not written by Moses. Bible scholars have declared against Mosaic authorship. The Higher Critics have won. Their victory makes the fall of man a fiction and the atonement an absurdity. The descendants of apes need no savior." Now, there it is—how do you like it? Say what you please, if the Higher Critics or Modernists are right, the conclusions of this blatant, blasphemous infidel are logical and irrefutable. Modernism stands or falls with the Darwinian theory of evolution. The wide acceptance of the materialistic theory of evolution by educational institutions and writers on scientific subjects has made organized infidelity possible in a nation whose government was established by Christian men who came to this continent seeking religious liberty—the right to worship God "under their own vine and fig tree."

I have previously said that Modernism is dangerous, and one of the chief things that makes it so is that its adherents parade themselves before the world as scholars. They claim to have a monopoly upon the world's learning. Of course, this claim is altogether without foundation in truth since an innumerable company of the world's best scholars and scientists are devout Christians and humble followers of the lowly Nazarene; but it is distressing to know that the adherents of Modernism have largely succeeded, through their deceptive methods, in leading the average man among the masses to believe their claim of scholarship. Another astonishing consequence of the success of Modernists in this respect is that the vanity of some youthful preachers has led them to adopt modernistic phraseology with the conceited hope of being classed among the world's scholars—such phraseology sounds scholastic to some ears.

One of the most deplorable features in the whole situation in connection with Modernism is the fact that its adherents retain the Christian name, and persist in their questionable course of remaining in the Christian church, eating her bread, and growing fat on her stipends, while denying and rejecting her creed. This situation is aided and abetted by those among us who are known as pacifists—those who refuse to observe their ordination vow to "banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's word." These are they who disparage controversy and cry, "Peace, peace," when there is and can be no peace until the fundamental-modernist controversy is settled ,and settled right. Let it be remembered here that it is the Modernist who is the disturber of the peace, although denying the right of others to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints." Times and fashions may change, but the everlasting gospel of the Son of God never changes, and must be changed neither by men nor angels; accordingly, Paul, in his letter to the Romans, said: "But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, let him be accursed." Let me remind the pacifist that he is commanded to "earnestly contend for the faith," and if he does not do so he becomes a partaker of the evil. The Apostle John said: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him Godspeed; for he that biddeth him Godspeed is a partaker of his evil deeds."

Modernism, which is also known as the New Theology, Liberalism, Higher Criticism, Rationalism, and Progressive Theology, is a religion. Although its false teachings, as I have indicated, hark back to the early days of Christianity, it is nevertheless a real modern religion. While still deceptively holding the Christian name and worshiping at the altars of so-called "scholarship" and psendo-science, it is as much and as truly a religion as Buddhism, Confucianism, or Mohammedanism. The religion of Modernism is tolerant toward all religions. In the May number of Harper's Monthly Magazine there is an article entitled "The Modern Christian Speaks," by Hanford Henderson. I quote as follows from this magazine article: "It is not necessary to attend any church, nor to inaugurate any private religious cult of one's own. I have worshiped in Buddhist temples and at Shinto shrines in Japan; with Hindu and Parsee in India; at the Greek church in Paris and in Tokyo; in Roman Catholic cathedrals in many parts of Europe, and with as deep sincerity as in the parish church at home. I am first of all a world religionist, and after that I am by birth a Christian." The Christian is not a "world religionist." He has but one standard, one authority, the Holy Bible, the infallible word of God, "which is the rule, and the only rule of faith and practice."

The differences between the teachings of Modernism and the principles of the gospel cannot be harmonized. Christianity claims to have a revelation from God concerning several vital subjects, such as God, Man, Sin, the Fall, the Atonement, Salvation, and the Future. At all these points Modernism is pagan, infidel, and thoroughly materialistic. In Part II of this article, I propose to show that the conflict betwen the Christian religion—the religion of the Bible—is irreconcilable with the religion of Modernism.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Rasmussen and Delhi.

Delhi has done great things this year. Starting out with seven or eight churches on the charge it was discovered that it was impossible for Brother Rasmussen to do justice to all his appointments. The presiding elder had a meeting or two with the Board, and they agreed to take Darnell and employ their pastor for all his time. It was arranged to have service every Sunday morning and two Sunday evenings at Delhi, and two Sunday evenings at Darnell.

Brother Rasmussen is an energetic worker and a good leader. There has been organized an Epworth League recently at Delhi. The Sunday school and Missionary Society have been reorganized and quickened. The finances were reported to be in better condition, even with the added expense in the budget, than ever before, and altogether the outlook is very bright indeed.

Delhi is a thriving city of several thousand population. Recently the streets have been paved, and the Chamber of Commerce has been very active in putting their town on the map. One great advantage is that, being on Masons Ridge, it is not subject to overflow, and this has been a very attractive selling point since the flood of last year.

Our church may be counted on to go steadily forward in this city. We need a parsonage, as our pastor has to rent a home, but that will be looked after in time. The members presented a beautiful Whippet coach to Brother Rasmussen on Christmas day, which was a splendid token of their love.

George and Lake Providence.

Lake Providence is one of the most beautiful little cities in Louisiana. Its location is ideal, and the spirit of its people is progressive. We have a strong membership and a splendid church building there. Recently a great impetus has been given to all interests, business and otherwise, by the bringing in of one of the largest gas wells yet discovered. The location of this well is in East Carroll Parish, only a few miles from Lake Providence, and in new territory.

Brother A. D. George, the energetic pastor, has had a great year in this thriving charge. Miss Daisy Davies recently closed a revival which added more than fifty members to the roll, and which quickened the entire membership spiritually.

There is a great future for Lake Providence Methodism. Already there is much talk of industrial developments because of the gas interests that will doubtless double the population there. We will, under the leadership we have, keep pace with the progress of the city, and we may well expect to see a very strong church in the near future in this farthest northeastern city of northeast Louisiana.

ELMER C. GUNN, Presiding Elder.

RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Board of Stewards of the First Methodist Church, Brookhaven, Miss., concerning the recent lynching.)

Be it resolved by the Board of Stewards of the First Methodist Church, of Brookhaven, Miss., in regular meeting assembled this Monday evening, July 2, 1929. That we condemn without reservation the action of the mob which broke into the Lincoln County jail, took therefrom and brutally killed two Negroes, on Friday evening, June 29, 1928;

That we most emphatically condemn the crime of which the two prisoners were guilty in attacking two good white citizens of Brookhaven, and in resisting arrest at the hands of officers of the law, but we feel that the majesty of the law of God and of the law of the land should have been respected and upheld;

That we call upon the Circuit Judge, the District Atttorney, the Sheriff, and all other authorities capable of functioning in such an emergency, to make a full investigation of this terrible affair and leave nothing undone to bring the guilty ones to justice;

That we pledge ourselves, and call upon all law-abiding Christian citizens, in the cleansing of this blot, to lend every aid and encouragement to the forces of the law, and in the future to be alert to prevent the possibility of another such awful deed being perpetrated in our otherwise fortunate community.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR.

It has been discovered that in folders descriptive of Older Girls' Camp, which were recently sent out, the time of arrival of delegates is stated as "morning of the sixth," when it should read, "evening of the sixth."

PAULINE WYNN, Camp Director.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

When Conference came that year we had to move. A presiding elder who knew told me he found me unprovided for and all the appointments were taken except some poor missionary circuits. After he found it out I was placed in his district. Brother Randle said there must be a missionary contribution for the circuit. He was a faithful friend and stood by me.

When we received the appointment my wife said: "That's how your brethren love you, to do you a trick like that." I cried, and it is the only appointment I ever cried over. But I had loved and trusted my presiding elder so fully I was more disappointed over his act than anything else. I thought so much of him that it really hurt me to think he had so little heart.

We went, taking boat at Coushatta to Shreveport, then by train to Gibsland, then by hack to Sparta.

When we arrived, I was met by the principal steward, who said that they did not want any preacher, had no place for one and did not even ask us in his house. What to do I did not know. I asked him if there was no parsonage, and he said there was a cabin up the hill, but nothing in it. I replied, "Well, I am going in it and we will fix it so we can live there."

About that time a Brother Wimberly Tooke (a man I learned to love dearly), came to my relief. "Brother Davis, you and your family will stay at my house." Here we found a hearty welcome and true friends who took a strong interest in us as long as they lived. He was the clerk of the court.

Sister Tooke and my wife got the ladies to work, and they soon had money enough to buy some furniture to supplement what we owned. Then an addition was added to give us sleeping room and a kitchen and dining room. Enclosed a gallery, added a shed side room, and ell kitchen, and there we were.

Eula had been going to Mansfield while at Coushatta, but we could not send her back for lack of funds, so she and Gussie went to the public school.

The second year she was sent to Arcadia to stay with Uncle Henry White's family and go to the school taught by J. W. Beeson.

Our second son was born at Sparta, Dec. 15, 1889. We named him Robert.

While Conference was in session in Monroe our darling Eula died with typhoid fever Dec. 6, 1890. We buried her in the sands of old Sparta, but our hearts were almost buried with her. My wife had the fever first, and we sent for Eula to help nurse her, as Gussie had taken it, too. Eula was home just one week when stricken, and died the twenty-first day. I was sitting by her a day or two before the end came, and I asked her if she was afraid of death should she be called. She replied, "Papa, Jesus is my Savior, all is well."

I held several glorious revivals on this work. During the one in the summer of 1889 in Sparta, Gussie Tooke, Lizzie Crowson and my own Gussie joined the church. Gussie Davis was the youngest of the three.

Eula was a great leader among the young people, having organized a young woman's prayer meeting. She was so earnest in her Christian life.

We went to Downsville charge from here, and were there the years of 1891-92-93. Allie was born here Sept. 21, 1891.

During these years were some of my most successful revivals. Altogether there were about 300 converts and almost as many additions to the church.

On one occasion I started a revival at old Ebenezer church in the D'Arbonne neighborhood, expecting to run ten days, but the interest was so great that even the Baptist preacher told me it would be wrong to close, so with his help we continued three weeks with fifty-six conversions and additions.

We had a great deal of sickness, but God blessed us in saving our family. One winter there was a terrible epidemic of pneumonia over the country. My wife almost died with it. During her three weeks' illness I buried ten or more people in the cemetery visible from our front gallery. Each time I feared she would be the next one, but the blessed Lord heard my prayers and saved her life, with the help of that dear good Dr. Hamilton.

We went to the Oak Ridge circuit from Downsville. Here our little Dalton was the first baby born in that parsonage. She came the 6th of March, 1894. She was a very delicate baby, but has made a fine woman after all.

These were four very pleasant years. Some revivals and some additions at all points on the work. We formed some warm and lasting friendships here.

Next we spent four happy years in Waterproof. We had plenty of preaching to do, plenty of bad roads to travel and plenty of good things to eat most of the time. Usually had a fine garden.

The people gave me a good horse and buggy. This horse died of foot evil, and they immediately gave me a better one. We were sorry when the time limit made us leave Waterproof.

Our next appointment was the St. Helena charge, with the parsonage in Greensburg. When we reached there we found the town and whole circuit divided because of their schools. I sent to both schools. One was supposed to be a Methidst school, but was too long a walk up the hill for Dalton, so we sent her next door to Norvilla Institute.

I tried to unite the people, but in vain. I covered the church, held some splendid revivals, had some additions to the church and got some converts among those already members. Brother Sam Keener was our presiding elder, and we all loved him.

Nineteen and two was a hard year, lots of sickness in the family, but the good Lord stood by us all through it.

Nineteen and three was spent at Zachary. We had a glorious time here with the Masons. My wife, May, Gussie, Emma and I joined the Eastern Star. It is a beautiful work.

This was a semi-station, Zachary and Slaughter. Had good meetings at both places. Started Robert to school at Centenary.

We were moved to Simsport that winter, and spent a year up and down the Atchafalaya River and the various bayous of Avoyelles. Marksville was one of the appointments, and my good friends, the Joffrions, lived there.

Next we went to Lecompte in 1905. That was the year of the last yellow fever epidemic, and we were hampered getting to appointments the latter part of the summer. Collections were poor, and had the girls not worked and saved something from their schools am afraid we could not have financed Emma's wedding. She married Baxter C. Andrews, of Waterproof, June 14, 1905. They got out of the State on their honeymoon just before the quarantine against New Orleans.

When Conference met I was read out for the superannuate relation, much to my surprise. I didn't know what to do. But as several of my children were living at Waterproof, we heeded May's plea and went there.

I did not quit preaching, but held services at several mission places. I was asked to hold services at Clayton, Choctaw Chapel and on Tensas River at the beautiful old Tensas Chapel, not used since the Civil War except one or two fifth Sundays when I was on the Waterproof work several years before. I had good congregations at all these places. The people were eager for the gospel.

My daughter on Black River and Mrs. Sevier, of the Ferriday Hotel, a little railroad town then in the building, arranged for me to hold services in the Ferriday depot, my daughter coming in to help me when she could. From her organizing a Cradle Roll and my preaching in the depot came the organization of the present Methodist church in Ferriday.

RESOLUTIONS—WOMAN'S COUNCIL.

Members of Woman's Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The Woman's Missionary Council meeting in Nashville, Tenn., March 14-21, 1928, emphasized the responsibility resting upon women to use the privileges of citizenship for the common good and recommitted its membership to the principles embodied in the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America by adopting the following resolutions:

1. That the attention of our members be called to their sacred duties of citizenship and that they not only register and vote themselves, but that they be active in getting others to exercise this sacred duty.

2. That we pledge ourselves to vote only for those candidates for offices, national, State, and local, who are committed by precept and example to maintain and uphold the Constitution of our country and to enforce its laws.

3. That we co-operate with the National Woman's Committee on Law Enforcement in their efforts to elect a President and other officials who can be relied on to stand for the maintenance of the Eighteenth Amendment and the enforcement of all laws.

Since the meeting of the Council many groups of women in Conference, district,, and zone gatherings have seriously and unanimously endorsed this resolution or passed others of similar import. The organized womanhood of the church, with a record of fifty years alliance with every force working for prohibition of the liquor traffic takes a firm stand in the present crisis. When such a great moral issue confronts the voters of this nation every Southern Methodist woman's vote must be counted on the dry side and every missionary woman's influence must make itself felt strongly and incisively so that prohibition laws shall not be annulled and that enforcement of the Volstead Act shall become an accomplished fact.

You women who love your State and your country, who have had pride in the "dry South," you who have lifted high the standards of devotion to public welfare and public service, in church and in State, can now prove your devotion and aid your country by your voice and your vote. In the election of candidates for public office let us be keen in analyzing the issue and the man, be unshrinking in interpreting the minds of women to party leaders. Only so can we justify our right of suffrage. Keep the United States on the side of prohibition for the sake of its own citizens; keep faith with our avowed missionary purpose in the encouragement of other nations whose moral forces are engaged in a like struggle.

THE CAPTIVE.

"I slipped His Fingers, I escaped His Feet,
I ran and hid, for Him I feared to meet.
One day I passed Him, fettered on a Tree,
He turned His Head, and looked, and beckoned me.

"Neither by speed nor strength could He prevail,
Each Hand and Foot was pinioned by a Nail.
He could not run or clamp me if He tried,
But with His Eye He bade me reach His Side.

" 'For pity's sake,' thought I, 'I'll set You free.'
'Nay—hold this Cross,' He said, 'and Follow Me.
This Yoke is easy and this Burden light,
Not hard or grievous if you wear it tight.'

"So I did follow Him, Who could not move,
An uncaught captive, in the Hands of Love."

THREE THINGS TO DO.

Three things to do to-day—just three,
Three things that some might say were small,
And yet they mean the most to me.
Who builds a life, or builds a wall,
May leave things out that prove to be
The most important things of all.

Three things to do. I must be kind
To others tolling at my side.
In life what pleasure could I find
If joy I asked but joy denied?
Who leave the footsore far behind,
Can find in progress little pride.

Three things to do. I must be clean.
Soiled wealth has very little worth.
Not only at my task I mean—
I must be decent in my mirth,
Make shop and street and every scene
A little better for my birth.

Three things to do. I must be brave
And take life's battle like a man,
And, if the flag I can not save,
Preserve the honor of my clan,
A man that no one shall enslave,
Because I swear that no one can.

MISS NICHOLS' SENSIBLE PUPPY.

If you are six or seven or eight years old and have a loose baby tooth, you'd better not let the family see this story, for if you do, you may hear it repeated too often. Most of us can remember our own loose baby teeth and exactly how we acted when a well-meaning, grown-up person offered to take it out. Indeed not; we stuck and hung to those baby teeth just as long as they would stick and hang to us, which, of course, was not sensible.

When we were little, the grown folks had all sorts of ideas about how to part us from our loose teeth. A favorite way in the long ago was to tie a thread around a loose hanging baby tooth, and tie the other end to the door knob. When the door opened and jerked the thread, out came the tooth. It didn't hurt a bit, but it was such a surprising thing to have a little tooth go flying away so suddenly that most of us cried after it was all over and there was nothing to cry about. Of course, this was not sensible.

Yesterday Miss Nichols told me about what her sensible collie puppy did when he discovered that one of his baby teeth was loose. He was a soft, fluffy, beautiful puppy, full of fun and play. He was clumsy, because he had grown fast and was so strong he sometimes surprised himself by knocking toddling boys and girls over when he bumped against them too hard.

One day when Miss Nichols' puppy was gnawing at a bone, he suddenly began to cry. He had discovered that one of his front teeth was loose. The loose tooth hurt and made him cry before he knew what was the matter.

Straight over to Miss Nichols walked that sensible puppy and laid his head in her lap. She said it was funny then to see how he tried to talk. He opened his mouth wide and tried to keep it open, while turning his head from side to side, he said: "Bow-yow-yow—how-ye-ow—ye-ow—ya ya—ba- Bow-wow-yow!"

"What is the trouble?" Miss Nichols asked her pet. "I wonder if you have a loose tooth?"

The puppy said he had, as plainly as he could, and then he began to cry with his mouth wide open.

Miss Nichols laughed; she couldn't help it. She then examined the big puppy's teeth. Sure enough, she found a loose baby tooth.

"Why, you sensible little doggie," said Miss Nichols. "I'll take that tooth out for you in a jiffy!"

And she did it, too, just as quickly and easily at that. It didn't hurt a bit. The prancing puppy was so glad that he kissed Miss Nichols's hands with wet, sticky kisses that she didn't appreciate. Then he went back to gnaw his bone in peace.

After that, every time the sensible puppy had a troublesome loose tooth, he walked straight to Miss Nichols and asked her to take it out, which she always did easily and without hurting a bit. Wasn't he a sensible puppy?—Presbyterian Banner.

THAT GRUMBLE MAN.

"I wonder how he got into this house! I am sure the front door was locked. Yes, and the windows are down, but he got in somehow."

"Who, mother?" piped up May, as she lay on the lounge complaining. "Who got into the house? Did he steal anything?"

"Yes, child," replied the mother, looking very sad. "He stole—let me see. Yes, his name was Mr. Grumble; he came to the face of my little girl and stole away the pretty smiles. He changed the expression on her face so that no one to look at her would recognize her as my little girl."

"O mother, you are making fun of me!" cried May, and the tears began to fall in earnest.

"Dear me! Now we shall have rivers, too. If we don't look out; run quickly and open the door, May, so the horrid fellow can get out."

May ran to the door and opened it, then she came back laughing and said: "I chased him out, mother, and he shall never get into the house again if I can help it."—The Lutheran.

A TURKEY WITH HIS HEAD CUT OFF.

"Oh, dear!" sighed Warren, as he came in from school one day; "I wish we didn't have to learn so much about periods and commas and semicolons and such things, I hate them."

Mamma laid down her sewing and said: "Why do you hate them, Warren?"

"I hate to use them, and, besides, I don't think they are of much use. I don't see why we can't write sentences without putting in any punctuation marks."

Mamma smiled, and then, rising from her chair, she went over to the desk and got out a piece of paper and a pencil. Then she wrote: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn half an hour after his head was cut off."

"Why, mummie, how funny!" exclaimed Warren when he read it. "How can a turkey walk around eating corn without a head?"

"He couldn't," replied mamma, "and yet I have written just what I intended to write. I have, however, left out all punctuation marks."

Then she bent down and punctuated the sentence. It read: "The little turkey strutted about the yard and ate corn; half an hour after, his head was cut off."

"Oh, I see," cried Warren, and then and there he resolved to learn all he could about punctuation marks.—The Evangelist.

A DEDICATION.

We have in our library a much-valued book entitled "Our Misunderstood Bible," by H. Clay Trumbull. In that book we find this story:

A Connecticut farmer came to a well-known clergyman, saying that the people in his neighborhood had built a new meeting house and that they wanted this clergyman to come and dedicate it. The clergyman, accustomed to participate in dedicatory services where different clergymen took different parts of the service, inquired: "What part do you want me to take in the dedication?"

The farmer, thinking that this question applied to the part of the building to be included in the dedictaion, replied: "Why, the whole thing! Take it all in, from underpinning to steeple."

That man wanted the building to be wholly sanctified as a temple of God and that all at once. "Know ye not that ye are a temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you?"—Watchman and Examiner.

BLOWN ON BY GOD'S BREATH.

I sailed from Fair Haven last evening as gently and steadily as the clouds sail through the atmosphere. The wind came blowing blithely from the southwest fields and stepped into the folds of our sail like a winged horse, pulling with a strong and steady impulse. The sail bends gently to the breeze, as swells some generous impulse of the heart, and anon flutters and flaps with a kind of human suspense. I could watch the motions of a sail forever; they are so rich and full of meaning. I watch the play of its pulse as if it were my own blood beating there. The varying temperature of distant atmosphere is graduated on its scale. It is a free, buoyant creature, the bauble of the heavens and the earth. A gay pastime the air plays with it. If it swells and tugs, it is because the sun lays his windy finger on it. The breeze it plays with has been outdoors so long. So thin is it, and yet so full of life; so noiseless when it labors hardest, so noisy and impatient when least serviceable. So am I blown on by God's breath, so flutter and flap, and fill gently out with the breeze.—From Thoreau's Journals.

INTELLIGENCE TESTS.

The Presbyterian Banner suggests the following tests:

What has a face and cannot see? (Clock.)
What has legs and cannot walk? (Chair.)
What can sing and is not human? (Victrola.)
What has pains and does not ache? (Window.)
What cannot talk, yet tells how you look? (Mirror.)
What is time and yet a fruit? (Date.)
What is covered, yet is seen? (Book.)
What can walk only when worn? (Shoes.)
What are heard and yet not seen? (Radio concerts.)
What is always found in pairs? (Scissors.)
What is often in the hands of the receiver? (Telephone.)
What is man's vest pocket friend? (Fountain pen.)
What helps us to keep our dates? (Calendar.)
What is it that we must all have? (Birthday.)

"Why is a woman like an umbrella?" asked Tom Henderson.

"Because," replied Sandy Brown, "she always has to shut up when—"

"No; guess again."

"Because she stands in the hall and—"

"No, it's nothing about standing in the hall or anywhere else."

"A woman is like an umbrella because nobody ever gets the right one. Why is—"

"No; that is not the answer."

"Is it because she fades with age?"

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"I am. Is it because it's a good job when you have her in the house?"

"No."

"Because you can't find a pocket in either?"

"No. Have another guess."

"I won't. A woman isn't like an umbrella."

"I knew you couldn't guess it. It's because she's accustomed to reign."—New York Christian Advocate.

THE DEATH OF REV. J. WILSON BROWN.

We announce with sorrow the death of Rev. J. Wilson Brown, a consecrated member of the Mississippi Conference, in the superannuate relation, at Baton Rouge, La., on Juiy 7. He was buried in Magnoiia cemetery at Baton Rouge on July 8. We have no particuiars of the passing of this good man, but the pure and useful life he lived gives assurance that all was weli as he laid his burdens down. He was admitted on trial in the Mississippi Conference in 1881; ordained deacon in 1884, and elder in 1887. He had been in the superannuate relation for a number of years. He was about seventy years old.

We extend sincere sympathy to those who are in sorrow because of his going. We hope to have a suitabie memoir for pubiication in due time.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

"Everything is going nicely on the Abbeville charge," writes Rev. E. L. Jernigan, Abbeville, Miss.

The annuai Red Cross Roll Caii wiii be held this year from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving, Nov. 11 to 29.

A spiendid Sunday School Day program was given at the Nettleton Methodist church recently, Rev. E. M. Shaw, pastor.

Rev. W. E. Dickens, Daleviiie, Miss., an honored superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, writes that he is slowiy improving in health.

Rev. C. E. Wheet, pastor of the Methodist church at Kerrviiie, Tex., has recently visited his father near Kosciusko, Miss., spending his vacation in his boyhood home.

Mr. R. P. Neblett, Kosciusko, Miss., who recentiy underwent an operation at Jackson, Miss., for the removai of her tonsils, is recovering rapidiy and has returned to her home.

Dr. J. W. Billington, of Yazoo City, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, states that he first began to take the paper in 1868. He is 84 years oid and has been a Methodist sixty-five years.

Electric lights are being installed in the city of Jerusalem, and eight boys who have been supported and trained by the Near East Relief have been employed by the contractors to help with the work.

Union services are being held in the park at Louisviiie, Miss., on Sunday nights during the summer. The pastor of the Methodist church, Rev. H. M. Ellis, is holding a meeting at Sturgis, Miss., this week.

Rev. and Mrs. B. C. Taylor, of this city, announce the birth of a son last Sunday night. The Advocate extends ail good wishes for the little one. Brother Taylor is pastor of the Louisiana Avenue Church.

A "midsummer musical service" was heid at the Pascagoula Methodist church, Pascagouia, Miss., on last Sunday evening. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Seils, preached on the subject, "Reiigion: Vision and Power."

Dr. J. B. Mitcheli, pastor of Rayne Memoriai, this city, is spending his vacation with his family at his summer home in Florida. The editor of the Advocate had the privilege of fiiling his pulpit last Sunday morning.

De Land, Fla., where Rev. J. S. Purcell is now pastor, is a beautiful little city of 12,500 people, the seat of Stetson University. Two of Brother Purceli's children will be juniors in the university, and a third will be a freshman.

The First Methodist Church, Greenwood, Miss., had some three hundred communicants at the aitar on the first Sunday in Juiy—a fine record for a church in midsummer. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Feits, is spending his vacation at Biloxi, Miss.

Rev. F. F. Coggins, pastor of the Cedar Bluff charge, North Mississippi Conference, has had the foiiowing pastors to heip him in revivais recently: Rev. V. C. Curtis, at Pheba; Rev. W. R. Lott, at Siloam; Rev. W. N. Duncan, at Cedar Bluff.

The attendance at prayer meeting of the Crawford Street Methodist Church, Vicksburg, Miss., for July has exceeded thus far the attendance for June. One hundred and thirty-two new members have been added at Crawford Street since Conference.

Dr. A. C. Miiiar, editor of the Arkansas Methodist, who had announced his candidacy for lieutenant governor of Arkansas, with fine prospects of eiection, has withdrawn from the race because he cannot support the Democratic candidate for the presidency.

Dr. Carter Heim Jones, distinguished Baptist minister of Atianta, Ga., has accepted a call to the pastorate of the St. Charles Avenue Baptist Church, this city, to fiii the vacancy caused by the election of Dr. W. W. Hamilton to the presidency of the Baptist Bible Institute.

We note with sorrow the death of Mr. John R. Harrell at Gulfport, Miss., on Saturday of last week. He was a brother of Rev. R. F. Harreii, a member of the Louisiana Conference and our pastor at Many, La. We extend sincere sympathy to the sorrowing famiiy and loved ones.

Rev. J. B. King, superannuate member of the Mississippi Conference, whose home is at Auburn, Miss., writes that his wife has been in the hospital at McComb, Miss., for the past four weeks, and he requests prayer in her behalf. We are sure this request wiii be heeded by many friends.

The Aberdeen District Pastors' Association met at Carolina Church, on the Nettleton charge, on Juiy 12. Rev. E. M. Shaw, the pastor, giving us the news items, says: "The attendance of preachers was smaii, but Rev. H. M. Young and Rev. J. J. Baird gave us great messages; and the people —weii, they gave us a great dinner."

Rev. O. A. Clark, pastor of the Kosciusko circuit, recently made a motor trip to Fort Worth, Tex., to visit his brother, Rev. K. E. Ciark, who accompanied him home and will assist him in meetings during the summer. He will apply for admission on trial in the North Mississippi Conference this fail.

Rev. C. N. Guice, one of our general evangelists, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday morning of this week. He was en route to his home in Conway, Ark., after a successful meeting at Picayune, Miss. Brother Guice has one open date—beginning the first of September—between now and the end of the year.

Mr. Austin Joyner, son of Dr. and Mrs. N. E. Joyner, underwent an operation recently in New Orleans for appendicitis, from which he is recovering rapidly. Mr. Joyner holds a responsible position with one of the great business firms of New Orleans, and is active in the work of the First Methodist Church, being on the board of stewards.

Rev. E. W. Day, pastor of the Haughton-Doyline charge, Louisiana Conference, reports that he has recently closed a fine revival, in which he was assisted by Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Minden, in which sixteen adults were received into the church, fifteen agreed to tithe, about fifteen surrendered for life service, and quite a number joined the Missionary Society.

Dr. Barton and Bishop Cannon, not as church officiais but as individuai citizens, have arranged a conference at Asheviiie, N. C., for Wednesday and Thursday of this week to organize "to preserve Southern Democracy by eiection of dry Democratic senatorial, congressionai, and State officiais, and by defeating the wet Tammany presidentiai candidate."

Rev. Thurman Spinks has united with the Methodist church and has been giving fine service in revivai meetings in the Shreveport District. He is one the Spinks boys, known througbout North Louisiana for their effective gospel singing. He would be giad to heip in revival services as preacher and singer. His address is Cedar Grove Station, Shreveport, La.

The work goes weil at Springbiii, La., where Rev. J. E. Selfe is pastor. The saiary was advanced $600 over iast year and is paid monthly in advance. There are three local preachers in the charge, two having been iicensed this year. The mission special was more than paid, and the yeariy quota for the superannuate endowment will be paid. Revival meetings wiii be beid during the fail.

Evangelist Ciaude P. Jones has just closed a fine meeting at Mize, Miss., the three churches of the town oc-operating. This was Brother Jones' second visit to Mize. He goes next to Rolling Fork, Miss., for a meeting with our pastor there, Rev. J. M. Lewis. Those desiring Brother Jones' services for fali dates can reach him at Rolling Fork, or at his home, Hattiesburg, Miss.

The Seashore Camp meeting, Biloxi, Miss., will begin on Thursday night, Aug. 2, and continue till the second Sunday in August. Rev. Luther Bridgers wiii be the preacher in charge, assisted by Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, and neighboring pastors. A cordiai invitation is extended to aii Methodists and members of other churches to attend the meeting and heip make it one of power and blessing.

It wiii be of interest to many readers of the Advocate in Mississippi to iearn of the approaching marriage of Miss Erma Guice, daughter of Rev.

and Mrs. C. N. Guice, to Dr. W. C. Buthman, at Conway, Ark., on Aug. 23. Dr. Buthman is a professor in Hendrix College. Brother Guice, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference but now a member of one of the Arkansas Conferences, is one of our most efficient general evangelists.

The editor of the Advocate, with his family, enjoyed a little vacation in Mississippi recently, making the trip to Yazoo County by automobile. Except for one blowout and six punctures—all occurring at the hottest part of the day on the hottest part of the road—the trip was delightful. We are indebted to Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District and chairman of the Publishing Committee of the Advocate, for editorial assistance during our absence.

The tent meetings held in the Lakeview section of New Orleans, under the auspices of our local Methodist churches, came to a close on Friday night of last week. The preaching of Rev. W. E. Thomas, general evangelist, was highly acceptable, and it is felt that the way has been opened for the establishment of a permanent work in that section of the city. An organization has already been effected in the Industrial Canal section, where a meeting had been previously held.

We thank the author, Rev. Howard G. Roberts, of the Mississippi Conference, for a copy of the pamplet, "The Lost Chord of Methodism and How to Reclaim It," which is a supplementary revision of the author's former booklet on the same subject. The pamphlet is "a brief review of 'the grand depositum of Methodism,' for the preaching of which 'God has raised us up.'" It is an interesting discussion and advocacy of the doctrine of entire sanctificaion, which could be read with profit by all our people. Brother Roberts' address is Flora, Miss.

At the meeting of the Book Committee on July 11 to elect a successor to Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe as Book Editor, Dr. W. P. King, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Athens, Ga., was unanimously chosen to that position. Dr. King was formerly editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, which position he filled with distinction. He is the author of the book, "The Practice of the Principles of Jesus," which has had a wide circulation and high commendation. He is fifty-seven years old. At the same meeting of the Book Committee, Mr. John W. Barton, formerly one of the Publishing Agents, was elected to membership on the Committee to succeed Mr. Jo B. Morgan, Jr., resigned.

WHERE DO YOU LIVE?

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

Where do you live?

This is a fair and courteeous question and meets a ready enough response when referring to the place of bodily residence. But let us pass that by just now, and in the same words ask another question just as fair and courteous: Where do you live?

There are but two kingdoms in which one may make his home: the kingdom of God, ruled by the loving and wise Father-God, and the kingdom of Evil, with Satan, arch-enemy of God and man, at its head. There is no neutral or common ground. Every one must be a citizen of one or the other of these realms. Where do you live?

There are those in each country who live far remote from the border and never tour the other at any time. To know them is to know where they live. They are naturalized and acclimated as far as their spiritual domicile and relationships are concerned. They are in harmony with their Ruler and congenial with their surroundings.

There are those who live in one kingdom during all the week, but make Sunday excursions into the other.

There are those who never erect any permanent residence of abode, but content themselves with tenting, now on one side and now on the other of the dividing line, as pleasure or gain may induce, till they are unable themselves to place their citizenship.

There are others who build so close to the line that their citizenship is always subject to challenge and a skilled engineer must be employed to locate their alliegance. These are constantly subjected to the raids and incursions of the other and opposing realm.

There is no compulsion in the establishment of one's moral citizenship. Each one chooses for himself, establishing his residence, or staking his tent in the most congenial kingdom and under that sovereign most acceptable to him.

Is your government helping you to nobler life and more Christian influence?

Are you living where the best for you and yours is assured?

Are you living where you would have those you love best establish their spiritual homes?

Are you living where it will be well with you in the Great Beyond?

Has your Ruler your best interest at heart?

Where do you live?

NASHVILLE TENNESSEE

Protection Against Old Age

FROM FRANKLIN, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Dr. Harper was with us last Sunday and held our third quarterly conference. He preached a great sermon Sunday morning at 11, as is his custom, to the delight and edification of the congregation. Dr. Harper is making us a good elder and the people of Frankin are very fond of him.

We are planning to hold our revival the beginning of the fourth Sunday in September, with Dr. Harper doing the preaching.

This is our fifth year here, and we would not object if the Bishop and presiding elders would make it six. The people here have been exceedingly kind to us, and the years that we have spent here have been among the most pleasant of our entire ministry.

Come up and spend Sunday with us some time.

Fraternally,

J. A. McCORMACK.

FROM BROTHER MAYO.

Dear Dr. Carley: The requests that you have published for me have brought such fine results, and as there are a few that I have not heard from or secured, I will ask this one time more for relatives or friends who have photographs of the following men who have served Lake Charles as pastor or presiding elder to please let me have a photograph to complete the collection: Robert R. Gill, 1844 to 1848; W. G. Gould, 1804; John Powell, 1845 to 1848; Philo M. Goodwin, 1848 to 1855; Richard Deering, 1849; P. D. Diffenworth, 1850 to 1851; David Kinnear, 1850 to 1851; T. J. Lacy, 1853; J. A. Ivy, 1857 to 1861; Robert T. Parish, 1858; Aleck E. Goodwin, 1866 to 1867; J. M. Monroe, 1868; Jos. D. Adams, 1868 to 1871; J. B. Denton, 1871; James G. Worley, 1872; J. E. Cobb, 1874 to 1877; James J. Billingsley, 1875 to 1876; Silas H. Cooper, 1880 to 1882; Lewis A. Reed, 1882; Christian Keener, 1883 to 1886; Samuel S. Keener, 1884 to 1888; J. E. Denson, 1908 to 1910.

I have had much pleasure in this effort to secure that galaxy of worthies who have labored here and left us such a heritage, and if possible would like very much to have the list in full.

Thanking you for this courtesy and any one for any information, I am,

Yours most truly,

A. M. MAYO.

CHURCH OPENING AT LAKE CHARLES, LA.

Our new building is rapidly approaching completion, and Aug. 12 has been fixed as the date of formal opening.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, pastor of Central Church, Meridian, Miss., will deliver the sermon on this occasion.

A cordial invitation is extended to all our friends to be present.

R. H. WYNN.

A REQUEST FOR INFORMATION.

Dear Brother Carley: I should like to learn from any member of our Conference where the records of the Mississippi Methodist Historical Society are. The last meeting of the Society that I recall was in McComb, in 1918. About ten years before that, twenty years ago, the quarterly conference here voted to give the Society a very valuable historical record of the Fayette charge. I am very anxious to find this record.

J. B. CAIN.

Fayette, Miss.

CHURCH DEDICATION AT DOYLINE, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: Please announce through the Advocate that the Doyline church is to be dedicated on July 29. All former pastors and presiding elders are cordially invited to attend. Dinner will be served for all visitors.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

On account of serious ill health, Mrs. J. E. Brown, Gloster, Miss., who has served so efficiently as Editor of this Department, has been forced to give up the work. Until her successor has been appointed, communications for this page may be sent direct to the Advocate office. These communications should be as brief as possible.—Editor of the Advocate.

GOOD WORK AT MERRYVILLE, LA.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Merryville charge would like to take a little of your space at this time.

We are proud of the fact that we sent three delegates to the Conference in New Orleans, and I am only too sorry I was unable to revisit the delightful city myself. Our delegates certainly brought back great enthusiasm, which continues to leaven our work.

All the departments are in full working order. We are specially proud of our Junior Epworth Missionary Society, and as publicity agent I wish to report what we did on Tuesday last.

The three divisions met at the home of the president of the Epworth Junior Society, and amid the beautiful gardens the children moved about dressed as flowers, making a gay scene indeed. Butterflies were hidden and prizes given to those finding the most; flower games were played; each department superintendent told her story for the week, and after delicious refreshments were served to all mothers, Woman's Missionary Society and children we felt that we had had a delightful time. We plan the Jubilee birthday party to be held in the church some Sunday night in July, so you see the Merryville Missionary Society is carrying on. MRS. F. B. HILL.

MINDEN DISTRICT MEETING.

The district conference of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Minden District was held in Minden, June 13. Notwithstanding a downpour of rain all day, we had a good registration, and many auxiliaries were represented.

In the absence of our District Secretary, Mrs. Dan Kelly, the conference was conducted by our State president, Mrs. V. H. Spinks. Her efficiency and her wonderful personality held us spellbound.

After devotional, business session was at once entered into. Encouraging reports were given, making us know that our work is growing in interest every day. Next came roll call of zones, and Mrs. Spinks impressed upon us the necessity of zone work.

A questionnaire, conducted by Mrs. Wilson, of Coushatta, was most helpful and interesting. Questions upon every phase of our work were asked and discussed. Mrs. Wilson won our hearts by her patience and helpful suggestions.

Just here, visitors to the conference were introduced, among them a citizen from far away Korea, Rev. J. O. Kim, Secretary of Sunday Schools of his country; Rev. A. K. McLellan, Secretary of Sunday School Extension of Louisiana; Mrs. W. H. Martin, of zone one; Mrs. E. L. Walker, of zone two; Mrs. Kinney, State president W. C. T. U.; Rev. and Mrs. K. W. Dodson; Rev. and Mrs. L. I. McCain. After introductions, Miss Ernestine Fletcher gave a voice number, "I Love a Little Cottage," followed by prayer, after which the call for lunch.

Mrs. Blake, president of the Minden auxillary, and her efficient co-workers had everything in readiness for the comfort of every person attending the conference, and they saw to it that every man, woman and child found the big dining room, where a two-course luncheon was faultlessly served.

The call to business came immediately after lunch, and all the convention joined in singing the beautiful song "Tidings."

Rev. J. O. Kim gave an interesting address, telling of the customs, and impressing the needs of his country along religious lines, asking our help and urging us to pray for them.

A letter to our district secretary from National Vice President of Woman's Missionary Society, was read, asking that special prayers be held for National Conventions in Kansas City and Houston; that we implore God's guidance that he may direct the W. C. T. U., and that we may not fail.

"High Lights of the Council" was next on the program, given by our own State president, Mrs. Spinks. I wish it were possible to tell of the many beautiful uplifting thoughts that came to us as the wonderful message was presented by this gifted, efficient woman. She made us feel that it is a distinct honor and privilege to belong to this great army of Christian women, who are forging to the front along every line of Christian service, impressing upon us the necessity of giving time, talent, prayer, and money that our missionary workers may be better equipped. She brought a message from Mrs. Peabody on prohibition and law-enforcement—and the privilege of the ballot. Should any difference of opinion arise in the home on account of politics, Mrs. Peabody suggests the following toast to our husbands: "My love is yours, my soul is God's, my vote is mine." Mrs. Spinks' message will linger with us and will inspire us to press onward to a greater future, making us realize that all great things are really won by faithfulness and enthusiasm.

Mrs. King, State president W. C. T. U., addressed the conference. Her theme, "Good Citizenship," was well presented and received. She told us why the wets want to elect the next President. She is a forceful speaker, and she knows her work well.

After giving Minden a rising vote of thanks for her hospitality the conference voted to hold the next district meeting at Coushatta, and the benediction was said by Rev. L. I. McCain, thus closing an interesting meeting and a day well spent, leaving us with a broader vision, a deeper conception, and a purpose in our hearts to be true and loyal workers in his vineyard.

MRS. IRA SHIELDS,
Secretary.

DISTRICT MEETING, BATON ROUGE DISTRICT.

Hammond was hostess to the Missionary Society of the Baton Rouge District, about one hundred delegates attending. The meeting opened at 9 a.m., June 14, with Mrs. Stewart, District Secretary, presiding. The church and annex were artistically decorated in colors of gold to commemorate the fiftieth anniverary of the work.

After electing a secretary the assembly joined in singing Jubilee hymn No. 294. Devotional was conducted by Miss Ora Hooper, rural worker. She very beautifully brought out the fact that Jesus Christ is the true vine and we the branches.

Short prayer was given by Miss Hooper, followed by welcome address by Mrs. McGehee, president Hammond auxiliary, which was very appropriately responded to by Mrs. June, of Amite. Honored guests and visiting pastors were then introduced by Mrs. Stewart.

Reports from the different auxiliaries were then heard and showed that the work as a whole is making fine progress. Amite reported the recent organization of three departments of children's work. Baton Rouge, First Church, reported good work in all departments—Jubilee work especially being stressed; their different circles having been named for the different missionaries in the foreign field.

Hammond reported progress in all departments, with pledge for year having been increased and well organized prayer circle. Bogalusa and Jackson reported work well organized. Live Oak has especially good work with children.

Ponchatoula had a good report for small membership, and also only auxiliary in district holding charter for children's work. Zachary has work fully organized and one hundred per cent Voice subscriptions, with organization of one Missionary Society and one Epworth League to their credit.

Ethel has good Bible and Mission study classes, also Epworth Junior organization doing good work. Slaughter and Tangipahoa, two Jubilee auxiliaries, reported good work, fully organized.

Mrs. Chaney gave a splendid and helpful talk on Standard of Excellence.

A telegram of good wishes was read from Mrs. Sims, Conference Superintendant of Voice, who is in Greenwood, S. C.

The meeting was made more interesting by the presence of Miss Neil Drake, missionary from China, who gave a most interesting talk on the work in China. The Chinese are looking forward to same progress we have made. These women are taking care of their work in an efficient manner, all their officers being their own women. The newest addition to their work is a paid traveling secretary, who also does evangelistic work.

Mrs. Roy Stewart gave a very beautiful talk on our "Jubilee Year," and touchingly brought out the fact that we are indebted to God for our every accomplishment.

Following this, recognition service was very ably conducted by Mrs. Woodward, in which fourteen pioneers of the work participated.

Quiet half-hour service was then conducted by Miss Drake. She brought out in striking terms that Jesus is our haven in time of trouble.

A very effective and appropriate candle-lighting service was then conducted in the church annex, prior to the serving of a delectable two-course

In 5 MILLION HOMES TONIGHT
A host of babies will enjoy sound sleep tonight. And their parents will have unbroken rest. Castoria is the cause of this contentment in a multitude of homes.
Good old Castoria! Children cry for it. Mothers swear by it. Not a household where there is an infant should ever be without it. A few drops of Castoria quiet Baby in a perfectly innocent manner. It is natural slumber that follows. Castoria is a purely vegetable product. No opiates. No narcotics. Of any kind.
Now you know why trained nurses give Castoria as often as an infant is ailing, or even restless. And why doctors tell mothers it is the first and only home remedy when Baby has constipation, colic, diarrhea, or other upset. It is made for babies, and safe to give babies, and other things are not.
Fletcher's Castoria is "old-fashioned" if you count its fifty years, but it's an old-fashioned mother, nowadays, who worries along without it. Twenty-five million bottles bought last year! Think of the number of mothers who rely on Castoria! All these mothers can't be wrong! To keep a bottle in the house is a precaution you owe your little one.
Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

luncheon by the Hammond ladies.

During the lunch hour talks were made by Mrs. Yawn, on "Looking Backward," and by Mrs. Reynolds on "Looking Forward."

Mrs. Owen very ably conducted afternoon devotional, demonstarting the fact that prayer is strength and power. She then gave a very helpful and instructive talk on children's work, and urged all auxiliaries to have complete organization of this work.

Following this Miss Hooper made a plea for more members to be brought into the Missionary Society through the Gipson Circle.

It was a pleasure to have Miss Emma Burress, of Scarritt, tell what Scarritt means to our work.

Mrs. Stewart urged all auxiliaries to be "more missionary" and carry on all work in all departments according to Conference minutes and by-laws, and also to have Jubilee bookshelf. She especially urged the organizing of prayer leagues and the ten per cent increase in membership, dues, etc.

A rising vote of thanks was given the Hammond ladies for their splendid lunch and entertainment in every detail.

The day was all too short for the work to be done, and the afternoon speakers could not do justice to their topics. The meeting was one of deep spirituality, and the keynote of the entire program was prayer.

A full day of profit and inspiration to all present was closed with a prayer by Mrs. Owen.

Secretary.

LAUNDRESS BENEFITED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Nashville, Tenn.—"I cannot say too much in favor of the medicine. I was in a run-down condition. I worked in a laundry but my health got so bad that I had to give up work. I got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began taking it and every time I feel run-down I get another bottle. It is an excellent tonic and I am willing to tell others about it. People take me to be much younger than I am."—Mrs. Harry Bornstein, 406 Second Ave South, Nashville, Tennessee.

ELIZABETH SOCIETY.

A delightful outing was enjoyed on Thursday afternoon, June 28, when the Elizabeth Methodist Missionary Society entertained their local friends and the Methodist Missionary Society of Oakdale in a luncheon and swimming party at the Elizabeth Club on "Ten Mile." The Oakdale visitors were Mrs. Swarthout and daughter, Mrs. Marier, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Beck, Mrs. Hood, Mrs. Cartwright, Mrs. Rhodes, Miss Griffin, Mrs. Jennings and daughter.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Ahrens, Rev. I. T. Reames, of Eunice, exhibited beautiful and educational scenes of the Yellowstone National Park, under the auspices of the Methodist Missionary Society. Those present were very appreciative of the scenic values and patriotic spirit of the program, and sincere thanks are tendered to Mr. Ahrens and Brother Reames.

The Methodist Missionary Society of Elizabeth also staged a beautiful and impressive Peace Pageant at the school auditorium Monday night of this week. The work was directed by Mrs. W. A. Poinboeuf, Mrs. Lester Williams and Mrs. J. D. Collins. The idea of Freedom, Brotherly Love and National Peace was beautifully brought out, and the effect was soul-stirring. An expression of high praise was voiced by those present.

At the conclusion of the pageant a patriotic talk was made by Rev. H. B. Hines.

ZONE 3, MINDEN DISTRICT.

Zone 3 of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Minden District met June 29, 1928, at Hall Summit, with Mrs. J. B. Fulton, zone leader, in charge.

A delicious lunch was served by the Hall Summit society in the dining-room of their church, after which the following program was rendered:

Devotional, by Rev. K. W. Dodson, presiding elder; solo, "Little Sunbeams," by Miss Karen Sue Stewart, of Hall Summit; roll call; reports from each society; solo, by Mrs. Clarkson, of Coushatta; history of each society; reading, "The Old Hymns," by Mrs. Ashley Perry, of Coushatta; talks, "What the Missionary Society Has Meant to Me;" volunteer talks; talk, "Through the Missionary Society to Where?" by Mrs. C. C. Hattaway, of Campti; talk, "Missionaries from Louisiana," by Mrs. P. O. Lowrey, of Campti.

There were representatives from each society, and Rev. K. W. Dodson, Rev. J. B. Williams, Rev. P. B. McCullen, Mr. Ives, and Mr. Clyde Fulton were visitors. Five new or Jubilee members were reported.

The meeting adjourned to meet at Davis Springs the next time.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Rev. E. G. Mohier and the writer of these notes are attending the school at Mount Sequoyah, from the sixth to the nineteenth of this month. We are putting six hours each day in class work and two hours each day in worship and in attending lectures. We are working as hard here as if we were at home. It is necessary to study if we are to lead the workers in the Conference. For one to appreciate the progress we are making in North Mississippi, it is necessary to get out and see what the leaders are doing in other sections of the church. The work we are doing at Grenada College in our training school is not surpassed by that done anywehere that I have been. The spirit of the Greneda school is touching and toning up the religious life of many churches in the Conference.

The people we meet over here are genuinely kind and brotherly. They are ready to go out of their way to render any service possible. This seems to be a universal trait. Rev. John C. Chambers took me out for a drive of more than one hundred miles. It seems that the inhabitants are advertising this entire section as playground of the Ozarks. The mountains and valleys are covered with apple orchards and vineyards. The people seem anxious to share their country with others. This is a fine place to visit to make us appreciate the advanges we enjoy in Mississippi.

The purpose of observing Childhood and Youth Week is to call attention to the value of childhood. The Christianty of the church can be measured by what the church thinks of children. It is well to save the lost, but it is better to prevent children from being lost. Let us do something for our little ones before it is too late.

Every superintendent will do well to check up his school to discover the weak points, that every officer and teacher may center their attention upon these weak points and thus make the school effective.

We have had more than one hundred to volunteer to teach a class for credit. There is time to do this before the meeting of our Annual Conference if the work is begun by the first of August. Help others and you help yourself.

Brother Superintendent, ask your treasurer to send the amounts due on the Dual Special and Sunday School Day. You do not want the money to be lost or misdirected.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Your Conference Superintedent and Dual-Extension Secretary motored to Mount Sequoyah. Brother Hull has brough his famiiy and camped along the way. Mrs. Chambers and baby and Mrs. C. W. Sullivan are in my party.

Our first stop out of Jackson was at Louise, where we deposited our children with Rev. and Mrs. I. H. Sells, through whose kindness we were able to make the trip. Louise has a fine, beautiful, usable church, which can well serve as a pattern for others desiring to build. It is a beauty, and the pastor and people have a right to be proud of it.

We left Louise at 8:30 Tuesday morning and were making good time —had a puncture and lost ten minutes; got to Greenville about ten minutes after 11, and they told us the ferry ran on the hour; so we moved slowly along to the river when I looked up and saw the smokestack of the boat and hastened up just in time to take the last place on the ferry. Got into Lake Village and got lunch. We first went to a cafeteria over the lake, and about the time we had our waiters and were looking for a table, the refrigerating machine began to leak, and filled the building with fumes of gas. A waiter ran into us, upsetting our tray, and there was a general stampede. We went to another restaurant and got a nice lunch and pulled out for Pine Bluff, Little Rock and Hot Springs.

About 3:30 we discovered we were hungry, and uncovered a lunch Miss M. M. Jones had fixed for us, and we sure did enjoy it. Fried chicken, ham —it was exceedingly satisfying and staying.

It was so early when we got to Little Rock we decided to go on to Hot Springs, arriving there before sundown. Got a delightful room, and walked about to see some of the town. The next morning we went to Remel Dam. I never saw as many people fishing in one spot before. The banks of the river were thronged. It is worth a trip there to see this big power piant. It is a wonderfui piece of engineering.

Coming back into Hot Springs, one of the socket joints of the gas feed came loose, and as I was struggling to get started to fix it, a gentieman stopped, and in ten minutes had it fixed, and we were on our way. I discovered this friendly, neighborly act is typical of the peopie of Arkansas. We returned to Hot Springs, went through the ostrich farm and through the Government reservation. Then we had dinner, went to the hotel and rested; then on to Little Rock, with a drive over town; then on our way to Russellville, where we spent the night. Then at 7:30 we were on our way.

This day was the Fourth,, and picnics were under every grove, and the people lined the banks of the creeks and rivers fishing and swimming. We passed through Blackville. The blacks were out in a picnic. The road was alive for miles with Negroes, all sorts and sizes and kinds. We passed, it seemed, on a hiliside, actualiy acres of peoples, we presume out for enjoyment, and evidentiy a political gathering.

Soon after leaving Russellville we began to climb, and it was most thrilling experience—a stop for water, and found the starter out of order, the engine hot, the in-crank bent, and the pin in the crank loose. We had the misfortune to rub the soider off the radiator at this opening and got a big leak; then up and on we went—up and on. On a big grade we were shoved to the side and almost in a hole, and the heat killed the engine; then some more twisting; then a missing of the road and down a beautiful road to a pleasant little town on the railroad; then back and up again and on. Then we began to come down "hair pin curves," our first experience with this sort of curve, and down and down we came and down. At the foot of the mountain we came to a repair shop, where the starter boit was put in, some gum purchased and the leak checked, and thence to Fayetteville, and dinner. The dealer took us to Mount Sequoyah, and took the car and put it in fine shape.

It is worth every effort to make this trip and see this country. I have never traveled among a more kindly, neighborly people—assistance, information, service at every turn of the road. Blessings upon them!

Mount Sequoyah is a beautiful place and there is a fine spirit among the workers. Our work has begun in a most definitely statesmanlike manner. It is hoped that from this work there will come plans which will prove exceedingiy helpfui to ali workers.

The weather is pleasant and cool enough to be comfortable.

Remember the workers as they go from piace to place in the Cokesbury work. Pray earnestiy.

What of My Boy's Future?

Many parents are asking this question. Their boy comes first and his training for the future is of vital concern. Prof. Robt. K. Morgan knows and loves boys. For thirty-five years he has devoted his iife to them. It has been a life of dedication to the young manhood of America. He understands and helps them. All his former pupils can attest to this.

He wishes to train your boy, prepare him for college and life. He recognizes in every boy possibilities which if developed will make him a leader. He loves to develop that trait in boys. His facuity is a strong one. The price is very moderate and the climate is ideai. A postai addressed to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., wiil bring catalogue and full information.

SUNDAY SCHOOL INSTITUTE AT DECATUR.

The third annual session of the Newton and Jasper County Sunday School Institutes met in joint session at Decatur on Sunday, July 1. Representatives from Chunky, Bay Springs, Stringa, Louin, Decatur, Hickory, Conehatta, Lawrence, Montrose, Garlandsville, Newton, Rose Hill, Homewood, Hopewell, Mount Zion, and Dunbaw schools joined in making it a most successful and profitable day.

Mr. O. C. Hull, Dual Extension Secretary of the Conference Sunday School Board, presided at the request of the presidents of the two county institutes. Following a worship service, led by Rev. A. S. Oliver, pastor at Decatur, Mrs. F. L. Van Alstyne presented the matter of the change in the organization of the Home Department of the Sunday school. Rev. J. C. Chambers delivered an address on the "Rural Situation in the Mississippi Conference" that not only enlightened the group considerably as to the work that is to be done for the on-going of the kingdom in our Conference, but filled all with a new inspiration and determination.

Section meetings were held after a delightful dinner under the trees. This lovely meal was served by the ladies of the Decatur church.

The section for officers and workers with adults was led by Rev. J. C. Chambers. Mrs. F. L. Van Alstyne, Conference chairman of Adolescent Work, led a section meeting for discussion of the problems of workers with boys and girls of adolescent age. The Elementary workers were led by Mrs. J. E. Oakey and Miss Maggie May Jones.

A business session with reports from sections, election of officers and acceptance of the invitation to meet next year at Hopewell closed the session. Mr. O. C. Hull was elected chairman of the Bi-County Institute.

Epworth League

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: I feel that I will have more readers of my letters this year than last, as a resolution was adopted at Assembly that at least one subscription to the Christian Advocate be placed in every Epworth League in the State, that the Leaguers may read my letters and have them placed upon their bulletin boards. I try to present the biggest phases of our work in my weekly letters, and I feel that this is the best possible way that I can get it before my Leaguers.

May I say here that our method for raising our finances to maintain our State work this year will be the same as last, that is, through our Mission pledges, Conference Promotion, and Field work pledges, observance of Anniversary Day in every church, and through personal gifts. Last year we received a number of "dollar men pledges" from over the State. Different interested members pledged one dollar per month for the twelve months. Many of these pledges were paid in full at the beginning of the year. We are anxious for these parties to repeat their gift again for another year and to have several new pledges added to the list. This amount is so small from each individual, but it means so much to our big program. I wonder if the older members of our church realize that at least seventy-five per cent of our League members are not wage-earning and have no income whatever. How can they finance a great program like ours, unless they receive assistance outside of their organization? You cannot invest your money in a better way than in molding Christian character among the younger generation. We solicit your help and pray that you may realize our need. Our State treasurer is Mr. F. H. Riggs, Monroe, La., and he will be glad to receive any contributions sent him.

Our new officers for the coming year are anxious to get to work, and I am sure that you are anxious to know to whom you are to report. They are as follows: State president, Mr. Charles N. White, Alexandria; vice president, Mr. Alfred Hansan, New Orleans; secretary, Miss Elizabeth Daniel, Pineville; treasurer, Mr. F. H. Riggs, Monroe; Era agent and recreational superintendent, Mrs. R. Jackson, Jr., New Orleans; life service superintendent, Rev. G. M. Hicks, New Orleans; and dean of assembly, Rev. James B. Grambling, Grand Cane.

In each district there are two secretaries, one promoting Senior Epworth League work, and the other Hi League and Epworth Junior Society work. They are as follows: Alexandria District, Miss Frances Sloan, Alexandria, and Miss Agatha Brewer, Lecompte; Baton Rouge District, Miss Inez Easton, Baton Rouge, and Mr. Willis Beck, Hammond; Lake Charles District, Miss Elsie Whitman, Lake Charles, and Miss Flavia Spell, Rayne; Minden District, Miss Mary Searles, Minden, and Miss Carmen Moffit, Selma; Monroe District, Mr. W. L. McDuff, Chase, and Miss Helen Hunt, West Monroe; New Orleans District, Miss Lillian Hanson, New Orleans, and Miss Iris Fincke, New Orleans; Ruston District, Miss Elizabeth Murphy, Arcadia, and Mrs. Doyle McDonald, Lisbon; Shreveport District, Mr. Carl Lueg, Centenary College, Shreveport, and Miss Hazel Lea Nowell, Mansfield.

These secretaries are very anxious to make their district the best in the State, and they need your constant co-operation to do so. Make your reports on time and always be prompt in answering their letters when they write you.

I am a bit disappointed in the delay of the Leaguers writing me about their going to Mount Sequoyah. If you anticipate going, please write me your plans. We are anxious for a big representation, and we promise you a big time if you join the crowd.

Trusting that your League work is continuing at its best during the summer months, I am as ever,

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

"KNOW MISSIONS ORATORICAL CONTEST."

Missions and Non-Christian Practices in America.

By Miss Ireue Shields, Minden District Representative.

(Miss Shields, through illness, was unable to take part in the Conference competitions.)

The church's real task to-day is the evangelism of the world. We must turn our study to missions if we would be prepared to meet the problem of the church's business rather than its pleasure. With this end in view, the young people of the church are constantly studying the different phases of the missionary enterprise, that they might, when they come into leadership, be better able to carry on the real business of the church. And if we doubt that missions is the real business of the church, let us ask ourselves this question, "If the missionary enterprise is not the chief business of the church, what is?"

At this moment the eyes of all other nations are turned toward Christian America with this question, "Why does not America live up to the standards her missionaries bring to us? If Christ is such a wonderful Savior, why does he not save the people of America?" These are the questions the missionaries we send them have to face. If we in Christian America cannot "Put God first," how can we expect them, who have only our example, to live the better life? Often we exchange our religion for a mere form or ceremony, and join the church, because it is "the thing to do," "good business policy," or "all the best people are doing it." Or sadder still, many times the church is used as a "cloak" for evil deeds. When this superficial religion is banished and the religion of the consecrated self to Christ is followed, then, and only then, will our religion be worth taking to others.

We would not leave the impression that our Christ is not worthy to be sent; he is the Light and Life of all nations, and always will be until the end of time. It is simply our synthetic religion which is not worthy of being exported to other lands.

Nor would we paint the picture too black, for we would remember those thousands of deeply consecrated, earnest Christians, who are daily striving to live the Christ-like life. But the percentage is far too small, and until we realize the importance of Christianizing the church, we can never really say that our religion is worth sending. There is too much church in America, and too little Christ.

"Seven church bells ring through drear and golden weather,
Seven tones assured and deep, fall
as discord upon my heart;
The weary while, I sit and watch
Christ's foolish sheep
Assembling on their seven hills apart."

We have been saying that America is not setting the right example and is not living the consistent life, but in what way is this true? Let us first consider the traffic in young girls: Yes, I know there are many who say that this is no longer carried on in the United States, but these people are simply misinformed, or they are seeking to hide themselves or some colleague. The old white slave trade is still carried on in Christian America, and because it is, there is a challenge to every true Christian man and woman to stop this shameful sin and blot on our country.

Second, let us consider the "bootlegging" problem. The world is challenging America on the Eighteenth Amendment. It is true that the United States is the soberest nation on earth, but are we going to keep it so? Our parents have passed this law, and it is up to us, and future generations to keep it enforced, and what can help us more than a deep and abiding love for the Master, for when we love him, we do not want to do anything that would injure our bodies. But even with the Volstead Act passed and in force, there is the poison "stuff" the bootleggers bring into our nation, which is the cause of so many, many deaths. There must be some remedy for this evil. It is for us to find.

Again, how can we go and preach the gospel of monogamy to the countries where polygamy is practiced, when we have a divorce law in our own country which not only ruins society, but breaks up the home, which is the most sacred institution ever organized by God, outside the church. How can we expect them to accept our teachings if we hold up such an example as this? How can we expect better things of them, if we do not set the better example?

What else? Corrupt politics. Why, in our country, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," a rich man goes free, no matter what he has done, while the poor must go to prison or suffer capital punishment for their deeds. In our Declaration of Independence there is a statement that "The fact is self-evident that all men are created free and equal." Why cannot all men here be treated as such, whether they be rich, poor, young or old? When we have men who are true Christians in all offices in this country, we will see a far greater nation than we have to-day, as far ahead as our government to-day is ahead of that a thousand years ago.

These are not the only evils in our country, but they are enough, and if they were corrected, how a thousand hearts would rejoice, and how "our Father who art in Heaven" would be made glad. Remember, we are to set the pace, we are to give the example for the world in Christian living, for upon this idea, our nation and our government was founded.

The remedy we need reminds me of a joke I heard:

"Once there was an old Negro preacher who one Sunday morning told his congregation that he would preach on any subject they would give him, any subject, no matter what it was.

"Every member was silent for a moment, then one sister spoke up and asked him to preach on 'pills.'

"The poor old man thought he was stumped for a while, but at last his face lighted up, and he began:

"'Well, breddern and sistern, it's just this way: There is blue pills, and pink pills, bitter pills and sweet pills, large pills and small pills, but what we all needs to take mos' is the good old-fashioned gos-pill.'"

And, friends, the "good old-fashioned gospel" is what we need most of all.

Already, the heathen nations have flung back to us, "Physician, heal thyself." If heathen nations see that we are not applying the principles of the Christian religion, as taught by the Master, then surely we should turn the searchlight upon ourselves and remove the beam from our own eye, before we try to remove the mote from theirs. If all this is true, then it is indeed time for us to ask ourselves this, "Whither are we bound in America?"

We admit with shame that we are seeking treasures of the world, that our minds are bent upon material things. We seek wealth, ease, comfort, and pleasure. We are not willing to take up the hard and straight road the Master trod. We are centered in self. And since the term "Missions" is not confined to foreign lands, then would it not be expedient for us to take up the task of enlightening and converting our own beautiful America, the land so fair, free and blest with all the joys that God can give? Let us make ourselves worthy of the name, Christian America.

Dangerous Varicose Veins Reduced or Money Back

This Simple Home Treatment is Giving Amazing Results

Rub Gently and Upward Toward The Heart as Blood in Veins Flows That Way.

If you or any relative or friend is worried because of varicose veins, or bunches, the best advice that anyone in this world can give you is to ask your druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and apply as directed night and morning to the swollen, enlarged veins. Then you will notice that they are growing smaller and the treatment should be continued until the veins are of normal size. So penetrating and powerful is Emerald Oil that even Piles are quickly relieved and absorbed.

that seek the uplift of our people, and that seek to impress the mind of the Master upon the daily lives of our own people, I do solemnly declare that the most efficient method of serving our generation in the whole complex realm of the modern life of our America is by devoting our deepest purpose and highest powers to the practice of our Christian religion. It is this only that shapes human ideals. When we help America's boys and girls, her men and women, to become intelligent consecrated Christians, we are taking the shortest road to the amelioration of all our social, political, economic, and personal ills. When we follow Christ, we lead the world to him, and he is the world's only hope.

And, so, with a vision of the things displeasing to God, and clearer vision, too, that these will surely pass away, and be remembered no more, we say with the poet:

"Thy will be done!'
Lord, when it is
Earth will forsake her miseries
And turn again to Thee, where is Sure hope of full recoveries.
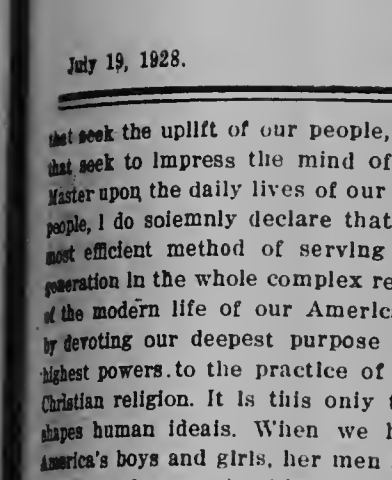
So, day by day,
In faith, we pray
'Thy will be done!'

"'Thy will be done!'
Until it is
Life cannot know the untold bliss
Of full and free and sure release
From all that now doth mar its peace.
So, day by day
In hope we pray,
'Thy will be done!'

"'Thy will be done!'
Thy good will be done
For every man such happiness,
Such freedom from life's cares and stress
As never man did yet possess.
And so, each day,
With joy we pray,
'Thy will be done.'"



SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY REPORT.

My report from the sub-depository of the Southwestern Agency of the American Bible Soiety, located at 900 St. Charles Street, New Orleans, La., for the month of June is as follows:

The distribution has been 71 Bibles, 505 Testaments and 4,277 Portions, making a total of 4,853 volumes, 2,579 of which were donated. We also distributed 14,000 religious tracts and papers.

We visited eight different towns and distributed Gospels at fifty other where the train stopped.

One of the most interesting places that we visited was Amite, La. We visited the jail and gave out gospels there; we furnished one blind man with a gospel of Matthew in American braille. I made a short talk at the First Baptist Church, First Methodist Church and the First Presbyterian Church and one colored Methodist church. Miss Viola Wade spoke at the Church of Christ. We had prayer in several private homes. We were kindly received in all the churches.

Rev. Sam R. Gordan, of the First Baptist Church, said to us, "You are welcome to speak in my church. Any man that has done the work that you have done has the right of way in this church." He later told his people that I had done more good than any man in the State or the United States. In my talk I told the people that I was not to get the credit but to God he longed all the glory, and that he was only using me.

Mr. Gordon told of my going into a bank in Arizona to buy some New York exchange, and the banker telling me that any man that would come to this town to sell Bibles need not pay any exchange in that bank.

The most of our outside work in New Orleans has been done in the industrial district. We made many calls at the noon hour.

Yours in his service,

G. A. PERKINS.

The door for the gospel is wide open in White Russia. In a series of twelve services held recently in nine villages around Derechin by the Rev. John Witt, the average attendance was 350 at each service. The little cottages were so crowded that the people stood during the full two hours of service, and because of the crowded conditions they had much trouble in keeping the little kerosene lamp from going out because of lack of oxygen.

NEW ORLEANS

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 75—No. 30. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mi. issippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South Whole No. 3711

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1928. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

VERY POSITIVE.

The editor received a letter the other day from a highly esteemed friend, in which the writer courteously expressed keen disappointment at what he called "the negative attitude" the Advocate has taken in connection with the present political situation.

As a matter of fact, it has taken a very positive attitude.

That attitude, expressed briefly but specifically, is as follows: Under its present editorial management the Advocate will not engage in a political campaign for the defeat of one candidate for the presidency of the United States, or for the election of another.

The editor of the Advocate as an individual citizen, who has been qualified to vote since he was twenty-one years old and who has exercised his right of franchise in practically every election since that time, will go to the polls next November, unless providentially hindered, and vote consistenly with his lifelong convictions, preaching, and practice as a bone-dry, teetotaler prohibitionist. In his capacity as a citizen he is ready and willing at all suitable times and places to give a reason for the faith that is in him; but he will not, either in the columns of the Advocate or in the pulpit, carry on a campaign either for or against any candidate now before the country for the presidency.

The editor takes this very positive attitude for several reasons: In the first place, while a great moral issue is involved in the present campaign, that issue has a setting that makes it one of the chief political issues of the day; so that the official endorsement by the church of one candidate to the exclusion of another throws the whole church at once into the thick of a political fight that involves more than this issue—and the church is not a political organization.

In the second place, the church, according to the editor's conviction, has no right to undertake to tell its members how they must vote, or even how they ought to vote in a political campaign. It is the church's business always to endeavor to instruct and educate its members so that they will always think right and act right and vote right; but at the last, the individual member must decide for himself what his course of action shall be in a given situation.

In the third place, prohibition is not the only issue involved in this campaign. Many loyal Methodist citizens would have to go contrary to as profound convictions, for example, in voting the Republican ticket as they would in voting the Democratic ticket. In the minds of these good men and women, the "solid South" has become "solid," not from obstinacy within, but from pressure without. No organization has the right to usurp the place of the individual's conscience in determining a right course of action.

In the fourth place, for the church to enter officially into a political campaign will result almost inevitably in creating factions and divisions within the church, both local and connectional, that will almost certainly develop a flood of hitterness hard to assuage and that will impede the program of the church in all its spiritual ministry to the spiritual needs of the world.

Christ himself, while never compromising a principle of righteousnees by a hair's breadth, nevertheless steadfastly refused to become involved in political entaglements, turning away from those who sought to make him a temporal king and confounding those who sought to embarrass him over the question of the taxing authority of the Roman Government.

It is the mission of the church so to proclaim the oracles of God as to bring the people to whom it ministers to repentance, saving faith in Jesus Christ, and regeneration through the power of the Holy Spirit that in all the relationships of life they will act as becometh the gospel. Preaching the gospel won't hurt politics, but preaching politics will mightily hinder the gospel.

It is not inconsistent with the foregoing, however, to state clearly the moral issue involved in this election, so that every voter may have clearly in mind the effect of his vote on that particular issue. We will state it to the best of our ability.

The United States, by Constitutional process through the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, has oulawed the liquor traffic; and by the adoption of the Volstead Act it has defined intoxicating liquor as that which contains more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol. The forces back of this legislation are moral, economic, and social. From the beginning, practically all churches and religious workers were in favor of and worked diligently for the outlawry of the liquor traffic; and the successful culmination of their labors was looked upon throughout the world as a great moral achievement.

From the first, the friends of the liquor traffic did all they could to prevent the adoption of this legislation; and since its adoption, by every means in their power, they have tried to make it inoperative. They have scoffed at the law and have brazenly violated it in every conceivable way.

The South is solidly Democratic, both in local and national politics; and it is probably as dry as it is Democratic.

The Democratic National Convention at Houston adopted a dry plank in its platform that, while not thoroughly satisfactory to the drys, was finally accepted by them in order to avoid party dissensions. Thus the drys went as far as they could conscientiously go in the interest of party harmony.

The convention then proceeded to nominate for the presidency a man whose record, personal and official, shows that he stands unequivocally and determinedly with the wets. In his telegram of acceptance of the nomination, instead of saying that he would stand on the platform, he stated that he considered it to be his duty to point out and lead the way to a modification of the present prohibition laws. In effect, in the opinion of some of the sanest members of the Democratic party, his first act after notification of his nomination, was to "bolt" a plank of the party platform.

Following this, the nominee personally selected as chairman of the National Committee to conduct the campaign a Republican, member of the leading Republican club of New York, who stated that he accepted the position because it gave him opportunity to fight "the damnable affliction of prohibition."

Thus, by his own words and by his own act, the Democratic nominee has served notice, publicly and officially, that, if elected, one of the main efforts of his administration will be to effect a modification of our present prohibition laws.

Thus, the logic of the whole situation makes the conclusion inevitable that a vote cast for the Democratic nominee is a vote, whether so intended or not, for the modification of our present prohibition laws; and the modification contemplated is such as will legalize the sale of light wines and beer, and probably of stronger liquors. If the Democratic nominee is elected, it is only reasonable to suppose that he will use the vast authority and influence of his office to carry out his plan of modification.

With the facts before them, voters assume, of course, responsibilty for their own ballots.

Simply as a matter of information, the Democratic nominee is an active member of the Roman Catholic Church and the chairman of the National Committe chosen by him is listed in "Who's Who in America" as a Republican and a member of the Knights of Columbus, a Roman Catholic organization.

LYNCHING.

The Board of Stewards of the First Methodist Church, Brookhaven, Miss., cannot be too strongly commended for their action in adopting resolutions in condemnation of the lynching of two Negroes in Brookhaven on June 29. These resolutions were published in the Advocate last week. Lynching is a way of punishing a crime that is more criminal than the act against which it is directed. It lynches the law as well as the human victim. It is savagery—not civilization. We may oppose a Federal lynching law on constitutional grounds; but if the States continue to show themselves unable to suppress this form of flagrant lawlessness, such a law is inevitable. If the duly constituted officers of the law are not ahle to function in emergencies, they ought to he dismissed in favor of those who can—and will.

THE RELIGION OF MODERNISM VERSUS THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Part II.

Christianity is the religion of the Bible. Modernism is the religion of some who pose before the world as "scholars" and "scientists"—it is a man-made religion. Using the term in a very restricted sense, its adherents might be called Present-day Intellectuals; but even the devils are in advance of these Intellectuals in that the former give at least a cold, intellectual assent to the truths of the gospel—nay, more; for the inspired writer tells us that the devils believe and tremble. The Intellectuals neither tremble nor believe. If I were under the necessity of choosing between the two, I should prefer to cast my lot with the devils whose orthodoxy is unquestionable.

In the closing paragraph of Part I of this article, I promised to show herein the points of difference between the religion of Modernism and the Christian religion. These points of difference are so many that the space at my command will not allow a discussion of them all and, for this reason, I shall indicate only a few of the most vital and fundamental differences.

I. The Bible.

The Christian accepts the Bible as a revelation from God. Christianity is the religion of the Bible. Its foundation is external authority, that of God who has revealed himself and his will in the Bible, which is the inspired word of God. All those doctrines concerning God, Man, Sin, the Fall, the Atonement, Jesus, the Resurrection, Immortality, and the Future Life, Christianity derives from the Bible, which is the source of its teachings relative to the things vital to the souls of men; and the Bible is infallible.

Modernism rejects the Bible as an inspired revelation from God, and affirms that it is the product of the religious thinking of man. Modernism does not need the Bible and proposes to reconstruct it in a scientific manner in harmony with modern "scholarship." In fact, it rejects wholly the idea of external authority and prates much of "experience" and "life."

II. The Creation of Man.

The Christian religion accepts without equivocation the Bible account of the creation of man by the direct act of God as related in the book of Genesis. Because he believes in the historicity of the Bible, the Christian believes that God by his own creative act made man in his own image —"in the image of God made he them, male and female."

Modernism denies Biblical historicity. The Genesis account of the creation is allegorical, a myth, folklore. God did not create man, and man is what he is through age-long evolutionary processes, beginning in the lower orders of the animal kingdom. Since Modernism rejects the Bible, this is its only possible logical conclusion.

III. Sin and the Fall.

The Christian religion teaches that by sin man fell from the original purity in which God created him. As Paul said in his letter to the Romans: "Wherefore, as by one man sin entered the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned."

The religion of Modernism holds that sin as such is non-existent, thus adopting one of the tenets of Eddyism. If man fell, beginning as protoplasm in the ooze, muck, and slime of the sea-bed, he fell upward, and what the Bible calls sin is only a temporary retention of imperfections of his animal ancestry which will be gradually eliminated as man slowly evolves, through tedious processes covering the centuries, toward angelic immaculateness. After all, then, the atheistic theory of evolution is the tap-root of Modernism, which, with all its conclusions, rests upon an unsubstantiated hypothesis. The credulity of Modernism is amazing!

IV. The Resurrection.

Christians believe that Jesus, after being crucified on the cross by the Roman soldiers, at the instigation of his Jewish enemies, literally rose from the dead, his body coming out of Joseph's tomb, as the Bible says he did. We believe that, during forty days, he appeared, on various occasions and under varying circumstances, to his disciples in the flesh on which was the print of the nails and the spear-thrust in his side; and that, last of all, he ascended into heaven with all that appertained to his physical body. Believing in the physical resurrection of our Lord, we also believe in the physical resurrection of the human body. Furthermore, Christians believe that Jesus is coming again in person, as he said he would, that all men shall see him, and that all nations shall stand before him in final judgment.

Modernism denies the physical resurrection of our Lord; accordingly it is in perfect harmony with the watchmen who received money of the chief priests and were instructed to say: "His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept." Denying the physical resurrection of Jesus, Modernists logically respect the resurrection of the human body. For instance, Dr. G. B. Winton, former editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, in an editorial in that periodical, said: "To hold that the resurrection of the body is the resurrection of the identical body which dies is an unnecesary strain upon human faith;" then, as a solution of his intellectual difficulty, he added: "God can, if necessary, go into the workshop of creation and make a new body for the disembodied spirit" —which, of course, would not be a resurrection at all, but a new creation. Dr. Stevens also, in his "Theology of the New Testament," asserts that "the resurrection is neither the resurrection of the body which dies, nor a resurrection from the ground in which the body is buried, but a rising of the personality from the realm of darkness into the realm of light and life." Beautifully expressed indeed, but with one fatal defect—it is not true; otherwise, the Bible is false, and Jesus misrepresented the truth when he said: "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life: and they that have done evil, unto the resurection of damnation."

V. The New-Birth.

Christianity teaches that as a result of the sin and fall of man he is outside the kingdom of God, and is helpless to recover himself from his lost condition. To re-enter the kingdom of God it is necessary that the Spirit of God operate upon his heart in regeneration, as our Lord said to Nicodemus:: "Ye must be born again."

Modernism proceeds upon the assumption that man has the power within himself to live the Christian life, to conform his life to the ethics of Jesus.

Now, while I could present various other points of difference between Modernism and Christianity, those given herein are sufficient to establish the fact that the principles of the religion of Modernism and the doctrines of the Christian religion are diametrically opposed, the one to the other, so much so that it is absolutely impossible for a Modernist to be a Christian or a Christian to be a Modernist. In view of this logical conclusion, the most astonishing thing is that the Modernist persists in his futile effort to hold on to the Christian name, while denying the most fundamental principles of the Christian religion. According to my way of thinking, there is but one solution of this mystery, namely, the Modernist's desire to fatten on the bread of the Christian church.

The differences between Modernism and Christianity are deep-seated and vital. In an editorial in the Christian Century, the boldest advocate of Modernism in the nation, Dr. Paul Hutchinson, the editor, who himself is a pronounced Modernist, states what he believes to be the situation in the controversy between Christianity and Modernism in the following words:

"How deep-going is the fundamentalist-modernist controversy? Is it an issue worth serious attention? Does it matter vitally which way it all comes out? Is not the course of neutrality and even unconcern the better course for strong, level-headed leaders to adopt, leaving 'partisan' alignment to those of more impetuous temperament? Is the whole controvery, after all, scarcely more than a tempest in a teapot? Or are the fundamentalists right in claiming that the issue is a grave one, going to the roots of religious conviction and involving the basic purposes and almost the genius of Christianity itself?

"Two worlds have crashed, the world of tradition and the world of modernism. One is scholastic, static, authoritative, individualistic; the other is vital, dynamic, free, social. There is a clash here as profound and as grim as that between Christianity and Confucianism. Amiable words cannot hide the differences. 'Blest be the tie' may be sung until doomsday, but it cannot bind these two worlds together. The God of the fundamentalist is one God; the God of the Modernist is another. The Bible of the fundamentalist is one Bible; the Bible of the Modernist is another. the church, the kingdom, the salvation, the consummation of all things—these are one thing to the fundamentalists and another thing to Modernists. Which God is the Christian God, which Christ is the Christian Christ, which Bible is the Christian Bible? The future will tell. But that the issue is clear and the inherent incompatibility of the two worlds has passed the stage of mutual tolerance is a fact concerning which there hardly seems room for any one to doubt."

So, then, the conflict is on—it is a fight to the finish; and how it all ends depends upon the loyalty of Christians to the principles taught by Jesus, our Lord and Savior. Either Modernism shall win and Christianity lose, or the banner of Prince Immanuel shall wave victoriously over the wreckage of Modernism. One thing is sure, both cannot survive in the same world, because irreconcilable is the conflict between the religion of Modernism and the Christian religion. That the latter is destined to triumph I have no doubt, because Jesus has said: "Upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

A LAYMAN ON "A BETTER FINANCIAL SYSTEM."

Dear Brother Carley: Your editorial in the Christian Advocate of June 21 so exactly coincides with my idea for a long while held on our financial system that I cannot refrain from expressing to you my gratefulness at your fellow-feeling. I cannot help from seeing the harm done our beloved church from having one drive after another, before the last one has been finished. I am convinced that it has caused a strong feeling of resentment when a special has been even hinted at among our laity; and if persisted in will make it harder and harder to meet the real, every day necessities. Occupying the position in the church which I do, I see it more forcibly every day. (I am and have been a steward for a long while.) I regret this state of affairs and pray God that it may be speedily adjusted.

I suspect that I am the oldest reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate in this vicinity. My step-father, T. C. Brown, D.D., M.D., having been a subscriber directly after the Civil War, my mother continued it after his death, and ever since one or another of my family has taken it, until my time, and I have been a subscriber for many years. Long may it flourish.

Cordially your brother,

R. R. LIDDELL.

Fayette, Miss.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S.A. Steel, D.D.

I am revelling in fine books, some old, some new. Among the old ones is "The Life and Letters of St. Paul," by David Smith, D.D. The great Greek scholar, Dr. B. L. Gildersleeve, once told me that he made it a part of his regular work to read once a year the great work of Conebeare and Howson, "The Life and Epistles of St. Paul." He would probably now substitute Dr. Smith's book, because it is later and in some respects fuller than Conebeare and Howson; and then Smith is a good Scotch Presbyterian, and Gildersleeve was one of the elect. As Paul is now being studied in the Sunday school, I recommend this book.

Among the new books I have read are Emil Ludwig's "Napoleon" and "Bismarck;" Sedgwick's "Lafayette;" Mrs. Rowland's "Varina Howell, Wife of Jefferson Davis," a fascinating story; General John Gibbon's "Personal Recollections of the Civil War;" "The Second Isaiah," by Torrey; "Soldier of the South, General Pickett's War Letters to His Wife;" "Dolly Madison," by Deane; "Life and I," by Gamaliel Bradford; "Presidential Years," by Wertenbaker; "The Scandal of the Cross," by Poteat; "Catholicism and the American Mind," by Garrison; "The Relief of Catholics," by Knox; "Shoddy," by Dan Brummitt; "Sam Houston, the Colossus in Buckskin," by Creel; "The Rise of the House of Rothschild," by Corti; and then some. So I am as full of thought, new and old, as your hopper is. But don't you throw this in your waste basket. If you are overflowing, just tag it with one of Uncle Sam's stamps, and like the lost sheep of little Bo Peep, it will come home fetching its tail behind it.

I specially want to call attention to two new books. The first is the "New Reformation," by Michel Pupin. Professor Pupin is an eminent scientist, now I believe connected with Columbia University. Some time ago Edison made a detour out of the broad road of science, especially electricity about which he knows so much, and ventured into the field of religion, denying the reality of the soul. Pupin makes no reference to Edison, but if his book had been written with the intention of refuting Edison, it could not have hit its aim better. Pupin is also a great scientific authority on electricity, and he says that we know the reality of the soul by the very same evidence that we know the reality of the phenomena of electricity. So he nails Edison's unbelief to the wall as I used to nail the skins of the coons I caught when a pioneer in the Mississippi swamp, now known by the tony name of "The Delta." This book will knock the Smart Alec skeptics into a cocked hat, and scatter them like a bunch of jack rabbits are scattered by the bark of a greyhound. Pupin's book is published by Scribners.

The other book is published by Harper Brothers. The title of it is, "The Scientific Man and the Bible," by Howard A. Kelly, the illustrious surgeon of Johns Hopkins, Baltimore. Dr. Kelly is a scientist of world-fame. Nobody can gainsay his fitness to speak on the subject of science, or answer the question, "Can a scientific man believe the Bible?" My faith doesn't need any bracing. It has permeated my whole personality. My will is steeped in it, and "the life I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me." Yet reading this little book has quickened my whole spiritual nature, electrified me as it were by contact with a real believer. In this book Dr. Kelly tells his experience. I believe he is a communicant of the Episcopal Church, but his testimony sounds like that of an old-fashioned Methodist saint, told in a love-feast where everybody was happy in the Lord. Dr. Kelly tells how he came to his present faith; why he believes the whole Bible is true—mark you, the "whole Bible;" why he believes that Jesus Christ is God; why he believes in the Virgin Birth of Jesus; in the Blood Atonement; in a bodily resurrection, and in the second coming of Christ. The testimony of such a man offsets and cancels the noisome and mephitic vaporings of infidels like Mencken and agnostics like Darrow. I hope you will get this book and read it. If I had the money, I would buy a thousand copies and give them to as many preachers. The best I can do is to tell you about it and advise you to get it and read it. As I read it I kept thinking of a remark attributed to the great scientist, Ampere, "If I knew all things, I would have the faith of a Breton peasant." That was his way of saying that the simple faith of an illiterate peasant has latent in it universal truth; develop that faith and it will logically embrace all knowledge. I don't agree with everything Dr. Kelly holds; the great fact is that here is a world-famous scientist who believes the Bible to be the living word of God. And Dr. Kelly's belief in the Bible is not a mere intellectual assent to its truth. Every page beams with the light of a dynamic confidence in Jesus as a personal Savior. O for more of this sort of faith. It is the kind that "overcomes the world."

Mansfield, La.

DIPLOMACY.

By Rev. Marlin H. McCormack, Jr.

The world is for the diplomat. The place at the top is reserved for the man who knows men, and who knows how to manage them. Diplomacy has its legitimate bounds; but there are few who exercise it that are always willing to confine themselves within these. While diplomacy is a practical, expedient art, it is not one of the preferred virtues. We have no record of Jesus ever resorting to it. If he had, he would no doubt have been a master of the art; but there would be a different gospel to preach, if indeed we would have a gospel at all.

Suppose he had played the diplomat when he was before Pilate. A clever word from him would have been sufficient to prevent the scene on Golgotha. And, too, if the Master had been as diplomatic as some of his modern representatives, he could have been popular with the social, religious, and political elite—the Sadducees, Pharisees, and Herodians. A certain church sent a delegation to one of the bishops recently asking for a pastor who would fraternize with and be popular among the ministers and leading adherents of the various non-Protestant denominations and organizations in their city—and they got him.

Jesus once said: "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you!" A man would have to be expert diplomat for this to happen.

The outstanding diplomats among biblical characters are Absalom, Herod, and Paul. "And Absalom rose up early, and stood in the way of the gate; and it was so, that when any man that had controversy came to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said, Thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel. And Absalom said unto him, See, thy matters are good and right; but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee. Absalom said moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man who hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice. And it was so that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and took him and kissed him. And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel that came to the king for judgment: so Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel" (II Sa. 15:2-6). Absalom's diplomacy together with his physical charm made him an outstanding politician, one with whom the nation had to deal later.

In Acts (12:20-22 R. V.) we read, "Now he (Herod) was highly displeased with them of Tyre and Sidon: and they came with one accord to him and, having made Blastus, the king's chamberlain their friend, they asked for peace; because their country was fed from the king's country. And upon a set day Herod arrayed himself in royal apparel, and sat on the throne, and made an oration unto them. And the people shouted, saying, 'The voice of a God, and not a man.'"

The following account of Paul's clever appeal to the Sanhedrin, taken from Acts (23:6-9) gives a striking example of his ability as a diplomat: "But when Paul perceived that the one part were Sadducees, and the other Pharisees, he cried out in the council, Men and brethren, I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees: of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question. And when he had so said, there arose a dissension between the Sadducees and Pharisees; and the assembly was divided. For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection, neither angel, nor spirit: but the Pharisees confess both. And there arose a great clamor and some of the scribes of the Pharisees part stood up and strove, saying, We find no evil in this man; and what if a spirit hath spoken to him or an angel; let us not fight against God." But really, it was not because of Paul's belief in the resurrection that he was called into question. This was a minor point, but he cleverly made it appear to be the main issue on account of the prejudice of the Pharisees that were on the council. Diplomacy!

Paul afterwards became sorry that he acted the diplomat before the council, and in his defense before Felix said, "Let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council, except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them, 'Touching the resurrection of the dead I am called in question by you this day.'" (Acts 24:20-21.)

Paul, in writing to the Corinthians, said: "And to the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law" (I Cor. 9:20 R. V.). Diplomacy again! But there is in Paul's diplomacy no purpose to do evil to any one that his interests might be advanced. This is diplomacy in its legitimate confine. He was passionate for souls, and wanted to see men saved.

But it is doubtful that the Master would have even gone this far in diplomacy. For Paul was claiming to be an orthodox Jew and Pharisee, when he had forsaken that faith for Christianity. He was admitting that he was under the law, when in his heart he believed that he was no longer under it, that he "might gain them that are under the law."

To act as if you are fond of a person when really you are not; to be a hail-fellow-well-met in a group with which you are really bored may be good diplomacy, and its fruits may be sweet; but there are those of us who do not choose this path to popularity and success. Such actions are perfectly justifiable when the motive is sincere; but when expediency is substituted for sincerity, there immediately arises a question in my mind touching their probity.

MY PURPOSE.

With calm, undrooping gaze, always to mean
The high and truthful thing. Never to screen
Behind the unmeant word, the sharp surprise
Of cunning, never to tell the little lies
Of look or thought. Always to choose between
The true and small, the true and large, serene
And high, above Life's cheap dishonesties.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC QUESTION.

By Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon.

The question of absorbing interest just at this time both in Europe and in America is the Roman Catholic Question. Whatever else may appear above the surface, this question is in the deep undercurrents of our thinking.

Some of us are Protestants not only by conviction but by inheritance also. The very surnames we have the honor to bear tell something of the history that is behind us. And a man's religious inheritance is one of his most precious possessions. It is one of his highest privileges as well as his sacred duty to keep faith with his fathers. For to use the language of the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, "they without us shall not be made perfect." That is to say, their lives and labors will not fully arrive at their intended consummation unless we start where they left off and move forward in the same direction. So shall they and we be God's fellow-workers.

My interest in this question became intense when during my first year in the office of General Superintendent it was my privilege to have charge of the work of our church in Mexico. I then saw at first hand many things I had not known before. Since that time I have had an abiding interest in things Mexican. The most illuminating book to read on Mexico is Dr. G. B. Winton's new book, "Mexico: Past and Present." From this book I quote:

"The Catholic hierarchy had continued the implacable foe of democratic institutions. So long as they dared—for over forty years—they clung to the idea of monarchy. In despair of that, they have, since the death of Maximilian in 1867, used their enormous wealth, their privileged position, their intellectual and spiritual control over the masses to oppose singly, in detail and in mass, every one of those principles which lie at the base of successful self-government. They have hindered education by the State. They have opposed liberty of thought, of conscience, and of press. They have resisted equality before the courts. They have been against enlightened and equitable taxation, the betterment of labor conditions, agrarian reform, municipal control of cemeteries, sane marriage laws, liberty of worship, republican institutions of every description."

Under the influence of the Roman Catholic Church there was written into the first constitution of the Republic of Mexico the affirmation that "the Holy, Catholic, Apostolic religion shall be the religion of the nation, and no other will be tolerated." It took forty-three years of struggle and bloodshed to open the eyes of the political leaders sufficiently to blot that provision from the constitution.

The struggle which has been going on in Mexico during the past few years between the Roman Catholic Church and the constitutional government of Mexico is in no sense a fight on the part of the government against the Christian religion (our Protestant churches are obeying the laws of the land and are prospering); it is rather the last effort on the part of Romanism to compel the State to be subservient to the church. It will be remembered that when the struggle between Rome and the Mexican government became acute the Knights of Columbus raised a large fund and had paid lecturers to speak in various American centers of influence seeking to bring about interference in Mexican affairs against the Mexican government and in favor of the church. Secretary Kellogg was himself grossly deceived and would have led us into intervention had it not been for the outspoken objection and veto on the part of our Protestant churches and other lovers of liberty and of peace.

In England just now the Catholic question is acute. The Roman Catholic Church has always been the refuge of frightened souls—frightened by intellectual and political freedom, or frightened by the danger of radicalism always attendant upon a period of readjustment. The time following the Great War has been a time of unsettlement. In this period, the Roman Communion has greatly strengthened itself. Out of the World War Catholicism came vastly stronger than before. Within the Church of England there has developed a growing Catholic party, a party looking in the direction of Rome and longing for union with Rome. The new Prayer Book which has been twice rejected by Parliament is strongly Roman Catholic. Indeed, it is definitely Roman in some of the practices which it seeks to legalize. But old England is still at heart Protestant, and a Protestant parliament would not vote for a Romish prayer book. The British Weekly, which comes regularly to my table, has been full of discussion. It is difficult for us here in the United States fully to appreciate the gravity of the issue in England. The editor of The Lutheran, in a recent editorial of that periodical, throws upon it an interesting sidelight.

"It is not without significance to other sections of the world that the claims to temporal power by the Vatican should be held in such suspicion by the majority of England. The Roman hierarchy's insistence upon the right to dominate the spiritual beliefs of the people of every realm which recognizes Christian faith, its utter refusal to accept as valid any other church organization, and its practice of using its members in European parliaments for the furtherance of its own institutional interests, instantly arouse hostility to any drift in its direction. It seeks in civic affairs either dictatorship or division. The English people seem to know this and to act therefore against their most esteemed church leaders."

And now for the first time in our own country the Roman Catholic question has become a matter of major concern. For the Roman Catholic Church does not stand on the same footing with other churches. Catholics are themselves the first to affirm this. They need not be surprised or offended, therefore, when Protestants take them at their word. It needs to be clearly understood that the Roman Catholicism is (1) a form of religious faith, and (2) a world-wide politcial government.

For all forms of religions faith we have the largest charity. We would stand with bowed heads in a Buddhist temple or a Mohammedan mosque. We reverence the man who kneels. For many individual members of the Catholic Church we have love and the highest esteem. We recognize the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. We not only recognize this, we insist upon it.

But Roman Catholicism denies the right of the individual to worship God as his conscience directs. There is not a Roman Catholic country in the world that permits it. And Roman Catholicism is more and other than a form of religious worship. It is a world-wide political government. The Roman Church is the first to affirm this, and can never deny it. Like any other political government the Catholic Church has its Diplomatic Service, at the head of which is the papal Secretary of State. The thirty-four governments which maintain representatives at the Vatican and officially receive papal ambassadors include virtually all the important countries of the world except the United States, Italy, Russia, China, and Japan. To such countries as decline to enter into formal political relations with the Vatican there are sent representatives known as Apostolic Delegates, and such Apostolic Delegates are skilled politicians sent with a view to having political influence.

It is quite significant that when last spring a year ago Mr. Marshall submitted to Governor Smith of New York a series of questions with reference to the relation of the church to the State, before Governor Smith would or could venture to answer those questions, simple and non-theological as they were, he found himself under the necessity of consulting a Roman Catholic priest. His answers were the answers of one trained in the art of evasion. And it should be noted that to the question: "The church claims the right to control education and marriage. Do you approve?" Governor Smith returned no answer at all.

At the present time when the Catholic question has definitely forced itself into politics all patriotic citizens should give careful consideration to the following weighty words from the pen of Bishop Warren A. Candler, printed in the Christian Index of July 12:

"The trouble with the Roman Catholic Church is that it seeks to be both a church and a political party. Its arrogant claim of being the only true Christian church might be treated with indifference; but when its head asserts political and civil authority, a position is assumed which cannot be allowed any church whatever. If it must assume such a position, its members must not complain if it is met with political opposition not offered to any other church. If it were willing to take its place as a church along with all other churches, it would be improper to meet it with any other attitude than that which we meet all other churches; but it is not willing to be only a church. Putting itself in a class to itself by its political animus, it must take all that such improper attitude makes inevitable. It cannot claim the political exemption of a church while it asserts political claims as well as churchly prerogatives."

The Roman Catholic Church is utterly intolerant of the rights of the individual, of any individual anywhere, to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and furthermore as a political government it claims and insists upon the superiority of the church over the State, and works unceasingly to bring this about. As a lover of tolerance and as a friend of liberty, I am forever intolerant of an intolerant institution. As a loyal American I will tolerate no super-government over our national government.

I suggest, therefore, that the present time offers a good opportunity for preachers in a constructive way to present to a public almost totally uninformed touching such matters a series of sermons setting forth the essential difference between Roman Catholicism and Protestantism. In preparation of such series of sermons, I suggest that our Methodist preachers turn to our Twenty-five Articles of Religion and study again those articles which set forth the historic protest of Evangelical Christianity against the errors of Rome—Articles of Religion in defense of which men gladly died and for which we should now be willing to suffer. As giving the proper historical background and showing the essential truths for which the Protestant Reformation stood, the best book to read is Lindsay's History of the Reformation in Germany. (I read this notable volume while in Mexico and it became a part of my intellectual and spiritual furnishings.) Our Father's Faith and Ours is a notable work by that great church historian, Dr. David S. Schaff. It sets down side by side the difference between Protestantism and Romanism. It is a monumental book that ought to be in every scholarly preacher's library. Dr. W. E. Garrison's recent book, Catholicism and the American Mind, brings the whole discussion down to date. If the reader can afford to buy only one volume on this subject, let it be the last named. The widest possible circulation should be given Dr. Garrison's book. Dr. Garrison is a broadminded scholar who has traveled in many Catholic countries, who has spent months in Rome, and who has resided for years in a Catholic environment. He has been a student and teacher of church history and writes with a scholar's accurate knowledge.

For the series of sermons on Roman Catholicism and Protestantism, let me suggest the following subjects:

1. Romanism, the Religion of External Authority; Protestantism, the Religion of the Spirit.
2. The Spiritual Authority of the Bible vs. the Dead Hand of Traditionalism.
3. The Priesthood of All Believers; or the Right of the Individual to come to God without the Intermediation of a Priest.
4. Salvation Through Faith in Christ Rather than Through Belief in Creed.

5. The Ethical Emphasis of Protestantism as Against the Sacramentarianism of Rome.

6. Church and State in Roman Catholic and Protestant Teaching.

7. The Miracles of the New Testament and Roman Catholic Pseudo-Miracles.

8. The Duty of the Church to Interest Itself in Public Morals.

In view of the prominence of the Catholic question both in Europe and in America and in view of the lack of information on the part of many otherwise well educated people, I submit that some such discussion as is here proposed would offer a great opportunity for kindly and constructive preaching.

Let me say before closing this paper that I have no interest at all in books written by former priests and escaped nuns. And I am as far removed as possible from the hysteria of the Ku-Klux Klan. Just at the present time much harm has been done by the excited utterances of overheated zeal. But the calm and dignified presentation of truth is always in order, and the present furnishes an opportunity to present the foundation truths of Evangelical Religion with telling power.

RESOLUTIONS BOARD OF TEMPERANCE AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

Resolved:

1. That we deplore the unfortunate and confusing political situation that has arisen in our beloved country, and that, while we do not presume to prescribe for whom any member of our church shall vote—it being our belief that the church, as an organization, should avoid alliance with any political party—yet we do reaffirm our allegiance to the historic position of our church on questions of Temperance and Social Welfare, and we call attention to the following action of our General Conference at its session in Memphis, Tenn.:

"Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assembled in Memphis, Tenn., in quadrennial session, representing a Christian citizenship of more than two million, six hundred thousand, hereby respectfully and earnestly petition the Congress of the United States:

"To reject all proposals to enact any legislation which has as its object the nullification or the weakening of the prohibition enforcement act commonly known as the Volstead law."

And again on May 20, 1926:

"The pronouncement of the bishops on the national prohibition law should be read from every pulpit in the church. It is a clarion call which should ring throughout our borders and stir all supporters of temperance and prohibition to action.

"Facts submitted to us from all the States confirm our faith in prohibition as a national policy. From every quarter comes but one report: that moral and civic conditions under prohibition, while not ideal, are incomparably better than under the old policy. These reports reassure us in the conviction that 'Prohibition at its worst is better than license at its best.'

"We have taken note of the factors tending to prevent due observance and proper enforcement of the law. Chief among them are these:

1. The campaign for the nullification of the Eighteeth Amendment under the guise of proposals to modify the Volstead law.

"2. The patronizing of the lowest criminal classes by men of prominence and influence, resulting in the enriching of the former and the setting up of the latter as inciters of drunkenness and official corruption.

"3. The appointment and election to office of men who prefer to demonstrate that the law cannot be enforced rather than that it can be enforced.

"4. The dispostion to shirk and evade local responsibility, resulting in a failure to exercise State and local authority with fidelity and vigor.

"5. Overconfidence and lack of vigilance and diligence on the part of the friends of temperance and prohibition. The peril of prohibition, as of all popular government, is 'not so much the had citizenship of had men as the had citizeship of good men.'

"These conditions challenge us to action.

"The campaign for nullification must he answered by a crusade for observance and enforcement. Men of prominence and influence who strike hands with—patronize and enrich—the lowest criminals must he indicted at the bar of public opinion as their confederates and accomplices. The law must he administered by its friends. In our States—from constahle to governor—and in the nation—from revenue agent to President—officials must be selected who helieve in enforcement, not only because prohibition is the law, hut because it ought to be the law.

"The full power and authority of the States must be exercised in co-operation with the Federal Government.

"For the attainment of these ends we call upon our preachers and teachers to give voice to the social creed of our church, and upon all our people to assert their full influence as Christians and patriotic citizens of our republic.

"We recommend that these sentiments he declared to be the sentiments of the Conference."

2. That we commend the officers of this Board for their faithful and untiring efforts to secure the adequate enforcement of all laws carrying into effect the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

3. That we express our faith in the American people, when properly informed, to support those policies which will inure to the health, happiness and sobriety of our social order; to this end we helieve in the dissemination of all information which will aid good citizens in making intelligent and Christian decisions touching all questions affecting the social, moral and religious welfare of the Nation.

LAMBUTH MEMORIAL DAY, AUG. 2, 10:30 A. M.

The second observance of Lamhuth Memorial Day at Pearl River Church (the church of the Lambuths), near Madison Station, in Madison County, Miss., will take place on Aug. 2, beginning at 10:30 a. m.

The Board of Directors have been fortunate in securing the speakers this year. Rev. H. C. Tucker, D.D., for forty years in Brazil, will speak in the morning, and Rev. J. L. Gerdine, D.D., for twenty years in Korea, will speak in the afternoon.

While this celebration takes place within the Jackson District, it is hoped that it will rapidly become a Mississippi-wide occasion, therefore, all are invited to attend.

In this time of turmoil let the people of God assemhle at this quiet countryside place and worship God, and drink deeply at the fountain of inspiration that comes from the lives of John W. and Walter Russell Lambuth.

Don't forget the time—Aug. 2, 10:30 a. m.; don't forget the place—Pearl River, seven miles east of Madison; don't forget you are invited to come.

J. L. DECELL, Chairman;
H. C. CASTLES, Secretary;
C. L. RAY, Manager;

TABERNACLE CAMP MEETING.

By Dr. W. G. Henry.

Just ten miles east of Columbus, Miss., this celebrated camp ground is located. It is just over in Alabama. The first place for worship was actually in Mississippi for several years When they inaugurated the camp meeting in addition to the regular church service, the location was moved a few hundred yards, which placed it in Pickens County, Ala. We are to hold the one hundredth session Aug. 25-30, 1928.

In the past we have been favored with the presence of such men as Wm. Murrah, Allen S. Andrews, Alonzo Monk, S. A. Steel, J. C. McCoy, Bishop McCoy, Dr. Oakley, F. P. Culver, T. W. Lewis, and a host of other celebrated preachers. From the bounds of this pastoral charge came Rev. J. W. Murrah and his brother, Bishop W. B. Murrah, Rev. Gabriel Hawkins and others to Mississippi, hesides a large number to the Alabama Conferences.

This year the preaching is to he done hy Bishops Candler and Dobbs. This is enough said to guarantee that a congregation will always be present. If you are interested in attending, you may write to Mr. M. N. Franks, Columhus, Miss., Route 2, and he will arrange for your entertainment at actual cost. If you prefer, you can get rooms in Columhus, which is only twenty minutes away hy auto, and meals may be had on the grounds for a reasonahle sum. We know that this will be the most memorable of all previous meetings.

METHODIST MOTORCADE TO SCHOOL OF MISSIONS, LAKE JUNALUSKA.

The Methodist Motorcade from the Mississippi Conference to the School of Missions at Lake Junaluska, N. C., will leave Meridian Saturday, July 28, at 1 o'clock; spend the night in Birmingham; Sunday morning, attend service at First Church, hear Dr. Moore; Monday, see Chattanooga, and spend the night in Knoxville; arrive at Junalnska Tuesday, 31, in time to get located and rest awhile hefore the program opens at the auditorium at 8 o'clock. All cars should he in Meridian, and ready to start on time, so that we may get to Birmingham in time for a good night's rest.

Even if you haven't thought of going, you still have time. No special preparation is necessary, nor do you need to make any reservations. Just get in your car and come to Meridian for the start at 1 o'clock, July 28.

En route, and while there you will have beautiful scenery, ideal climate, good fellowship, delightful vacation, and a fine program. What more could you want, or where could you get so much for so little? Therefore, in the langnage of my pastor, "Come on, let's go."

Would suggest that you get a white cloth to cover your spare tire, and paint on it these words: "Mississippi Methodist Motorcade, Junaluska."

Sincerely yours for a good time,

W. D. HAWKINS.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ROBERT ANDREWS DAVIS.

I was again placed on the active list and sent to the Tallulah and Delhi charge, which I served 1907-08. Here, on Aug. 14, 1907, Gussie married Prof. R. S. Crichlow, of Salem, Ky. They were teachers together in the Concordia Parish schools. We stayed at Tallulah two years and did some good work for the Master.

The years 1909-10 were spent at Bienville, the town built from the moving of old Sparta to the railroad. Many of the people were friends of the old days at Sparat and it proved a happy move for us—not a lucrative one, though. While here Dalton graduated from High School.

We reversed the order of going this time. Before, we left Coushatta for Sparta, now we left Bienville for Coushatta, 1911-12. These were also happy years. Dalton spent a part of the time with Brother and Sister Noel in Shreveport in a business school, and the last fall she entered school in Ruston.

Toward the end of 1912 I happened to be in Shreveport, at Brother Noel's, and the building of that church was under discusson. I didn't hesitate to side with Brother Noel about it. During the next Conference my presiding elder came to me and requested me to take the superannuate relation. I told him I was able to preach and he left. Then he came again and told me it was the superannuate relation or worse, so I consented under protest.

I went to the home of Prof. and Mrs. Crichlow, my son-in-law and daughter, in Vidalia, under great expense. Dalton was still in school in Ruston, so we stayed in Vidalia until she graduated in July, leaving for Houston, Tex., in August.

While in Vidalia, I assisted one of the brethren at the Pearl Street Church in Natchez, just across the river from Vidalia. I preached for them the Sundays Brother Kleiser had to fill the Washington pulpit. I also preached several times for the people at Ferriday. I preached the commencement sermon for the Vidalia High School in May.

Robert rented a house for us in Houston, and we moved there under heavy expense and the loss of some of our freight, in August. The Crichlows moved to New Orleans the next month, where Richard took up the study of medicine.

So here I am in Houston, with three of my children and my wife, in the hands of the Blessed Lord, who has always cared for and saved me. Bless his holy name.

Written at Houston, Tex., by Rev. R. A. Davis, and dated as finished, May 1. 1914.

Postscript by Daughter.

The foregoing pages are a true copy of the life of my father as written by himself and now in my possession.

I notice papa failed to mention the death of little Allie in her ninth year in Novemher, 1900, at Waterproof. She is huried in the little cemetery at Wesley Chapel, near the church building. Four in heaven with ther hodiees placed in widely separated cemeteries to await the resurrection.

My youngest sister secured a place in the Houston schools and mamma kept house for the three single children, Mary, Robert and Dalton, all working in Houston.

Papa did some supply preaching at Humble and Sugarland part of the time they lived there.

In October, 1914, papa and mamma came to live with us and help me with my Tulane student boarders. I was taking them to help out with expenses while my husband studied medicine. My little daughter arrived in January, 1915, and papa immedlately assumed charge of her, as he had done with us when babies.

During that spring Robert hought lots in Park Place Addition in Houston and offered to huild a home if papa and mamma would come back to keep house for them again. This they consented to do, so returned to Texas in June, 1915. They visited me for two and three weeks at a time after that.

In April, 1917, I was ill and needed mamma, so she came to spend a month with me; but I grew worse, so May came for my little girl, taking her to Park Place, where she and grandpa grew to be great chums. Mamma remained with me until August, then took me and our haby boy home with her.

Papa became my chief entertainer, for I was still helpless. We would talk for hours of the meetings he held in the days gone by, for, from the time he moved to Waterproof the first time, I went with him all the time in the summer and knew all ahout his work. Some of the preachers called me the itinerant.

In February, 1918, my mother died very suddenly. Papa came home with me and most of his life was spent then between the three homes, for Dalton married in April, 1919, and moved to San Antonio, Tex.

Papa usually came to me in the early fall, and then when the summer came some of the children in Houston would come for him and he would visit both places hefore coming back again in the fall.

He always considered Carrollton Avenue his home church after he and mamma came to us in 1914. Mamma put her letter in there, as I did in October, 1914.

The preachers of the city and the people of Carrollton Avenue church were always good to him, and he enjoyed it so much.

He attended Conference after mamma died, when it met in Alexandria. He stayed with the family of Cousin Horace White. No one ever enjoyed Conference more than papa did.

On February, 1525, he had a brain-stroke from which nobody ever dreamed he would recover. But he got up practically mentally clear and spent the summer in Houston as usual.

In October he came hack to attend the Conference held here in First Church and was so happy in being there. Nothing in my life has given me the joy of that first day at Conference, November, 1925. Doctor and I took him down early, and as our car stopped in front of First Church, Brothers John Foster, Floyd Vaughn, A. S. J. Neil, H. T. Carley, and several young preachers all stepped forward with a welcome and offer of help for him. Most of them knew he was practically helpless in walking. They almost carried him bodily up that long flight of stairs, led him near the front of the middle aisle, and placed him in the corner of the seat. Here others spied him and came to speak to him. Brother Henderson patted him on the shoulder and said: "Brethren, when I wanted a revival with power from on high, I sent for Bob Davis to do the preaching, and we always got it." Then turning to papa he said: "Brother Davis, we've fought some hard battles together for the Master, haven't we?" and quick as a flash papa replied: "Yes, and never once been defeated, praise the Lord." With that several of the preachers said Amen, and almost a shout went up from them all. To me it was like a real revival, and I felt the Lord had spared him to give us this glorious memory to help us in the pathway in which papa had always led us.

His life has been a benediction to his children and grandchildren that money or the world cannot give.

He was stricken with paralysis of the throat and tongue on the afternoon of March 1, 1926, and lived nine days after that. He was conscious until the night before he died.

On March 8, 1926, at 8:45 p. m., I washed his mouth out with ice water and he tried to turn over; so the nurse, May, and I eased him over on his back. One eye had already lost its sight early in the day. In a few seconds he raised the left hand (the right one was helpless), and I soon saw what was on his mind. One of the others said, "He sees some one and is waving to them." I said, "Watch." Then May said, "He is preaching." I told them I recognized the gestures. In a few seconds they did, too. He was preaching a sermon that was always one of my favorites, from Ezekiel 47:3-6. Just as he finished he turned on his right side and the clock struck 9. Then the breathing seemed to get regular and yet unnatural. Doctor came in just then and said it was the beginning of the end, but likely to be about twelve hours. Sure enough, at 8:45 the morning of March 9, 1926, he quietly ceased breathing and his soul was with his God whom he had so faithfully served and loved.

WHEN GOD IS NEAR.

By Mouzon W. Brabham.

When in humillty I came to God one day
And he saw my heart torn with deepest grief
For seeming error done,
He looked into my deepest thought
And found
That Love for him had won.

Then it was that this to me was clear:

When days seem heavy with burdens
Gathered along life's way—
When friends have departed
From that closer, dearer intimacy—
And heavily freighted clouds
Are about to break—
I shall look up, take courage,
And though I find it hard to bear,
I shall know that God is near.

FROM THE MONROE DISTRICT.

Wisner and Neal.

Wisner is one of the best organized churches in the Monroe District. Financially, none is more ably handled than this, and the Sunday school is one of the highest grade "C" type schools in the Conference.

Rev. A. S. J. Neal is the pastor of the Wisner and Crowville charge. His work is being done, as is usual with him, in a very effective way. Crowville being a farming community, is of course not as well organized financially as Wisner, but is keeping fairly well up with all interests of the church.

The Mission Special on this charge has been paid in full. The Conference collections will also he met one hundred per cent, and all other obligations will be discharged.

Wisner charge has a good future. There seems to be no reason why we should not have a station at this important point in the near future, and Brother Neal and his helpers are working toward that end.

ELMER C. GUNN, Presiding Elder.

SOME PARABLES.

By Rev. John D. Ellis.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto the last ship scheduled to cross the sea, which if the traveler misses, he must remain in foreign parts.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto the astronomer who said: "Behold, a bright star in the heavens, which may now be seen, but cannot be seen after a season."

The kingdom of heaven is like unto the danger signals on a highway, which when heeded, make traveling safe.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto the cleft of a rock, which when entered, protects from the storm.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto dynamite, which if handled deceitfully and fallaciously, will blow a man into fragments.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto an elixir, the quaff of which, transmutes mortals into life unending.

THE LITTLE CHILDREN OF JAPAN.

The little children in Japan
  Are fearfully polite.
They always thank their bread and milk
  Before they take a bite
And say: "You make us most content.
  O honorable nourishment!"

The little children in Japan
  Don't think of being rude.
"O noble, dear mamma," they say,
  "We trust we don't intrude,"
Instead of rushing in to where
  All day their mother combs her hair.

The little children in Japan
  Wear mittens on their feet;
They have no proper hats to go
  A-walking on the street,
And wooden stilts for overshoes
  They don't object at all to use.

The little children in Japan
  With toys of paper play
And carry paper parasols
  To keep the rain away;
And when you go to see, you'll find
  It's paper walls they live behind.

The little children in Japan
  They haven't any store
Of beds and chairs and parlor things;
  And so upon the floor
They sit and sip their tea and smile,
  And then they go to sleep awhile.

TERRIFIED TERRY.

By Francis F. Wright.

It was October. There had been three heavy frosts. Terry knew that the nuts were falling. So, on a still, bright Saturday morning, he took a meal sack and a bite of lunch and set out to gather his winter supply. He walked along the winding path that led through the deep woods. Dead leaves rustled under his feet. A little squirrel now and then scampered across his path and whisked up a tree out of sight. A bob-white called cheerfully to his mate. Terry was entirely happy. He came at last to the scaly bark hickory tree. He kicked through the leaves on the ground, under the tree, and found that there were plenty of nuts. He began picking them up. The hulls were loose. It was no trouble to shell them off. The sack began to get nice and heavy after a while, as Terry kept putting in nuts, a handful at a time. A bold squirrel came out on a high limb and began scolding. Terry laughed. "Don't you worry, mister!" he said. "I'll leave plenty for you!"

After a while a small clock inside told Terry it was noon. So he sat down and ate his sandwiches and his tea cakes, and presently the warm sun filtering through the bare branches made him very drowsy. He lay down and looked across the fields and wooded hills. A haze like soft blue smoke filled the air. It was Indian summer. Terry could see the shocks of corn in a field near by. They looked like rows and rows of small brown tents. How jolly it would be, he thought, if they were tents and brave Indian chiefs lived in them. Terry sighed. He wished he had lived sooner, when men killed deer and wild turkeys to eat and little boys could help fight Indians.

Terry lay and watched the cornstalk tents slowly change into tepees made of skins. An Indian chief, tall and brown, with war paint on his face and a war bonnet of feathers on his head, came to the door of the first tent. He pointed to where Terry lay under the scaly bark tree. He gave a loud and warlike yell and leaped upon a buckskin pony. At once other Indian braves, all very tall and brown and brightly painted, came out of other tents. They leaped upon other ponies and, led by the big chief, came galloping toward Terry.

On they came, a yelling band, waving tomahawks wildly. Terry tried to get up and climb the tree. But he found he could not move a muscle. Big drops of sweat came out on him. The Indians were upon him now. They grabbed him and wanted to know what he meant by taking all their scaly barks. Terry told them that they could have them back and welcome! But they said no. They must punish him, or other little boys would raid their nuts. The big chief lifted him upon his pony and away they went. They stopped at last and decided they would burn him at the stake. Terry's teeth chattered so that he couldn't even beg for mercy. He saw the stake ahead with brush all piled around it, ready to burn him up.

At that minute something soft whisked across his face. Terry's eyes opened. It was the cross old squirrel. He'd been trying to get back some of his nuts! Terry gave a big happy shout. It was just a dream, a very bad dream, the worst dream, in fact, that Terry had ever had. Perhaps he had eaten too many paw-paws on the road that morning. The tents were there in the field as before he went to sleep, but they were made of cornstalks again. And instead of painted Indians Terry saw a flock of friendly blackbirds circling around them. At last he sighed. "I'm glad I live nowadays. I don't reckon a massacre's all it's cracked up to be!"

The sun was getting low. The cows at home would be waiting to be milked. Terry took a handful of nuts and threw them down for the old squirrel. "You did me a good turn, old fellow, when you waked me up," he said. Then he shouldered his bag of nuts and went down the winding path toward home.—Christian Observer.

THE DEER AS A JUMPER.

Many years ago I was talking with a famous old woodsman of the Carolina swamps and our conversation turned to the subject of deer, and particularly to the question of their ability as jumpers, writes Archibald Rutledge in St. Nicholas. Each of us was able to give some remarkable examples of the wild deer's power as a jumper, but neither seemed certain as to the limits of this power. Finally my friend said: "Well, I believe that a deer can jump just as far and as high as he has to." While we cannot admit this, there's an element of truth in it. It is not often that a deer exerts all his powers as a jumper; and more seldom still is he observed to do so.

As a matter of fact, a deer's motions are singularly easy and graceful. When he jumps, he seems to float over obstructions, without careful approach and without apparent effort. Moreover, the deer is singularly sure-footed. During thirty years of hunting, I have seen in the woods upward, I think, of a thousand deer. Most of these were in flight, in wild country, where the footing was most treacherous; yet I never saw an unwounded deer fall down. I have seen one blunder; but his recovery was so rapid that his loss of equilibrium was hardly noticeable.

I once measured the jump of a deer which sprang from its bed—that is, the first jump it made from a position flat on the ground. I had approached this deer on foot, across the dry bed of a pond, lined with soft moss, and was within about eight feet of the creature when it sprang up and away. It had been lying at the base of a huge pine in a tiny clump of huckleberry bushes, too small, one would think, to hide a deer. There was a space of black damp sand surrounding the pine, so that I was able to measure the jump with certainty. It was fourteen feet, one inch. But remember that this jump was made from a lying-down position. While running, the average jump of the whitetail is from fifteen to twenty feet; but by small effort a mature deer can increase this distance amazingly.—Exchange.

A LESSON FROM NATURE.

A bird's feathers not only keep it warm but help it to fly. Being broad they act like paddles in the air, and are so light they do not weigh it down. Besides having feathers to help its flight, the bird has little sac-like balloons inside its body which are filled with air from its lungs and from which the air passes into the bones and other parts of the body. Every time the bird breathes these sacs and lungs and bones are filled with fresh air. This is the reason that birds are lighter than other animals and can sail in the air for such long distances.

Birds sing sweetly because their voice-box is made differently from that of other animals. Instead of being placed near the throat as ours is, it is in the bird's breast where the windpipe forks to go into the lungs. The walls of the bird's voice-box are thin, and instead of having cords stretched across it, there is a thin valve which works like the reed in a organ-pipe.—Selected.

DIRECTIONS:

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We sincerely thank Rev. W. C. Newman, Houlka, Miss., for a list of nine subscriptions, recently sent in.

Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss., recently lost by death one of its faithful official members, Mr. John Guy Comly.

The Seashore Camp meeting will begin on Thursday night of next week. Rev. Luther Bridgers will be the preacher.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, our pastor at Philadelphia, Miss., has our sincere thanks for a list of nine subscriptions, recently sent in.

Lander College, of which Dr. R. H. Bennett is president, has under way a campaign to raise $500,000 for endowment, new buildings, etc.

The editor of the Advocate is having the joy of assisting the pastor, Rev. William Schuhle, in a protracted meeting at Tangipahoa, La., this week.

The editor greatly regrets not being in the office last Thursday afternoon when Dr. R. A. Tucker, Columbus, Miss., and Dr. W. W. Holmes, Shreveport, La., called.

Rev. and Mrs. E. S. Lewis announce the marriage of their daughter, Virginia, to Mr. Walter Allen McCord on Friday, July 20, at Grenada, Miss. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

Rev. R. F. Harrell, our pastor at Many, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Wednesday of last week. He was returning from the sad mission of attending the funeral of his brother, who died in Gulfport, Miss., last week.

The Advocate notes with great sorrow the death of Mrs. C. A. Holcombe, wife of Hon. C. A. Holcombe, at Baton Rouge last week. Mrs. Holcombe was a sister of Mrs. Franklin N. Parker. We tender our sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

The Winnfield Methodist church, Winnfield, La., will soon celebrate the "golden jubilee" of the service of Mr. P. K. Abel in that church. He joined that church on the first Sunday in September, 1878. He is one of the leading laymen of Louisiana Methodism.

Rev. H. B. Gilmore, local evangelist, 302 Miller Street, Hattiesburg, Miss., writes: "As many of our pastors are finding it hard to get help in revival meetings, especially in rural districts, I wish to say that I shall be available this summer. All I ask is a free-will offering."

Mrs. Charles A. Born announces the marriage of her sister, Selina K. Climo, to Mr. Oshorne J. Dunn, on Monday, June 25, at Denver, Colo. Mr. Dunn is an active official member of our Epworth Church, this city, and the Advocate extends to him and his bride all good wishes.

Mr. William E. Harmon, widely known philanthropist, died at his summer home in Southport, Conn., on July 15. He was especially interested in the welfare of the Negro race, and he provided an endowment fund to provide awards for distinguished achievements by Negroes.

The Methodist Laymen's Conference will be held at Lake Junaluska, N. C., Aug. 19-26. Four thousand men are expected to be in attendance. A special feature of the unusually fine program will be music every day by Signor Mario Cappelli, the famous Italian tenor, of New York, who was spoken of by Caruso as the one who would fill his place.

Protection Against Old Age

During the absence of the pastor, Rev. T. M. Brownlee, on his vacation, the pulpit of the Capitol Street Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss., has recently been filled by the following: Dr. G. F. Winfield, president of Whitworth College; Rev. H. S. Spragins, pastor of Galloway Memorial; Judge J. H. Foreman; and Rev. Marlin H. McCormack, Jr.

At the meeting of the General Board of Education last week to elect a successor to the late Dr. Stonewall Anderson as General Secretary of the Board, Dr. H. H. Sherman was chosen for the position. Dr. Sherman has been connected with the Board for several years, is thoroughly familiar with the work, and is one of our most efficient educational leaders.

Rev. D. C. Barr, an honored superannuate member of the Louisiana Conference, celebrated his seventy-sixth birthday on July 18. On invitation of the pastor, Rev. C. C. Wier, he preached a birthday sermon at Winnfield, La., on last Sunday. Brother Barr was licensed to preach in the old Winnfield church in 1877. He is a native of Alabama, but was reared in Louisiana, where he is greatly beloved throughout the State.

Rev. Robert A. Cross., Jr., is writing his graduating thesis in the Candler School of Theology, Emory University, on the subject, "The History of Methodism in New Orleans." Brother Cross will appreciate any information from readers of the Advocate bearing on this subject. Until Aug. 25, his address will be Box 642, Emory University, Georgia; after that time, until the latter part of September, it will be 7307 Hurst Street, New Orleans.

Mrs. W. M. Williams, Magee, Miss., requests us to say that she did not accept the position of editor of the Woman's Missionary Society page in the Advocate, and material intended for that page should not be sent to her. We repeat the announcement we made last week, that Mrs. J. E. Brown, Gloster, Miss., has been compelled to give up the work as editor on account of serious ill health, and communications for this department should be sent direct to the Advocate office until her successor is appointed.

Miss Mollie Harbour, of Baton Rouge, La., kindly gives us the following information about the death of Rev. J. Wilson Brown: "Rev. J. Wilson Brown, a superannuate member of the Mississippi Annual Conference, died at the Baton Rouge general hospital on July 7, 1928, and his body was interred the following day in Magnolia cemetery at Baton Rouge. Brother Brown is survived by his wife, Mrs. Sarah Harbour Brown, and two sons. He had been ill only about two weeks and had been actively engaged during this year in raising a crop on a small farm near Blackwater Methodist church. He was seventy years of age. Brother Brown was always ready to preach when called upon; and each Sunday he met his Sunday school class at Blackwater."

Dr. Rolfe Hunt writes, under date of July 21: "Six-day meeting closed at Pelahatchie last night. There were eighteen accessions on profession of faith and two by certificate. Six infants were baptized. Applications of four were received by certificate a few days before the meeting. After Sunday, the preaching was done by Rev. Del Longgrear. He is excellent help and leaves a lasting effect. Rev. J. H. Foreman rendered valuable service in song and otherwise. Drs. Decell and Winfield were with us some."

MISSION SPECIAL, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

If the Mission Special money has not been sent in from your charge, will you not kindly send it to Rev. A. M. Broadfoot, treasurer, even though you have not finished your collections? Send what you collected, so that he may send to the Board of Missions. We get hardly anything at this time of the year from the benevolences; therefore, the Mission Special money is very much needed.

Brother Broadfoot reports twenty-one charges that have not sent in any money at all, though in most of these some money has been collected, and in some, neary all of it. Please send what you have and continue your collections and send this at a later time.

IT DEPENDS UPON THE PASTOR.

We have said in our Methodist church during the years that the preacher was the "key man." Sometimes we have made the expression trite, but nevertheless it is true. Our pastors set the pace for their churches. Some preachers have a habit of succeeding, others have the habit of failing. Some would bring any situation to a better stage of development; others would retard the growth anywhere. And some would just drift between "on the misty flats." We have all seen a place where the work of God's Kingdom had never been pushed. People said it couldn't be done. Then a new man went, one who had always succeeded. He went with a song in his heart. He expected to succeed. And he succeeded! Somehow his spirit was contagious. People caught his purpose, his faith, and then caught step with him. And the work was done. It is amazing what power the preacher has over his congregation. People believe in the ministry. They expect them to represent God to their souls, and homes and communities. They follow their leadership. God purposed for it to be that way. It is the natural, Divine way. But what a responsibility it puts on the man who fills the holy place! His life, his attitude towards the work, his plans for the Kingdom, everything he says and does, yea, everything he is, tells what his people and church will move towards.

I've seen a loyal congregation changed into a disloyal group by the attitude of the pastor. A new man came who was "soured" on the church, and was living in the yesterdays. He believed all the good people were like "door nails," dead, and he was left alone and they were trying to drive him! But he would not be driven. No sir, not he! He was for the good old days when people had religion, and when the church was run right, and when God visited his people. He didn't believe it would ever happen "again, but he couldn't help that, he was "agin" the present order of things. And I've seen his spirit destroy the love and loyalty of a majority of a congregation, and it took almost the life's blood of some saint of God to bring things back toward the things of the kingdom. Some preachers are loyal to God and the church. They follow the leadership, and the programs of the church. As a result their people are edified and strengthened, and the church feels that it is a part of the great church connectional. Others will have only their own plans. They find fault with the leadership of the Kingdom, just as some did in Moses' day, and they are not a part of their district, or Conference, or church. They simply stand alone, no part of Methodism. Such men have no place in the Methodist ministry! They may be good men. But unless they are connectional in spirit, they are not good Methodists! Methodism's glory is the fact that she is one and connectional throughout the world. Wherever you find a congregation of our people you find there a unit of the whole church. One disloyal preacher, like one sinner, destroys much good. But, thank God, most of our preachers are loyal, both to their call to the ministry and to the church of their choice. They are loyal to the Spirit of God, to the leadership of the church, and to the people they endeavor to serve. Most of the ones who are disloyal are so because they don't know the things they are disloyal to. God gave us understanding minds and hearts for our tasks in the Kingdom of God!—The Llano District Pathfinder, W. L. Ban. Presiding Elder, Editor.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

By Rev. J. O. Hanes.

We hear a great deal these days concerning religious freedom. We believe in religious freedom, and we also believe in political freedom. Much has been said concerning religious bigotry in the South. In my opinion, the South is in far greater danger from political bigotry.

By all means let every one worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Likewise, let every one cast his ballot according to his own convictions.

The hour has struck for free born sons and daughters of the South to rise to the clarion call of a high patriotism, placing righteousness above expedlency and principle above partisanship.

The Primary Department of the Carrollton Ave. Methodist Sunday School.

Miss Ruth Chalmers was Superintendent, took part in the project and sent four bags. The children brought gifts to go in the bags—gifts pertaining to the school life of the Mexican children.

One Sunday morning we wrapped and tied the gifts and wrote a letter of friendship to go in each one and mailed the bags. We did this as part of our Missionary program, and the children took a great deal of interest in it.

SEMI-CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Muskogee, Okla., will celebrate the fiftieth birthday of the church during the month of September. On the 16th day of September all the former pastors and all the people who have been baptized in this church and all who have been married in this church will be invited to have a part in an all-day program. Let those who have in any way been connected with First Church take notice, if you read these lines, that you are invited, whether you receive a formal invitation or not. We will appreciate a line from any who may read these lines, giving us their present address.

"VICTORY."

By J. Hubert Young.

When sun's last rays have all withdrawn.
And hordes of darkness creep to fore;
Each moment says that hope is gone.
The night seems darker than of yore.
Even the hours seem to lag
Behind each other in their flight;
And they withal are prone to drag
Our spirits further from the light.

Ah! Such a picture here I paint.
With dismal colors so discreet;
Now, even I am prone to faint,
And lay me down in sad defeat.
But no; need every hope be gone,
And spirits droop in such a plight?
A thousand nays, for soon the dawn
Shall come, and bring its warm sunlight.

Methinks that when on Calvary's brow,
Our Christ did hang in shameful feat,
That those who loved him could but bow
As though his death had brought defeat.
But when the darkened days were past,
And ties of death were burst in 'twain,
Glad cries and hopes were skyward cast,
Our Christ had come to live again!

SOME WEATHER SIGNS.

Signs of fair or foul weather are noted very carefully by country people. Some of them are more inclined to believe in the old saying about the weather than in any readings from barometers or the predictions of weather prophets. Here are a few old sayings:

Evenings red and next morning gray are certain signs of beautiful day.

If the cock goes crowing to bed, he'll certainly rise with a watery head.

When black snails cross your path, black clouds much moisture bath.

When rocks fly sporting high in air, it shows that windy storms are near.

When the peacock loudly bawls, soon we'll have both rain and squalls.

If the moon shows like a silver shield, be not afraid to reap your field. But if she rises haloed round, soon we'll tread on deluged ground.

A rainbow in the morning gives the shepherd warning; that is, if the wind be easterly, because it shows the rain cloud is approaching the observer.

A rainbow at night is the shepherd's delight; that is, if the wind be westerly, as it shows that the rain clouds are passing away.

If at sun-rising or setting the clouds appear of a lurid red color, extending nearly up to the zenith, it is a sure sign of storms and gales of wind.

When you see gossamer flying, be ye sure the air is drying.

If the fog lies close to the surface of the ground until it is gradually dissipated by the sun, the day will be bright and fine.—Exchange.

REV. T. J. MARTIN was born, May 16, 1844; died April 10, 1928; joined the Methodist church while a youth; felt called to preach some years after, and, feeling, "woe is me if I preach not the gospel," began, and as a local preacher he did as much service as almost any man could possibly do until he retired. He preached for more than forty years. Men and women all over this part of the State say, "I was converted under his preaching." He went to the call of the South in 1861, and served four years under her flag. His church was first in all things, but he was true to his State. If an issue came, everybody knew where to find him. He and his wife were married over sixty years. Eight children were theirs to love and rear, only one of whom was a daughter. But she cared for them in her home. She and those sons and his wife survive. He told them he was going home where Jesus lived.

This records the passing away and burial of little HARRIETT ELIZABETH ROYAL, who was 5 years, 6 months and 24 days old, the daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Watt H. Royal, of Natalhany, La. It was discovered the first of December, 1927, that little Harriett was losing her happy disposition, and her activity was being reduced rapidly. She was placed under the observation and treatment of the leading doctors of Baton Rouge, New Orleans, La., and Boston, Mass. All were unable to relieve her. The diagnosis of her case, tumor on base of brain. She was physically strong in the beginning of the attack, and fought courageously for life to the end. She wanted to live here longer, desiring not to leave those behind she dearly loved, toiled, and fellowshiped with.

On June 28, 1928, at 4:45 p. m., the angels came to accompany her to her new abode in the great beyond, where she will be happy throughout the endless ages. Her little body was carried to Shreveport, La., and placed in the Forest Park cemetery. Little Harriett leaves behind the anxious father and mother, two little brothers, Phillip and Rudolph, and a host of relatives and friends.

On June 26, 1928, MRS. ORA COOPER, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Stokes, passed to her reward, and her body was laid to rest in the Harrel graveyard the next day. She joined the Methodist church, Baton Rouge District, when she was a child, and remained a member until removed by death. On Aug. 14, 1915, she was married to Tinie Cooper, who because of his sunny disposition was known among his friends as "Happy Cooper." After several months of suffering she was carried to the hospital in New Orleans, where she passed away. Her husband, father, mother, two brothers, and three sisters are left in sadness. But the memory of the many happy days spent with her in this world remains. She was loved by all who knew her; and why death should call her so soon, we know not, but we are conscious God makes no mistakes. We bow in submission to his will, realizing this world is not our home. We are "like grass which groweth up. In the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth."

J. F. McCLELLAN.

Pine Grove, La.

MRS. SARAH ELIZABETH WHITTINGTON was born in Covington County, Miss., Nov. 26, 1855; joined the Methodist church in 1880; married L. T. Whittintgon, Feb. 1, 1880. She was a true mother to her three children. She loved her church and her Bible. Unable to attend service for seventeen years on account of rheumatism, her pastor's coming to hold service with her was always a great joy. From her home near Drew church, Monroe, La., she went home on April 30, 1928, happy in the love of God, glad to be free from the pain of so many years. Her corner is vacant, but the messages and life of my mother are a benediction to all of us. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr. She leaves to mourn their loss three children, three sisters, fourteen grandchildren.

"As I sit to-night by my window and gaze at the stars above,
My thoughts turn back to my mother,
of her tender, affectionate love.
In fancy to-night I can see her, I hear her sweet voice again
As she wispers 'good-bye, God bless you; not long till we meet again.'"

Her daughter,

GOOD REVIVAL AT LA BRANCH STREET, McCOMB, MISS.

The revival meeting at La Branch Street Methodist Church, McComb, Miss., came to a close with great results. Twenty united with the church and the whole church was strengthened.

Rev. J. L. Campbell, of the Pearl River Avenue Methodist Church, did the preaching; and never has there been clearer-cut sermons—ones that made each hearer think on his way—than these brought by him.

The singing was great. Rev. O. H. Scott, one of our home boys, had charge of the choir and young people's work. Brother Scott is a great singer, and with the young people he cannot be equaled. Any pastor or evangelist that needs a singer, I do not hesitate in recommending him.

PASTOR, LA BRANCH STREET CHURCH.

FROM LUCEDALE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: The church at Lucedal, Miss., has been enjoying for the past two weeks the services of one of the real high-class evangelists of Southern Methodism. Rev. Luther A. Horn, Alabama Conference evangelist of Mobile, Ala., closed a revival campaign on Sunday, July 15. Rev. J. Ray Watson, our pastor at Holt, Fla., led the song services. Our church and town are better because of the presence of these two high-type men of God. Brother Horn is a powerful preacher, sane, sincere and modest.

There is in his presentation of the gospel a refreshing absence of sensational stunt preaching. And to any church that longs for a revival that revives, conducted on a high plane, we do not hesitate to recommend Brother Horn. We had fourteen additions to the church and a general reconsecration on the part of church members. The community as a whole was greatly impressed, and expressed its appreciation of the far-reaching effects of the campaign. Brother Horn is now engaged in a meeting at Salem, Ala. We look forward to his return to our community in October, at which time he will conduct the meeting at Salem Camp Ground.

C. C. CLARK, P. C.

The training of a native ministry is probably the most important phase of missionary work in the Congo. One missionary recently expressed it thus: "We foreigners are impressed more and more by the hopelessness of the situation on this vast continent as far as we ourselves are concerned. For one thing, we are hopelessly few in number. Our greatest task is to train native workers who will do the work we cannot do because of the fewness of our numbers." In the Methodist Episcopal Congo Mission there is a Bible school at Wembo Nyama, where native evangelists are trained for service.

Woman's Missionary Society

MEETING AT WAYNESBORO, MISS.

The largest delegation that has ever attended a meeting of zone No. 1, of the Methodist Woman's Missionary Society, was present at the one held in Clara. Waynesboro, State Line, Buckatunna, Matherville, Pleasant Grove, and Clara were well represented.

The meeting was ably presided over by Mrs. W. A. Hays, zone chairman, and president of the Waynesboro auxiliary. Morning devotionals were led by Rev. O. B. Matheny.

Mrs. Annie C. Lee gave the welcome address; Mrs. L. R. Newsom, of Buckatunna, graciously responded. Mrs. W. R. Huggins, district secretary, gave a splendid report of the Council meeting. An excellent paper on "Stewardship and Tithing" was read by Mrs. Harry Batchelor, of State Line, and one on "Medical Missions After Fifty Years," by Mrs. Lawrence Fulton.

The devotional for the afternoon was conducted by Prof. C. A. Massey, principal of the Wayne County Agricultural High School. Well prepared papers on "The Seven Sabbaths of Song," were presented by Mmes. C. L. Daniel, E. H. Bond, J. M. Broach, Troy Norseworthy, M. M. Reynolds, G. P. Powe, Jr., and W. A. Hays. A feature of the afternoon's program was the quiz led by Mrs. R. J. Briggs, Jr., of State Line.

Mrs. T. O. Slaughter and Mrs. W. P. Gray, of Waynesboro, rendered a beautiful vocal duet, and Miss Nell Campbell and Mr. F. W. Vaughan, of Clara, a violin duet, accompanied by Mrs. C. A. Massey.

The ladies of Clara served a lovely lunch at the noonday hour.

An invitation was extended by Pleasant Grove for the next zone meeting, which was gladly accepted.

THERE is nothing that has ever taken the place of Bayer Aspirin as an antidote for pain. Safe, or physicians wouldn't use it, and endorse its use by others. Sure, or several million users would have turned to something else. But get real Bayer Aspirin (at any drugstore) with Bayer on the box, and the word genuine printed in red:

MEETING OF ZONE 4, VICKSBURG DISTRICT.

This meeting of zone 4 was held at Utica, June 12, 1928, with Miss Pearl Fisher, of Cayuga, chairman, presiding.

The auxiliaries of the zone are Burtonton, Cayuga, Hermanville, Rocky Springs, Utica and Port Gibson, and every auxiliary was well represented. Among those present was Mrs. E. D. Jones, of Carlisle, our honored pioneer leader. There were also visitors from Vicksburg and Holly Bluff. The meeting was fortunate in having on the program Mrs. L. E. Alford, Conference president, and Mrs. W. T. Hegman, Conference superintendent of supplies, both of whom gave inspiring and helpful messages which largely made up the program for the day. The last number on the program was a demonstration given by Port Gibson auxiliary, led by Miss Lili Hartwell, a former Scarritt student. Those who attended the meeting felt at its close that the day had been well and profitably spent, and united in thanking the members of the Utica auxiliary for their lovely, gracious spirit of kindness and hospitality. The next meeting will be held at Cayuga.

KATE DRAKE,
Zone Secretary.

ZONE MEETING AT HOMER, LA.

In Homer, La., on May 30, an enthusiastic gathering of ladies, young people and pastors responded to an invitation given by the auxiliary host, and partook of the tempting delicacies of a noon luncheon.

Mrs. Guy Kinnebrew extended cheering words of welcome, and in like manner Mrs. J. H. Pittman accepted the cordial reception. A musical reading by Mrs. M. D. Harris, a quartet by the Athens young ladies, and a flute solo by Mr. U. W. Grenfell were acceptable features of the social hour.

Representatives from the five auxiliaries comprising zone 1 assembled for the afternoon program. A service of prayer and praise was conducted by Mrs. Garrett, of Wesley.

Miss Winnie Camp, of Haynesville, talked on "Spiritual Cultivation."

The beautiful song, "When They Ring the Golden Bells for You and Me," was sung by Mrs. Beene, of Haynesville.

Mrs. Arthur Ford, a zealous member of the Homer organization, talked of prayer, and expressed the greatest need of our church as being a genuine revival.

It was a privilege to have with us Prof. U. W. Grenfell, a member of the evangelistic board of singers, and known as "The Little Welsh Singer." He sang "Speak to Me, Lord."

The question box, in which each auxiliary was to place three questions, was presented to Mrs. Carolyn Dawson, the contents being explained by her.

Five members of the local Junior Missionary Society, directed by Mrs. E. S. Whitelaw, gave a very interesting playlet, beseeching each and every one "To Help Carry the Circle of Friendship Around the World."

This meeting was made unusually inspirational by having with us Mrs. John D. Pollard, of Monroe. In her "High Lights on Council" she made us breathe the atmosphere that we know was prevalent at Nashville, and inspired us to want to live nobly, give freely and offer our best in his name.

LUCILE DAWSON GARRETT,
Secretary.

ZONE MEETING AT McCOMB, MISS.

The zone meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society was held at La Branch Street Church, Monday, April 30.

In the absence of Mrs. Hunter, Mrs. H. L. Norton, of Summit, was elected secretary pro tem. Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. J. F. Campbell. The welcome address was given by Mrs. C. M. Carruth, the response by Mrs. W. C. Terry, of Auburn.

An excellent paper on the subject, "What Does My Church Membership Have to Do With My Relation to the Woman's Missionary Society?" was read by Mrs. Gilbert Wennerlund, of Centenary Church.

"Stewardship" was presented by Mrs. H. E. Felder. Her arguments were clear and convincing.

An instructive paper on "Woman's Work in Japan" was furnished by Mrs. Ruth Smith, of Summit.

A most interesting talk was given by Mrs. L. W. Alford on "The High Points of the Work of the Council." Her entire address is worthy of publication.

Dr. Tucker gave us a short address, commending the women for the good work they are doing.

MRS. H. L. NORTON,
Secretary.

LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT.

The meeting of the Woman's Methodist District Conference for the southern section of the Lake Charles District, was held at Crowley, June 5.

Mrs. R. S. Walton, of Sulphur, district secretary, had charge of the meeting. Mrs. P. L. Lawrence conducted the devotional service. Mrs. H. A. Parker was elected secretary.

Mrs. H. E. Lewis, of Crowley, in her welcome address, gave us this thought, "Bring what we can from our work and give it to our neighbor.

In response Mrs. J. S. Segura, of Rayne, said: "We go forward insofar as we serve others."

Mrs. Walton read a report of the activities of the Lake Charles District for 1927, and an outline of plans for 1928:

1. For October, the study of our History of Missions.

2. To make our special Jubilee offering for the Week of Prayer as large as possible.

3. A Daily Vacation Bible School, so that all officers be proficient in their work.

Mrs. C. M. C. Pulham, of Gueydan, followed with a presentation of her subject, "The Value of Zone Work."

Mrs. Jesse Hoffpauir, of Crowley, spoke of her plans for zone 4.

Auxiliary members told each of the work accomplished in her auxiliary in the past year.

Lunch was served at the church. During this hour the choir from the Colored Methodist Church entertained with several Negro spirituals.

The afternoon session opened with the Jubilee hymn and devotional led by Mrs. W. M. Buchanan, of Lake Arthur, whose subject was, "The Price of Discipleship."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The program of this term of the Leadership School is drawing to a close. It has been the most successful session held here at Mount Sequoyah, and certainly its spirit and influence will be felt throughout the church throughout the years.

The Conference superintendents' night wss a most enjoyable occasion. Brother R. H. B. Gladney, Superintendent of the North Mississippi Conference, made the keynote speech, and it was a most gripping and dynamic deliverance. The audience gave him a well deserved ovation, and from all sources have come words of commendation. Being the oldest man in point of service, it was a joy to all of us that he grasped the meaning of the whole religious education movement and packed it in so few sentences.

Certainly the leadership of the church is making an effort to guide the church forward. To see the whole of Southern Methodism shows the bigness of the undertaking. One Conference has one problem, another has another, and so on.

It is apparent that the open country church situation is to the fore, and that from many angles it will be studied; and I think will be helped. No question has been given the consideration that this has. The church through its leadership is making an effort to aid.

Brother Hull and family are enjoying the work and trip. He has been faithful to the task given him, and has grown in the estimation of both the General Board and the Conference workers. He is making an actual contribution to the work, and I am sure will go to his task at home refreshed in mind and spirit.

Mother!

Child's Best Laxative is "California Fig Syrup"

Hurry Mother! A teaspoonful of "California Fig Syrup" now will thoroughly clean the little bowels and in a few hours you have a well, playful child again. Even if cross, feverish, bilious, constipated or full of cold, children love its pleasant taste.

Tell your druggist you want only the genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother, you must say "California." Refuse any imitation.

The worship programs have been exceptionally helpful and will furnish guidance for many in this work in their local churches. Especially helpful was the program on the suitable hymns to be used for the respective age groups.

The platform work has been of superior quality. It has been challenging and helpful.

I trust that the Cokesbury work is moving helpfully.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Before these lines are in the hands of the editor, the first term of the Leadership Training School being held at Mount Sequoyah will have come to a close. Mount Sequoyah is more than 1,700 feet above sea level. The nights are cool and the days are not too hot for hard study. The citizens of Fayetteville gave to the Conferences 400 acres of land, $35,000 in money, water, sewer, light, and telephone privileges. Fayetteville is the city where the State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College are located. The city is one of the most beautiful in Arkansas. The people are unusually hospitable. Mount Sequoyah is a delightful place for study and high fellowship.

I judge the enrollment of its school this summer is about 350, the largest attendance in the history of the Assembly. The class in which I am working has an enrollment of about eighty. We put in six hours each day of genuine work, and in addition to class work, we spend two hours in committee, and two to three lectures. Only a few who come here dodge the work laid out for us. The men and women engaged in the different phases of religious education are touching the Methodist church from center to the circumference. Some day the significance of what is quietly going on will come out where it will be known and felt by the entire church. My own conviction is, the church will be upon a higher plane of thinking and of more Christlike way of living.

During the months of August and September we hope to hold at least two institutes in the districts where they have not been held. These institutes will be of help to all who attend. We surely can have hundreds of our workers come together to give and receive help in our common task of spreading the good news. When we are not holding institutes we shall endeavor to check up as many schools as we can reach, that these schools may know wherein they have succeeded and what they lack.

Numbers of Cokesbury classes are being taught and our workers will continue to the last day of the Conference year.

Remember, we shall continue to urge the schools that have failed to observe Sunday School Day to do so, for the good of the school that participates and for the salvation of the schools that need our help. The men the Sunday School Board has employed are working to the limit of their strength and ability.

One big item we have before us during the month of October is the observance of Childhood and Youth Week. There is no school too small or too weak that might not do this piece of work in a manner that will help the entire church membership. The people, the teachers, and others interested in the children look to one man to take the lead in this project. Where he leads they will follow. It is not possible to do any work of lasting value in any charge unless the man who is in charge is willing that it shall be done. What a responsibility and what an opportunity! Not one penny of expense need he incurred; not a penny is asked for. Every item of information is provided, everything except the one thing locked up in the leader. This cannot be delegated to another.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The August issue of the Sunday School Outlook will be a "Special Mansfield College" number. This issue is edited by President D. B. Raulins. There is a close relationship between the Sunday schools and our colleges, so close that the theme of the next General Sunday School Council will be, "Religious Education and our Colleges."

The writer is just back from Mt. Sequoyah, where he had the pleasure of taking the Seminary Course on the Program of Work, which proved to be the most helpful course ever given in a Leadership School. Dr. John W. Shackford, General Secretary of the Sunday School Board, acted as chairman.

While at Mt. Sequoyah we heard many lecturers, among whom was Prof. Nance, of China, who gave us the present political situation in China. In a personal talk with Dr. Nance we learned that he was sent to the Orient many years ago and his financial support came from a member of First Church, Shreveport.

Dr. John A. Rice, formerly a member of the Louisiana Conference, delivered two great addresses at this Leadership School.

We appreciate the following words from Rev. J. G. Snelling, Secretary of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions: "I am very much interested in your work and I sincerely appreciate all that you are trying to do to build up the Kingdom of God."

"Lesson Material Courses" will be very popular in Standard Training Schools this year. We congratulate the DeRidder and Amite Training Schools in securing Prof. J. P. Rutledge, of Hendrix College, for the course on "Junior Lesson Material." Prof. Rutledge taught this course in the Leadership School at Mt. Sequoyah this summer and we heard many favorable comments about the course and the teacher.

INFANT MORTALITY LOWERED.

By Dr. Oscar Dowling, President, Louisiana State Board of Health.

Infant mortality in the United States has declined from 100 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1915, to 64 deaths per 1,000 live births in 1927.

Although Louisiana was admitted to the Registration Area for births in 1927, the records of the past five years are approximately correct and show a decline in infant mortality. In 1923 the rate was 82.3 and in 1927, 77.1.

Of 100 babies dying in the United States during the first year of life (1925), 21 die on the day they are born; 39 die before the end of the first week; 53 before the end of the first month, and the remaining 47 die during the other eleven months of the year.

The main causes of infant deaths are significant. One hundred and thirty-four thousand six hundred and fifty-two babies died in the United States in 1925; the principal causes were: Natal and prenatal, 47 per cent; pneumonia, influenza and bronchitis, 17 per cent; diarrhoea and enteritis, 16 per cent; communicable diseases (whooping cough, measles, diphtheria, scarlet fever), 3 per cent.

Louisiana records show for 1926-27 premature birth and injury at birth, 2,150 deaths; the pneumonias, diarrhoea and enteritis, 1,068; whooping cough, 226, and diphtheria, 39.

There are now forty States and the District of Columbia in the Birth Registration Area, representing 87 per cent of the population of continental United States. In the five-year average of annual rates of infant mortality, Oregon is lowest with 54, and Delaware highest, with 97.

ZONE MEETING AT BRANDON, MISS.

Zone 1, of the Jackson District, held its second quarter's meeting Friday, June 15, at Brandon, Millsaps Memorial Auxiliary, of Fondren, sponsoring the program; Mrs. W. H. Dorroh, zone chairman, presiding. There were delegates present from each of the seven auxiliaries composing zone 1.

Ridgland, recently added to this zone, was represented by four sisters, the Misses Tucker, nieces of Dr. Tucker, missionary to Brazil, and nieces also of Mrs. J. W. Perry, of Nashville, member of Missionary Council. Miss Esther Tucker was recently appointed zone Superintendent of Young People's Work, and in her talk made on this work she volunteered her services in the organization and development of the Young People's work wherever needed in this zone. Only one auxiliary, Glendale, reported an active, well organized Young People's auxiliary.

The morning session opened with singing the "Jubilee Song," followed by devotional led by Rev. Charles Downer, pastor of Glendale church.

Dr. Rolfe Hunt, by request of the local auxiliary, delivered the address of welcome.

Mrs. Josephine Cox, of Grace church, responded to the address of welcome.

William Fazackerl and Bobby Rickman, Epworth-Juniors of Grace church, then sang "In the Garden."

"A Paying Investment," a leaflet of compiled statistics, covering the work of the home and foreign departments of missionary work, was read by Mrs. Hickman, of Grace church. The chairman requested that each auxiliary secure a copy of this leaflet and study it, as it so clearly and startlingly sets forth the needs of greater missionary effort.

"Bedstemoder" Koch, of Grace church, gave a humorous reading, "Lucinda Jones Goes to Town." Mrs. Koch is proving herself a most versatile entertainer.

Miss Gates, of the Blind Institute, sang as a solo, "My Task."

A plate lunch was served at the noon hour by the hostess auxiliary, and, as is always the case, this social hour was much enjoyed.

The afternoon session was opened by singing "Jesus Calls Us," followed by an earnest prayer by Mrs. W. W. Ford, president of Galloway Memorial Auxiliary.

Mrs. Rolfe Hunt, of Brandon, gave an excellent paper on "Stewardship" or "The Highest Use of Money." This paper was so good that in response to many requests and an urgent request from the zone chairman, Mrs. Hunt consented to have the article published.

Mrs. Sue Langley, Mrs. Ola Loflin, Mrs. Jessie Berry, Mrs. Sue Land, Mrs. Rosa DeWeese and Mrs. Florence Pollock, all now of Jackson, but formerly of Brandon, and each at one time an active member of the Brandon Missionary Society, were introduced to the assembly as honor guests.

The most interesting feature of the meeting was the reading of the histories of the zone auxiliaries. The following histories were given: Galloway Memorial, by Mrs. Minnie Manship Phelps; Grace Church, by Mrs. Sue Langley; Millsaps Memorial, by Mrs. Pruitt; Glendale, by Mrs. L. B. Hamberlin; Ridgland, by Miss Esther Tucker; Pelahatchie, by Mrs. Effie McDonald Pennington; Brandon, by Mrs. Florence Pollock and Mrs. Ora Loflin.

Mrs. John Layton, of Grace church, gave a reading, "The Faithful Few."

A resolution was introduced and unanimously carried that, beginning with the next meeing of this zone, each woman attending the meeting shall bring with her six sandwiches, thus relieving the hostess auxiliary of serving lunch. This was thought advisable, that the hostess auxiliary might enjoy the whole program and not be "cumbered about much serving."

The next meeting will be held at Grace church, Jackson. The time and auxiliary furnishing the program will be announced later.

After a rising vote of thanks to the Brandon Auxiliary for her cordial welcome and bounteous lunch, the meeting adjourned with benediction said by Dr. Rolfe Hunt.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: In spite of the exceedingly hot weather I have certainly been on the go for the past two weeks. After assisting the secretary at Lake Charles District in planning for the Efficiency Institute to be held at the beautiful Lake Arthur Camp Grounds the last week in March, I went to Alexandria to confer with our president and found him recuperating from a tonsil operation. Of course "Charles" wasn't able to talk, but I know you will be glad to know that he has gotten along just fine since his operation. After meeting with Miss Elizabeth Murphy, Ruston District Secretary, at Arcadia, I went to the little community of Antioch, ten miles from Ruston, where I found one of the liveliest rural Leagues I have had the pleasure of working with. They could work, sing, and play as fine as any group of Leaguers in Louisiana. Three of their Leaguers had just attended Assembly and were anxious to make their chapter count for better work this next year. I held a three-night institute with these Leaguers, giving them methods and instruction. I shall go to Douglas and Calhoun this next week with the same program.

I am so proud of the work being done in Monroe District by Miss Anna Pharr Turner, of Shreveport, and Mr. W. L. McDuff, of Chase. These two Leaguers are holding three-night institutes and organizing the entire district into unions, with a chapter in every charge. Mr. Carl Lueg, of New Orleans, is in Baton Rouge District holding the same kind of programs, and he writes that he is finding lots to do but that the young people are rallying in a splendid way. Rev. Alvin Smith and Miss Katheryn Smith, of Shreveport and Bossier City, have also volunteered their services, and they will be at work in the different districts. Katheryn Smith will be in Lake Charles and Alexandria Districts during August. Mr. McDuff will assist in the Minden District, and Al. Smith in the Shreveport District. This type of work is being done in the rural charges by these volunteer workers, and I feel that it is one of the biggest projects we have ever undertaken. I am most grateful to them for their services.

You will be interested in knowing that our fine Leaguer, Jolly Harper, of Pineville, is now Brother D. B. Boddie's assistant at Opelousas. Jolly was recently converted, volunteered for the ministry immediately, and was one of the most enthusiastic Leaguers at Assembly. We are proud that he has been given this great field of service.

I trust that all of our Leaguers are well under way with their new year's program. You are beginning a year that may well be the biggest in our history because of the splendid program of work laid before you. "Adventuring in Christian Living" is your theme, with your Scripture basis found in the Nazareth sermon, Luke 4:14-32. Your departmental emphasis will be Social Service. Each week you will have a special prayer given in your Era to be used at your devotion on Sunday afternoon and each night during the week. In using this prayer remember that all the Leaguers in Southern Methodism join you in asking the Heavenly Father to grant that prayer. Surely such united communion with God will mean much in promoting his kingdom on earth. Let us strive for better programs, bigger opportunities of service and greater accomplishments for 1928-29 than ever in the past. If I can be of any service to you, my desire is to render that service to the best of my ability.

May God bless my Leaguers day by day.

ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

There's peace in the household guarded by Castoria. Peaceful sleep for Baby. Uninterrupted rest for Mother. For a few drops of pure Castoria will quiet any fretful infant. Or put the little one back to sleep when there's an upset during the night.

Parents, don't try to do without good old Castoria! It isn't fair to the baby, and it makes things hard for you. You can't give Baby medicine meant for grown-ups—or shouldn't! Castoria is the solution. It is always safe. It always does the work. And although it acts as swiftly as an opiate or a narcotic, it contains neither. Castoria is purely vegetable. Give it whenever there's constipation, colic, diarrhea.

No less than five million modern mothers have come to depend on Castoria, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Get yours today; don't wait for some night when it's needed, and the drugstore is closed!

THREE-NIGHT LEAGUE INSTITUTES FOR THE SMALLER TOWNS.

The Monroe District was very fortunate to secure the assistance of Miss Anna Pharr Turner, of Shreveport, in counducting the above named institutes, and we truly regret that she could not spend more time in our district. Miss Turner is our State Hi League Superintendent, also the only Leaguer in the State to hold the degree of Institute Expert, and we feel that the results of the four institutes held at Gilbert, Rayville, Waterproof, and Bastrop will be manifested at State Assembly next year. To us these institutes rank next to the State Assembly in value to the Leaguers, as the programs planned by Rev. James B. Grambling, our Assembly Dean, and Miss Elizabeth Langford, our Field Secretary, are very complete, covering every phase of the local chapter's work. There are a few chapters in the northern part of our district in need of assistance, and institutes will be held at these places by our District Secretary.

It would be a pleasure to relate some incidents of Christian co-operation as shown by the Leaguers and their parents in the towns where institutes were held; however, time and space will not allow, as I want to give an outline of the programs so thoroughly planned by the above named State workers:

First Night.

7:45 to 8—Pep Meeting. (Organize sides.)

8 to 8:30—Department of Spiritual Work.

8:30 to 8:40—Devotional, by pastor, "Adventure of Prayer."

8:40 to 9:10—Department of Missions.

9:10 to 9:30—Recreation; Fellowship.

Second Night.

7:45 to 8—Pep Meeting.

8 to 8:30—Department of Social Service.

8:30 to 8:40—Devotional, "Adventure of Prayer," pastor.

8:40 to 9:10—Departmen of Recreation and Culture.

9:10 to 9:30—Recreational Fellowship.

Third Night.

7 to 8—Picnic Lunch, Church Lawn.

8 to 8:30—Hi League and Epworth Junior Society.

8:30 to 8:40—Devotional, "Adventure of Prayer," pastor.

8:40 to 9:10—Council and Business Meeting.

9:10 to 9:30—Recreational Fellowship and awarding of Loving Cup to side with highest score.

We now have one new Senior League and one new Hi League in Monroe District since Assembly, and our plans are to work together as a team, organizing the young people where possible so that we might be of greater service to Christ, our church, and our community. May we all consider it a privilege, and sreve him gladly, who died for us, is my prayer.

MISSIONS AND NON-CHRISTIAN PRACTICES IN AMERICA.

(Oration in the Epworth League "Know Missions" Oratorical Contest, delivered by Miss Octavia Rickey, Tallulah, La.)

Some years ago in a Christian assembly, a Chinese official prayed this prayer: "O God, make China like the United States." Does he still want this prayer answered? Is our religion worth exporting? We call ourselves a Christian nation, but are we wholly Christian? Do we have a vision of "The Christ of the American Road" in our hearts? And are we living the Christ-like life?

There are many social, economic, political and moral evils which must be remedied. There is a general tendency toward moral laxity, as shown by the ease of breaking the marriage vow, disappearance of the family altar, disrespect for law, the quest for wealth and pleasure; and above all that peculiarly American idol, success.

Theodore Roosevelt has said: "This country will not be a good place for any of us to live in unless we make it a good place for all of us to live in." How will we go about making it a good place for all of us to live in? Let us glance for a moment at some of the great tasks which confront us on our own doorstep. The need is especially felt among the underprivileged and neglected sections of our country, and neglected sections of our country. The crowded slum districts of our large cities with their sick and sorrowful and fallen, present a great problem as well as a great oppor-

nunity. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

In the rural districts, the United States Government is having good roads and good schools built. What a blessing it would be to the community if the church should be improved likewise and become really progressive! The industrial workers with their labor problems need to be touched by the spiritual life of the church. Many people will give money for the heathen in Africa, but are not concerned about the soul of the Negro who lives a few blocks away and works in their own kitchen? Then last but not least come the unreached Mexican, Cuban, and Italian immigrants, who are swarming in upon us and challenging us by their poverty, ignorance, and superstition. As these needy elements of our population present their appeal and we realize the few inadequate French missions to meet the needs of the French people in our own State, certainly the church is challenged to apply its gospel with greater fervor and to launch a missionary program on a better and larger scale than ever before.

In seeking to solve the problem of Christianizing America, let us look at some of the things which have been done in the past. In the early days in America, the itinerant preachers sought to reach the people whom the regular organizations neglected. With little organization of well defined plan, they followed the line, not of least resistance but of greatest need. These splendid pioneers did the needed work perhaps in an unsatisfactory way, but always in the spirit of the true missionary. The Indian was the first to receive the attention of that first great Methodist, John Wesley. And so the Home Mission Work has gone on from year to year until to-day it has become well organized and effective.

What wonderful things we could accomplish in the Home Mission work if all had the spirit of giving of the little girl, Hattie Mae Wiatt, who went to a small Sunday school and asked to be admitted. It was explained to her that there was not enough room. In less than two years she went on her own little last pilgrimage. No one guessed her strange little secret until underneath her pillow was found a torn and tattered pocketbook with fifty-seven pennies in it, wrapped around with a scrap of paper on which was written, "To help build the Sunday school bigger so that more children can go to Sunday school there." The pastor told the touching incident to his congregation, and the people began making donations to make the church larger. The papers told it far and wide, and within five years the fifty-seven pennies had grown to be $250,000. If you go to Philadelphia to-day, you will see a great church, university, hospital, and a Sunday school building where all the children who want to may come and be comfortable. She was only a little girl with a little girl's heart; but who can estimate the power of her ardor, her unselfishness and her fifty-seven pennies?

The need for religious education and better methods of work has been realized. The womanhood of the church has become organized and has become one of the most effective agents of the home church, the gathering of funds and material and all that applies to the setting up of the kingdom of God.

Some of the officers' training camps for our Methodist battalions are: The Sunday school, Epworth League, Woman's Missionary Society, Mission study classes, Standard Training Schools, summer assemblies, and daily vacation Bible schools. The forces are organized and ready for the greatest advance the church has ever witnessed. What a wonderful task for the youth of our land as well as the more experienced! Never before have the young people of America had such a golden opportunity. The challenge rings clear and calls for the very best that is in us. The following is a Home Mission program proposed by Dr. J. Stowell:

1. Every family in America cared for by some church.

2. Every boy and girl in America enrolled and attending some Sunday school.

3. Every church in America with an adequate and well trained staff, a well considered program of worship, religious nurture, and community ministry. What a picture! All Christians should work and pray that the will of God may become the law of every life and the joy of every heart. May America realize her obligation and rise to her glorious opportunity in the day of her redemption through Jesus Christ.

Puts An End To Bunion Pains

No Need to Suffer Another Day

There is one simple yet inexpensive way to reduce inflammation of swollen toe joints and help get them down to normal and that is to apply Moone's Emerald Oil night and morning.

Ask any first class druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and refuse to accept anything in its place. It is such a highly concentrated preparation that two ounces lasts a long time and furthermore if one bottle of Emerald Oil does not give you complete satisfaction you can have your money refunded.

Special note: People who want to reduce swollen or varicose veins should get a bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil at once. Applied night and morning as directed they will quickly notice an improvement which will continue until the veins and bunches are reduced to normal

ZONE MEETING AT SUNFLOWER, MISS.

The second zone meeting for 1928 of zone No. 5 convened in Sunflower Methodist church, June 20, with our zone president, Mrs. George Sledge, presiding. Mrs. J. E. Coleman acted as secretary.

A most cordial welcome was extended in a lovely welcome song by the Sunflower Juniors. The response was graciously given by Mrs. Worthy, of Doddsville. The morning devotional was conducted by Mrs. Lancaster, of Sunflower. Prayer was led by Mrs. J. E. Coleman. Mrs. Pierce, of Greenwood, was introduced, and Mrs. Walker, Mrs. Mitchell, and Mrs. Wright were especially welcome to the meeting. Doddsville was selected as the place of next meeting.

Reports of societies were given as follows: Blaine, Doddsville, Sunflower, Wade. Report of annual district conferences at Ruleville was given by Mrs. Thomas. Mrs. Pierce made report of district parsonage and presented a plea to each society for a contribution toward maintaining the parsonage. Motion was carried to present to each society its assessment for maintaining district parsonage, to be paid some time during the year. Continuing zone meeting was discussed, with the decision that meetings be continued.

Brother Storment, pastor-host, was introduced, and spoke words of encouragement.

Mrs. Lindsey, of Ruleville, spoke in the interest of the Young People.

The song message so beautifully brought by Mrs. McLean, of Blaine, was a joy to the meeting. Mrs. Pierce, of Greenwood, gave an interesting paper on "Our Pioneer Women." Mrs. Wells and Mrs. Boyett, of Greenwood, were presented to the meeting.

A rising vote of thanks was given Sunflower for their hospitality. Mrs. E C. Stancel led the consecration service, which was enjoyed by all.

There are two important matters to be emphasized during the early part of the quarter. One is the completion of the Superannuate Endowment quota and the other is the Golden Cross enrollment. May we give prompt and due attention to these great causes? Already the revival campaign has produced notable results. Let us continue this work with all the zeal and devotion of our hearts.

THE NEGRO SPIRITUAL.

By Frederick Hall, Director of Music, Clark University.

The spiritual had its beginning in the heart of the Negro as he labored in the fields of the South. These songs are outbursts of religious fervor, and in many cases are influenced by conditions which surrounded the people in whose minds they were born.

They are called Spirituals, Jubilees, Melodies, Folk Songs. Either name is correct. They are called Jubilees because of the ray of hope that is expressed in each. Regardless of how sad the song might be, or how miserable the conditions surrounding its birth, there is always found in it a definite pointing to a great day of Jubilee when all sadness will be turned into gladness, They are called Spirituals because of the deep religious feeling they express. They are called Melodies because of the striking melody built upon a scale that was originated by the slaves. When a new song was born it usually began with a melody hummed by one person. After the tune was caught, the whole group or congregation would join in, increasing the strength of the melody and adding harmony. These songs are called Folk Songs because they satisfy the scientific definition of Folk Song, which definition is too well known to mention here.

The Negro Spirituals express a sympathy of feeling between words and music not always found even in the compositions of learned musicians. In many songs that we see to-day, the tune gives one idea and the words another. In the Spiritual the words spoken convey a certain idea and the tune sung or played gives a similar feeling. For instance, the originators of these songs would never have taken words such as "Nobody Knows De Trouble I See" and set them to a happy tune like "Every Time I Feel the Spirit." In every instance words and music harmonize, and herein lies a thread of real artistry.

Some of these songs are sad and some are happier. This is true because of the difference in living conditions of the people who originated them. In different sections there are different interpretations, different words and slightly varying melodies of songs that originally were the same. This is true because at first the songs were not written down, but carried from place to place in the minds of the Negroes, and very frequently a new condition caused a slight change of the song.

These songs are deeply religious and should not be sung in such a way as to cause laughter or ridicule. Instrumental accompaniment always spoils the effect of the songs, and sometimes robs them of their identity. They can be sung artistically and according to all modern rules of vocalization and choral expression without being robbed of their real simple meaning.

The Spirituals show the character of the people in whose hearts they had their being, expressing patience, simplicity, sincerity, and the firm belief in the God of all mankind.

CHRIST'S YOKE NO ADDED BURDEN.

By the Rev. H. L. Moir, M.A.

"Take my yoke upon you, for my yoke is easy."—Matt. 9:29.

Here our Lord is calling to those who feel burdened, and it is not difficult to know what he means. Whatever takes the joy from life, whatever is too hard, whatever makes us dispirited and depressed, and afraid of life, its past or present, or future; our failures, our infirmities, our lost opportunities, misfortunes, ill-usage, over-work, regrets, anxieties, our fear of death and judgment to come—to all such things he refers when he says: "Hither to me. Take my yoke, for my yoke is easy."

Craft of Carpentry.

A yoke is something that helps in the carrying of a burden. It lies across the shoulders, and the ropes that fall from its ends hold the burden which is divided and balanced and kept clear of the bearer's body, and borne where it can best be carried—on the strong framework of the shoulders. Our Lord must often have made such yokes for his fellow-villagers, and there would be no yokes better made than his, none so smooth and kindly. And now when he is done with the carpentry that helped men with plowing and carting and the carrying of literal weights like buckets of grain or earth, and when he finds himself face to face with men and women who carried heavier burdens of sin or fear or pain or sorrow or responsibility or shame, his mind goes back to the imagery of the carpenter's shop and the life of village labor. He sees men and women twisted and bent in soul, and he says: "It is a yoke you need, and there is none like mine. I can adjust you to your burdens, and your burdens to you. There are no helps like my helps. Hither to me. Consult me." For Christ has ways of fitting us out for life, ways of making intolerable things tolerable, and taking the ache and misery from life, and showing us how we can walk erect, even when burdened, singing as we go.

Needless Burdens.

When we consult him about our burden the first thing he does is most surprising. He asks us to lay it down at his feet and open it for his inspection. He finds things in our load which we do not need to carry. He finds that many have been staggering under many worries and he insists upon relieving us of anxious thought concerning those things of which he says, "Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."

He finds, too, that many are burdening themselves with an unnecessary load of guilt, and making the mistake of which A. M. Fairbairn said: "The sense of sin in Pusey was more a matter for himself to bear than for grace to remove." And our Lord deals with this so marvelously that the relieved soul breaks into Micah's wondering doxology, "Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity? Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea." Such a thing seems at first, as Quiller Couch says in connection with Hetty Wesley's problem, "merely incredible, though promised on the honor of God." When a soul comes to Christ it learns that such things as guilt and terror and worry and foreboding are useless hampers which faith will gladly allow him to throw away. For as Doctor Macintosh says in his great book about forgiveness, "God does not forgive us by installments."

"My Yoke Is Easy."

But there are heavy things which we must all carry. "Every man must bear his own burden," says Saint Paul. But our Lord has ways of rearranging or redistributing our burdens. He knows where we have been galled. He knows the friction spots, and before he puts our burdens back upon us he furnishes us with what he calls "My yoke." Many misunderstand him. They think his yoke an added burden, and refuse it, saying, "I have enough to carry without that." And by "that" they mean another mass of duties, something that will further complicate life; mysterious doctrines, and searching precepts, and exacting ideals, an extra drain and strain on life. But Christ stands with uplifted finger saying, "Hither to me." And when we come we find that this added burden of his is what wings are to a bird, and sails to a boat, and an engine to an aeroplane. He says reassuringly, "Do not be afraid, for my yoke is easy and my added burden light."

The Understanding Christ.

And more; when we have consulted him and suffered him to examine and readjust and sling what we are to carry, he says, "Now you are ready for the road, and, as it happens, I am going your way and we can go together." He marches with his children, and his hand is quick to steady and relieve. As he walks with us he has ways of heartening us with the sweet convoy of a friend. He knows the best tracks through rocky defiles. He knows the quiet resting places, beside refreshing waters. And all along the ways and through the days and nights of the journey he has wonderful things to tell us—things that make us forget our burdenedness, or reconcile us to it. Things we used to dismiss as "theology" or "religion" or "preaching" turn out to be Christ talking to us by the way, about his Father and life, and the hindrances and the meaning of the journey, and its goal. He introduces us, too, to his friends, and we find there are none like them. And we learn to see and take opportunities of helping others on the way, and so discover all the joy and added strength and contentment that come when we help to bear one another's burdens, even when we carry our own.

So I begin to understand him when he cries, "Consult me about the problem of your burdenedness and about my yoke." You'll find it "lined with love." This magic yoke turns out to be something we are always getting from Jesus. He studies each case and fits it with his yoke. And we say in happy confirmation of his promise: "O the difference to me. Thy yoke is easy, and thy burden light."—The Scots Observer.

CALLED MEETING OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION, LAKE JUNALUSKA, JULY 17, 1928.

The General Conference Board of Education met at Lake Junaluska, July 17, at 10 a. m., to elect a sucessor to Dr. Stonewall Anderson as General Secretary. Practically the entire Board was present, and after appropriate remarks by Bishop Mouzon and others, concerning the life and work of Dr. Anderson and of Rev. Robert Selby, a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions on the death of these two members of the Board, to be made a matter of permanent record in the minutes.

After some discussion of men and policies, the Board proceeded to the election of a General Secretary, nominations being made from the floor. The result of the first ballot showed that H. H. Sherman had received twenty out of twenty-one votes cast, and the President declared him elected.

Before adjourning the President issued a call for another meeting of the Board to be held at 11 o'clock, to consider such matters as the Executive Committee might refer to it. At this second meeting Hon. Nathan L. Miller, of Birmingham, Ala., was confirmed as trustee of Emory University, in place of Bishop James E. Dickey, deceased, and Dr. Allen H. Bunce, in place of Mr. Thomas W. Connally, deceased; also Rev. J. L. Cannon, of the Little Rock Conference; Rev. George G. Davidson, of the North Arkansas Conference, and Dr. W. Winans Drake, of the Louisiana Conference, were confirmed as trustees of Southern Methodist University, succeeding themselves.

Dr. Sterling Fisher, of San Angelo, Tex., was elected as a member of the Board in place of Hon. D. O. Terrell, of San Antonio, Tex., who had resigned; Rev. Hubert Sydenstricker, of the Baltimore Conference, as a member of the Board in place of H. H. Sherman, who had been elected General Secretary, and Dr. J. R. Countiss, of Grenada, Miss., in place of Rev. Robert Selby, deceased.

Dr. J. H. Reynolds, President of Hendrix College, was elected a member of the Executive Committee, and Dr. C. C. Grimes, of Memphis, Recording Secretary of the Board. The election of an additional member of the staff to take the place of H. H. Sherman, as Secretary of the Department of Promotion and Finance, was deferred. The Executive Committee was authorized to act for the Board on such recommendations as the General Secretary might make. Rev. Nathaniel G. Long, of Georgia, was elected by the Executive Committee as Assistant College Visitor in the Department of Religious Education.

Mr. Ralph Nollner, Superintendent of the Southern Assembly, came before the Board and expressed his appreciation of the Board's meeting at Junaluska, and extended to the members all courtesies and privileges during their stay. He also gave them and their wives, including Mrs. Stonewall Anderson, and her son, John Anderson, a very cordial invitation to be present at a banquet Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock, to be given by the Assembly. The invitation was accepted with thanks, and the banquet proved to be a very delightful occasion.

H. H. SHERMAN, Recording Secretary.

POETICAL TEXTS.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

Misunderstood.

Could we hut draw back the curtains
That surround each others iives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives,
Often we wouid find it better,
Purer than we judge we shouid;
We shouid iove each other better
If we oniy understood.

Couid we judge aii deeds by motives,
See the good and had within,
Often we should love the sinner
Aii the whiie we loathe the sin;
Could we know the powers working
To overthrow integrity,
We shouid judge each other's errors
With more patient charity.

If we knew the cares and triais,
Knew the effort ail in vain,
And the bitter disappointment—
Understood the ioss and gain—
Would the grim external toughness
Seem, I wonder, just the same?
Should we heip where now we hinder?
Should we pity where we biame?

Ah! we judge each other harshiy,
Knowing not life's hidden force;
Knowing not the fount of action
Is iess turbid at the source;
If we saw, instead of evil,
All the golden grain of good;
Oh! we'd love each other better,
If we only understood.

—Anonymous.

I wonder if we cannot, all of us, look back upon some one whom we haye criticized harshiy and misunderstood, and regret it because we see later the fine things about that person that were hidden from the outward eye? How comforting it is to know that God seeth not as man seeth, but looketh deep down into the heart! We aii remember how John McDonogh was misjudged and how we owe to him the education of ourseives and of our children. There are many such instances, aud they shouid be a iesson to us not to condemn, for we do not know the heartaches and the sorrows and disappointments that are behind the curtains of some souls. A man seems sometimes grim and tough; but he may have a heart of pure gold. A woman may have a forbidding countenance and she may be reticent aud silent; but perhaps she is compressing her iips to hide some pain and eudeavoring to keep back the tears because of some secret sorrow.

I remember once hearing some young people criticise their teacher, saying she was crabbed and cross; and it was not untii death came to reiease her from her suffering that it was found she had a terrihie maiady that was sapping away her iife and her very breath had been one of agonizing pain that she endeavored to hide. Sometimes we think a man stingy—and we find that he has been hoarding to keep some iittie invaiid or imbecile from want. Foiks do not aiways wear their hearts ou their sieeves. if we would oniy look for the good instead of the evii, we would find it and we would not be harsh and misjudge. Life holds enough of tragedy aud disappointment and heartache without our picking out the flaws; so iet us remember to hoid back the criticisms and to say, oniy what is heipfni and kind, and then wiii we indeed love each other better when we understand.

STEWARDSHIP.

By Mrs. Roife Hunt.

(Published by request of Zone No. 1, Jackson District, Woman's Missionary Society.)

The subject Stewardship is becoming a live one iu the churches, our own branch among them. The mid-year Council of Lay Leaders of our church met eariy in the year in two sections, one in Dallas, Tex., and the other in Atianta, Ga. Among conciusions reached by the Findings Committee were:

Observauce of speciai period of four weeks, with use of speciai set of ieaflets, etc.; organization and functioning of a iive stewardship committee in every church; sermons on stewardship by pastor; careful distrihution of ieaflets on stewardship; use of iay speakers on stewardship; promotion of study classes and stewardship schools; use of pageants on stewardship; special stewardship programs by different organizations of the church; provision for teaching stewardship course in Pastors' Schools and Standard Training Schools.

Some of our church papers are reporting that coures in Christian stewardship have heen taught in some of the Standard Training Schools. At one of these, Spartanburg, S. C., a resolution was passed urging that Christian stewardship be given a prominent piace in the program of the year, and that a careful and systematic study be given its principies. It was further stated that the subject is largely misunderstood hy our peopie at large, and that the minds of the peopie should be ciarified by heing taught by people who reaiiy know the fieid. It was aiso stated that stewardship is a principle of Christian experience, and should not be used as propaganda to raise funds in financial campaigns. In another of these Standard Training Schools, Fort Worth, Tex., it was stated that this course is iargeiy a pioneer one, but it was hoped to see it incorporated in District Training Schools. The importance of the subject is heing recognized.

We find we must cuitivate a sense of stewardship. We need to cultivate it as assiduousiy as we have the sense of ownership and possession. A sense of stewardship is the recognition of the ultimate fountain of our life and strength. All we have is ours in trust. Dr. Jowett says: "There is a strangeiy paraiyzing power about money, and it so restricts the heart that the more we get, the iess we are inciined to give. Riches can make a man think he is growing bigger, when ail the time he is growing iess." One of the fundamentai principles of stewardship is the recognition of Divine ownership—that aii we have, even of materiai things, is from the Lord. From him we receive food and raimeut and sheiter. He affords us the ability to earn a iiveiihood. He gives us power to get weaith." "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine saith the Lord of hosts," "and the cattie on a thousand hills." The inspired word makes these matters clear. And yet many peopie act as if they did not believe that God is the real owner of ail we cali ours.

But some one says: "i have earned all I call miue by hard toii and iabor, by the sweat of my brow. It is really mine." We repiy: "In a certain sense, yes." So far as mere human ownership is concerned, it is his, and not the property of another. However, God gave him the power, the physical and mentai abiiity, to earn it. Had not God given him powers and facuities and sustained him in their use, he couid have done absoiutely nothing. In the final anaiysis we are his, and aii we have is his.

God has given us these things to use for his giory, for the good of humanity, and for our own happiness. We are not at iiberty to use what he gives us just as we please; but must use all in such a way that God may be honored, our fellowmen benefited, and we ourselves blessed.

God asks us to use a part of what he has given us for the advancement of his cause and kingdom. indeed, he asked the chosen people to put aside first a definite proportion of their income for him before they used anything for themselves. They were to honor God with first fruits of all their increase.

Now, if one faiis to return to the Lord a reasonabie proportion of that which the Lord has given him, or if he returns a very insignificant amount, a meager proportion, as some do; or if he returns nothiug to him, as is the case with far too many, and spends aii the Lord has given him for self and seifish ends, he is wastiug the Lord's goods. He is not dealing houestly with the Lord. He is not a good steward of Jesus Christ. Paui, writing to the church at Coriuth, teaches us that giving is a grace.

Giving in the right spirit and with the right motive, is just as much an act of worship as praise or prayer; aii through the Scriptures we find giving mentioned in connection with worship. Some one asserts that for every time prayer is mentioned once in the Bible, giving is mentioned four times. We recaii (Acts 10:4) the angel said to Cornelius, "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up as a memoriai before God." It may be our prayers do not ascend very high when we are unwiiling to accompany them with gifts, if we are abie to give.

It has heen said that sixteen of the thirty-eight parabies of our Lord deai with money, and that in the gospeis one verse out of every six deals with money.

A Richmond pastor receutiy gave the ascending steps of Christian giving, as foiiows: The starting point, the Tithe; second step, Proportionate Giving; third step, Ahounding Liberaiity; fourth step, Heroic Giving; the ciimax, Love's Offering.

We can hut hriefiy discuss each. First, the Tithe. In Lev. 27:30-32, the tenth of one's income is deciared to be the Lord's. The tithe then does not heiong to mau. Belonging already to God, it cannot be presented to him as a free-will offering. Such offering man should make out of his nine parts. "He who faiis in free-will offerings is deficient in charity, but he who fails in tithes is guiity of robbery, not of man, but of God."

In searching for the origin of the tithe we are led back to the early days of the human race. it seems that tithing may not be originaiiy a Jewish institution, but was practiced hundreds of years before Moses, and by other nations besides the Jews, and seems to have been recognized as a law of God for aii time.

Abraham, who had just come out of idolatry of Chaidea, it seems without further command, paid tithes to Meichizedek, priest of the Most High God. Melchizedek is the most perfect old Testament type of Christ. if the Chaldeans in those eariy days paid tithes, surely other nations observed the custom. This was five hundred years before the Jewish iaw. One has said: "Three hundred years before Siuai, Jacob vowed to God that he would give the tenth. Hence, since Abram, Jacob, the Jews and even the ancient heathen nations aii gave the tenth, rather than some other proportiou, it must have been recognized as the law of God for all timei Binding five hundred years before the Jews, binding upon the Jews, why not binding uow? This law has never been repeaied. Nothing in the New Testament to indicate it was to be discontinued, while it is repeatedly mentioned approvingiy."

Tithing has been rejected by some because, they say, it was the iaw of the Jews, and we are living under grace. It was aiso a iaw of the Jews that the leper shouid he segregated, hut the exponents of a life of grace do not object to the enforcement of the law to this day.

It is a reproach upon Christianity that both the heathen and the Jews spend more on their religion than the Christian spends on his. Surely we should give as much under grace as the Jew gave under the law. But we should not stop at the tenth. This is only the starting point.

The second step is proportionate giving. (I Cor. 16:2) "As the Lord has prospered you." This is a larger principle. In many cases this will greatly exceed the tenth. One says: "Our giving is a measure of what we receive, if not in temporal things certainly in spiritual things." "Give and it shall be given to you, good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom."

"Giving is living,' the angel said,
'Go find the hungry sweet charity's bread.'
'And must I keep giving, and giving again?'
My selfish and querulous answer ran.
'O, no,' said the angel, piercing me through,
'Just give till the Master stops giving to you.'"

We may notice that Christians have the money, but spend it on other things. It was stated some weeks ago in an article in the Literary Digest that the average American wastes fifteen times more than he gives to religon, and spends twenty-two times more for luxuries; that is, for every dollar we give religion, we spend thirty-seven dollars on wastes and luxuries.

A Methodist bishop tells of a steward who gave twenty dollars per year to God and spent seventy-two dollars per year for feeding hounds for sport.

It is estimated that America has 40 per cent of the world's wealth, and that 90 per cent of this is in the hands of church members. It is claimed that last year the people of America spent for luxuries alone approximately $21,000,000,000. It is also stated that Protestant churches of America spent on their program less than $500,000,000. Contrast these amounts! Forty-two dollars for self, one dollar for God. Far yet from proportionate giving!

Stanley Jones, in "Christ at the Round Table," says: "We Protestants have swept crucifixes from our churches and put in cushions.. At the time of the most amazing prosperity the world has ever seen the American churches are spending more and more for themselves and less and less to sustain that thin line of representatives standing on the frontiers of human need. The fact is, that line is being starved."

Harold Bell Wright, in the Atlanta Journal, April 22, 1928, says: "When some church member thanks God through his nose for the eternal salvation of his soul and out of a full purse gives a nickel to save the hungry and sick in his own neighborhood, the rest of the congregation look to see if their own pocketbooks are safe. Make no mistake, the truths of Christianity are vital, living truths—and they are applicable inside as well as outside the church."

Some time ago a paper told the following story: A small church was in need of repair, and a meeting was called to raise the necessary funds. The pastor stated five hundred dollars was needed. A wealthy and stingy member arose and said he would pay one dollar. Just as he sat down a big lump of plastering fell and hit him on the head. Jumping up quickly, he said: "I made a mistake. I meant fifty dollars." That was too much for an enthusiastic member present, who called out, "Lord, hit him again."

The third step is abounding liberality, or beyond one's means. Paul, speaking of the churches of Macedonia, said: "In a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality, for according to their power, they gave of their own accord" (I Cor. 8:2, Revised version).

A minister tells of a woman, who, on a dreary December day, came to the parsonage, bringing five dollars to put into the annual thank offering. The minister hesitated to take it. He knew her children needed food and clothing and that her own feet were damp, since her shoes were almost without soles and she had come through the snow. He finally received the money that she might have the joy of giving, but saw to it that shoes and groceries were sent to that home.

The fourth step is heroic giving—the half of one's possessions, as Zaccheus, who said: "The half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken anything by false accusation, I restore him fourfold. And Jesus said unto him: This day is salvation come to this house." Dr. Gambrell said: "Give until it hurts, and then give 'till it stops hurting."

The fifth step, to top of the ladder, the climax in Christian giving, is Love's offering.

In II Cor. 8:8, Paul speaks of giving as a proof of love. "As Jesus sat at meat in the house of the Pharisee, a woman who was a sinner brought an alabaster box of precious ointment and stood at his feet weeping, and she washed his feet with her tears and wiped them with the hair of her head, and kissed his feet and anointed them with the ointment. And the Lord said to Simon: Thou gavest me no water for my feet, but she hath washed my feet with tears. Thou gavest me no kiss, but she hath not ceased to kiss my feet. My head with oil thou didst not anoint, but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment. Wherefore her sins which were many are forgiven, for she loved much" (Luke 7).

On another occasion "Jesus sat over against the treasury and beheld how people cast money into the treasury. And many that were rich cast in much. And there came a certain poor widow and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called his disciples and said, Verily I say unto you that this poor widow cast in more than all they which have cast into the treasury. For they did cast in of their abundance, but she, of her want, did cast in all that she had, even all her living" (Mark 12).

Missionary annals are rich in examples of those who have made a love offering. Just here we refer to one only. It is that of Mary McClellan, who, after listening to an appeal, put in the collection plate a slip of paper on which was written, "I give myself and five dollars." She became the wife of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, and the mother of Bishop Walter Lambuth, and those of us familiar with the record of the Lambuth family can see the magnitude of the gift. It was love's offering.

In one of our papers was this story: A minister appealed for the support of a mission among the mountains. Rough men and women there knew little of God. He tried to show his people the blessed privilege of giving. He felt he had failed and was depressed. He had not seen crippled Maggie near the rear of the church. She felt she had nothing to give. A voice seemed to say:

"Yes, you have, Maggie. You have your beautiful crutch that others gave you. It is worth many shining dollars. You can give it, your best friend, that has helped you into the park where the birds sing, and takes you to church and makes your life happy." "O, no, Lord," sobbed the child; and then she said, "Yes, yes! I will." She handed the polished crutch to the deacon who was taking the collection. For a moment the man was puzzled, then he carried the crutch to the front and laid it on the table before the old pulpit. The minister held up the crutch with trembling hands. The sublime sacrifice had unnerved him. Then he said: "Do you see this, my people, little crippled Maggie's crutch—all that she had to make life happy? She has given it to the Lord, and you—what have you given?" Silence followed. People moved restlessly. The minister asked, "Does any one wish to give the amount of money this crutch would bring and give it back to the child?" "Fifty dollars," said a banker. "Twenty-five," said another. "One hundred," said another. The gifts and subscriptions were lightly piled over the crutch on the table. "Thank God, you have found your hearts," he said, and closed the service. Little Maggie was so absorbed in the magnitude of her gift and the love that prompted it, she had not seen what had taken place. She had given her all. A woman drew her to her and whispered, "Maggie, dear, your crutch has made many dollars for the mission cause and has come back to stay with you." With a cry of joy she caught the beloved crutch to her lonely heart, and, smiling through tears, hobbled out of the building.

In the jungles of Africa, Livingstone wrote in his diary:

"My Jesus, my King, my life, my all
I again dedicate my whole self to thee."

If we can make these words the standard of our living and of our giving, God will be honored and our own lives enriched.

In conclusion we will say we realize we have touched only a part of the subject. We must remember we are stewards not only of our means, but of time, talent, effort, learning, influence. We are stewards of all we are and may become.

"CATHOLICISM AND THE AMERICAN MIND."

By Rev. Marlin H. McCormack, Jr.

There has recently come to my attention Dr Winfred Ernest Garrison's new book, "Catholicism and the American Mind." This is the book for one who desires a sound, conservative exposition of the meaning of Roman Catholicism, and its significance to the modern American.

The book is not a tirade of denunciation of Roman Catholicism as one would expect of a book of this title, but the author, who is associate professor of church history in the University of Chicago, offers conclusive proof from Catholic sources of the underlying conflict between Roman Catholicism and Americanism. He takes the position that a good Catholic cannot be a good American. In other words, he would necessarily be inconsistent in his relationship to one principle or the other, for the two oppose each other.

That we should be tolerant toward the Catholics and all others, the author admits, but takes the view that "tolerance must stop short of tolerating a regime of intolerance." He says, pages 98-99. "Most Catholics and many Protestants who discuss the possible nomination or election of a Catholic to high political office—the presidency, for example—assert that the religious question is one that ought not to be raised in connection with eligibility to public office, and that to raise it is to be guilty of the grossly un-American crime of intolerance. As a general proposition, such a statement is sound. But in defense of those who think this country ought not to have a Catholic president, it ought to be said that it is precisely because they believe in tolerance that, rightly or wrongly, they take this position. It is because they believe the Catholic Church to be intolerant whenever it has power to be so, that they think the reins of government ought not to be committed to Catholic hands." (It might be added here that the Protestants never raise the religious question in the case of any one. Protestant or non-Protestant, seeking public office except Catholics. Take, for instance, the case of Mr. Taft, a Unitarian, who, so far as religious questions go, differs more widely from Protestantism than does Catholicism, but no one thought of raising the religious question during his candidacy. And, really, the question between Protestants and Roman Catholics is not one of religion, but of Roman Catholic political designs, bigotry, and intolerance.)

This book is so significant that no one who desires an intelligent understanding of the aims and methods of Roman Catholicism can afford to be without it.

NORTHERN GANGSTERS AND SOUTHERN LYNCHERS.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

There is no possible defeuse for lynching in the South or lynching in any other part of our country where it occurs. It is to be regretted that there are lynchings beyond the limits of the South which have even less excuse than most of those which occur in the South. But wherever a lynching occurs it is utterly reprehensible. It means the lynching of the law even more than it signifies the lynching of the victim.

But in the entire country last year there were no more than sixteen lynchings, if we may trust the statistics reported from a bureau which seems not to overlook any such offenses anywhere.

In the South there are approximately thirty millions of people, which is about ten times as many as are the inhabitants of Chicago. Yet the gangsters of Chicago who assassinate for money outnumber the lynchers of the South very greatly. Yet no bureau keeps the statistics of the dastardly deeds of the gangsters in Chicago and New York, and no Federal law is proposed to punish these assassins, although an anti-lynching law is proposed for the South. A lynching in the South is never done for the sake of money. It is generally done to avenge dreadful crimes against women and girls. But the gangsters of New York and Chicago kill in cold blood for cold cash. They seem to divide the cities up into areas assigned to particular gangsters or some particular "racketeers." When one of these shameless criminals invades the territory which another of his class claims, assassination is likely to follow.

Moreover, there is an unblushing boldness and a shameless openness about the gangsters in the great cities of the North. They do not conceal or deny their crimes, but do rather parade them.

A few days ago the press dispatches reported that one of them was buried in a coffin costing $15,000, and the manifestation of sympathizers at his funeral was in keeping with the costliness of his burial. Some time ago one of the leading dailies in Chicago printed under the caption, "A Gangster's Burial," the following editorial:

"America is entirely capable of providing astounding spectacles for the view of the world, and the fact was never better proved, perhaps, than by the manner of funerals provided for the slain chiefs of Chicago gangs. The nature of the warfare these aggregations of bootleggers and criminals in Chicago carry on is such that funerals are frequent. Uneasy lies the head that wears the crown of supremacy over a Chicago gang, but the taking off of any such is invariably followed by such magnificence of obsequies as would not shame kings of other and better sorts. The style was set two or three years ago with the ceremonies that attended the burial of Dion O'Brannion, and as a dozen or so of his successors in office have followed him along the path to oblivion, the splendor of the occasions has been magnified.

"All previous gangster burials, amazingly rich and florid as they were, faded into insignificance beside the final rites for Vincent (Schemer) Drucci, the lord of the North Side Racketeers, who was pumped full of lead as he tried to grab a gun from the hands of a policeman who had arrested him on the eve of Chicago's municipal election. It had been widely and freely rumored about that Drucci had been hired to perpetrate extensive frauds at the polls next day. It is to be presumed that Chicago's gangland felt that Drucci had died in an unusually noble and commendable fashion. He had been arrested for his alleged part in making the will of the people null and void, and he had been killed by a representative of the law. It was clearly incumbent on gangland to make a showing, and it did not fail.

"Going before the hearse that carried the body of Drucci encased in a coffin of aluminum and silver were twelve automobiles piled up and running over with the most beautiful and costly flowers that could be obtained. Newspapers estimate that $30,000 would be a conservative figure for the expense involved in providing blossoms to cover the grave of the dead gangster. Following the hearse came a procession that was equivalent to a social register of Chicago gangland. Riding in limousines driven by their private chauffeurs were the kings and princes and heirs apparent of the underworld. They were accompanied by weeping women who wore the most splendid of furs and silks and precious stones. Thousands of persons lined the streets and surged about the place where the funeral services were held. It was a sight that attracted, no doubt, even though it was nothing new or novel except in the degree to which it surpassed similar exhibitions.

"The funeral of Vincent Drucci, as were those of Dion O'Bannion, Hymie Weiss, Frank (Lefty) Koncil and perhaps a dozen more, was something more than that. It was an evidence of the utter lack of shame or fear that animates Chicago's underworld. Crime is a business, that is to say, and those who make conspicuous successes in its practice are to be honored and wept over as are those who are notably great along other lines of endeavor in this country. It is something to marvel at and deplore."

If this utterance had been made by an editor of a paper published in the South the inference might have been made that sectional prejudice biased the utterance; but this editorial is not from a Southern editor, but from an editor in the city where gangsters parade and prevail.

It is time to put down lynching in the South, and it is equally necessary to put down these assassinations in the North.

The duty of extirpating these crimes, whether done in the North or the South, rests upon the governments of the States in which they occur. It does not appertain to the Federal Government to deal with these matters, and, if the officers of the law in the several States are faithful, the laws of the States will be found adequate for the suppression of all such outrages.

There is no more call for an anti-lynching law by the Federal Government to suppress lynching in the South than there is for a Federal statute to suppress the diabolical deeds of gangsters in Chicago and New York; and to single out the South for special malediction against lynching and overlook the enormous crimes of racketeers and gangsters in New York and Chicago is a manifestation of an evil spirit of sectionalism which cannot be justified.

Lawlessness, whether it occurs in one section of the country or another, is lawlessness, and it deserves the sharpest condemnation.

If there be any difference between lynchings in the South and assassinations by gangsters in the North, there is more ground to extenuate the former than to excuse the latter. The great majority of the Southern people live in rural districts, and these horrible crimes which are followed by lynchings in the South occur where there is a lack of police protection; but the assassinations done by gangsters and racketeers in Northern cities are committed where there are large police forces, which forces ought to be able to arrest these repulsive violations of law.

But the Southern people ought not to plead the wrongs of Northern cities to extenuate crimes committed in the South, even though such offenses be done in unpoliced rural communities.

TRAVELING TO ARKANSAS—AND BACK.

Our first Sunday at Mount Sequoyah we had the high privilege of hearing Bishop John M. Moore preach. Both his sermons were graciously received, and we enjoyed them very much indeed. He was among friends and had liberty.

We had the pleasure of renewing friendships with old-time friends at Vanderbilt and from the Northwest Texas Conference. This was a privilege and pleasure greatly enjoyed and appreciated.

Sunday afternoon we loaded up the car and made a journey into Missouri. We left Fayetteville at 1:30 p. m., and went through Springdale. We passed the Arkansas University farm, and it was a wonderful place. They were doing things there that will mean much for the future of that great country. We were in the heart of the grape and apple country. For miles were orchards—grapes and apples. On to Rodgers, where the Welch grape juice is made. They claim this is the largest factory of this kind in the world; we do not know, as we have not seen all of them, but they had enough grapes to require a large factory.

From Rodgers we left highway 71 and took 117, going up through Bella Vista. They claim this to be the largest cabin population in the world—600 cabins full of people. They have spent much money here and have made it a wonderful resort. From here north our road led along the valley, clinging to the mountains on one side, with overhanging rocks, large towering cliffs, creeks rushing on one side, valleys of corn and meadows, winding roads. Here we crossed a creek whose only bridge was two iron troughs with side pieces about six inches high. The ladies were uneasy. On north to the State line, where two filling stations stared us in the face with cheap gasoline. We asked if they knew what mountain oysters were, and they said no, but they knew what "white lightning" was. We passed through Jane and on to Pineville, the capitol of the county.

We were directed down Elk River, a wonderfully beautiful stream, on a by-road to Mount Shira Resort. This was the raw country and was a fertile, fine country. The road was narrow but good, and the scenery worth the trip. Thence to Ozark and to Noel to the Bluff Dwellers' Cave and into Road 71 to Ozark colony, to Sulphur Springs. They seemed to be having a wonderful meeting of some sort here at Sulphur Springs. John Brown has a school here, and they have a union camp ground and tabernacle.

Our road took us to Gravette, where we again left 71 and took out down 107 to Gentry. More wild scenery and grapes and apples. I do not see how they get rid of all these grapes and apples. it looks to me as if grapes and apples would actually be in their way. When you did see a corn field, it was fine corn. I was impressed with the meadows and the clover fields. This is a wonderfully fine country and practically undeveloped.

At Gentry we took highway 12 to Siloam Springs. We merely drove through the town. We stopped to ask directions from a gentleman, and it turned out to be Dr. Andrews, the evangelist. We took No. 16, passing the tabernacle and the Springs on to Fayetteville. Tomatoes, blackberries, grapes, alfalfa, hogs, apples, winding roads, rushing brooks and more of it all over again and back to Fayetteville, making a trip of about 140 miles as lovely and nice as a trip could be at all. The political campaign got into the fore this week, and one meeting of the worship period was given over to the discussion and adoption of resolutions calling upon the Christians and church men and women to vote dry and vote for only dry candidates. I presume you read these resolutions published in the daily press. There were some hot speeches made and much oratory indulged in. Just what effect this will have is unknown, but you would expect a group of Methodist Sunday school workers to be bone dry—and they are and were.

This brings to mind the worship services. They were very helpful and useful. Each day it seemed as if the spirit was better and better. The songs selected were of a high order and demonstrate the worthwhileness of using great hymns. The second Sunday we heard Dr. John W. Shackford, who delivered a wonderful sermon on "Peace," mentioning those elements that were at hand to use to make universal peace possible, and the responsibility of the church to aid in this matter. That afternoon we went to Oklahoma. We first invaded Siloam Springs again, where we drank from two of the largest springs, went to John Brown's school and looked around, and then out to Dripping Springs and Rattle Snake Spring and on to a small town some thirty-five miles over the border.

Three things stood out on this trip—the evidences of camp meetings, advertised from the roadside, tabernacles and brush arbors, Sunday baseball. We passed one community in particular where a great camp meeting was in progress on the hill and on the level grounds, and a mighty fine baseball game. We passed one farmer smoking a fine-smelling cigar and cutting his hay. There was no evidence that he was not in good standing, and he eyed us as we passed about as those who were working on other days did.

We made it back to Fayetteville in time for supper and to hear Dr. Rutledge on the rural situation. This was rural night and the program was good and made a fine impression for the men and the work. Mr. Martin deserves much credit for the manner in which he put on the program.

Wednesday afternoon was reserved for sightseeing, and as the trip was to be to Dripping Springs and we had been there, we went to Eureka Springs. We passed through Rodgers as on the trip to Missouri, and then turned northeast. We began to climb immediately, and as we went up we began to find as fine beef cattle as it has ever been our lot to see, and we have been in the West, where they make a speciaity of beef cattle. Now and then we passed herds of milk stock, but mostly it was beef. The scenery was beautiful—the hills, the clouds, the streams, and softness and the sweetness.

Going down one of these mountain grades our second puncture occurred. We changed tires and on to Eureka. We crossed White River, and this was indeed a sensation. The view of the river after climbing the mountain on the other side was indeed a joyous experience. At one spot it looked as if we were actually on the top of the world. You realize, of course, after Brother R. H. B. Gladney came, he accompanied us on all our journeys. Miss Skinner was with us on this trip also.

Who can tell about Eureka? It is built apparently along the road that leads down the mountain, a street about two or three miles long and about one-quarter mile through; hut who could go through? The courthouse is here and a kindly, fine people. The tire was patched by a young man whose price was a joy to a poor man. I wish he was close enough home for me to use him regularly. Carroll County courthouse appeared to be made from the rocks dug out of main street. There were springs all the way down the mountain. The main spring was in the shape of a fountain. At this spot was a space with benches and a natural stage in the rocks, with overhanging rocks for a roof. Here in the afternoon and night was a band concert. After looking around and seeing the town, we went home the way we had come, hut were too late to hear the lecture that night.

The next day we started home. We went No. 45 to the intersection with 68, and thence to Huntsville, then up 23 to Eureka Springs. This seemed to be mostly wheat and oats and hay and tomatoes. It was our good fortune to see them at work threshing grain. At Eureka we took No. 12 to Berryville. This was the center of the berry growing district. Here we found a leaking water pump, but the garage man put in a new hose connection, then tightened the pump. This section was apples, grapes, cattle, and berries. From Berryville to Harrison, where we took No. 12 to Jasper, the county site of Newton County, twenty-five miles from the railroad and no railroad in the county. Here we discovered Diamond Cave and went out to the cave and took a three-hour journey in it, and came out and stayed at the hotel there. Clean and comfortable beds were much appreciated. This trip was a wonderful experience, as none of the Chambers' delegation had ever been in a big cave. We got an eye full and felt fully repaid by going this way.

We arose at 5:30 a.m. and were on our way by 6 back to Jasper, where we got a cup of coffee at as clean a small town cafe as we have ever been in. We continued with No. 7 down through the Government forest reservation. They were building the road. Part of the road was narrow and rough, part was simply fine. The scenery was the grandest we had seen. The country was practicaliy undeveloped. Until we reached Dover all the way from Fayetteville we passed one-teacher public schools in operation. I did not keep an accurate count, but it was too many. This is a new country with untold possibilities. At Russellville we were on the same route that we had gone, and so on to Little Rock, where we arrived at 12. As we stopped at a filiing station to get information, a tire went down, so we had to lose about forty-five minutes getting it fixed; then on 70 we went forward, making good time until we began to feel a bump-bump and got out to find a tire swelled up ready to burst. My, but we hurried to get it off before the tire went! We changed and on we went. At Hazen we dsicovered a detour around by Des Arc was opened and we did not wait for the shuttle train, but took the detour. At Des Arc we crossed the White River on a suspension bridge, which was a wonder. The desolation of this country after this flood is indescribable. One farm we saw where the sand was piled up as far as the eye could see for at least two feet, and in some places evidently more. Here we hit two-really-foot-deep mud, but others had made it and we ambled along and got to Cotton Plant and down to Binkley, where we resumed our No. 70 route and headed for Memphis, about two hours behind our schedule.

At Forest City we stopped to ask directions, and the service man notified us we had a flat, and he found four nice nails in a new casing, and he was nice about fixing it for us and putting us on our way. We arrived in Memphis about 8 p. m. without further mishap. Here Brother Gladney left us, and Rev. and Mrs. W. W. Adams took us in. After a good night's sleep we had a wonderful breakfast. Brother Adams took his car and gave us a wonderful trip over the city. After our return we wished to get our oil changed, and so we went to the car to find a flat. We went to a garage, got the flat fixed, and started out at 1 p. m. We were making good time and Mrs. Chambers relieved me, and I just settled for a nap when both front tires went out. A Negro came along and rendered first aid, and after about one hour we were patched and on our way again. At Tunica we stopped for information and found a tire down, and got it patched and bought a tube, and on our way.

Just out of Clarksdale a joint in the gasoline feed line came apart and we hurriedly put it together and went as fast as possible, only to find the garage closed, and thence were directed to Johnson's machine shops, where we failed to find a part, but the man in charge went back into the shop and fixed what we had and put it on and never charged us a penny, and so we were on our way again. We found a used tire, which we had mounted, and got directions, and at 7:15 struck out for Louise. At the Standard filling station going south out of Moorehead we got information of a short cut to Belzoni. We did not learn this gentleman's name, but his kindness to us will linger long. Out we put, and at 10:10 we landed at our good and fine friend, Rev. I. H. Sells' home at Louise.

The children the next morning made it seem like Christmas and Thanksgiving put together. At 7 we left for home. Just before getting to Pocahontas we ran into a rain, and at once we began to think of the detours we left on that road. My, the first one was slick. This was the first rain we had encountered in our trip. Slick and oozy we slid around and made it, and the next detour was not there and there were no others, and so at 9 a. m. we pulled up at the home, where the oldest boy awaited us from a safe and good trip.

There were several things that impressed me in this trip. First, the universal courtesy of the folks along the way. We hit a "Smart Aleck" at Little Rock who was more or less impudent, and we met one at Tunica, who was for self, and nothing else doing. Across the river every one was out to please the traveler. We did not strike this on our road until we left Tunica in Mississippi. At one point out of Russellville a colored boy hurled a horseshoe at us, fortunately striking a part of our car where no injury was done. All the rest was universal kindness and helpfulness. Surely there is a wonderful lot of good packed into the world after all. No one knew who or what we were, and yet almost unfailingly there was those little things done for us that were not in the bargain; and we did so appreciate them. Any one wishing a fine trip with the chance of the maximum of enjoyment can strike out for the Ozark country confident of a royal welcome.

Home to find things in good shape and so to work again. I was determined when I went to Seminar this year to make a plea for the small church and the rural situation. I am pleased to bring hack the assurance that the General Secretary of the Sunday School Board informed us that we must do this or surrender our participation in the Dual Extension money. I am devoutly thankful for the high regard with which the workers of the church have learned to hold Brother Hull; it is a real pleasure to me to pass on to his friends and the friends of the Sunday school work this information. I was glad to see the manifestation of appreciation for Brother Gladney. It did me good.

Not long now until Conference. There is much to do. God help us to do it as he would have it done.

NEW CHURCH DEDICATED.

On Sunday, July 15, it was my very great pleasure to officiate at the dedication of a beautiful church at McAdams, Attala County, Miss. The church is located just across the street from the Attala County Agricultural High School, and is a roomy, well built church. It was erected under the leadership of Rev. J. R. Murff in 1927. The people of the community deserve the greatest credit for the erection of this beautiful house of worship. This is the third or fourth house they have had in this community. It was originally called Clearbranch church. Dr. T. A. S. Adams dedicated one of the churches. The congregation was gathered together and organized into a church something like fifty years ago.

The leading man now in this church is Brother D. McMillan, who gave a history of the church during the afternoon service. A great congregation gathered at 11 o'clock for the preaching service and the dedication of the new church. Rev. A. W. Bailey is the popular pastor. He and his good wife had left nothing undone in their preparation for the day, and the people of the neighborhood rallied to them without regard to denominational lines. Prof. H. A. Pollard, of Carthage, formerly superintendent of the high school at McAdams, was present, to the delight of all his many friends. The presiding elder preached the sermon and officiated at the dedication. After a bountiful dinner served by the ladies of the community out under the shade of some friendly trees, we gathered for another service. The pastor baptized a little child and preached a brief sermon. It was a good day for Methodism.

Grenada, Miss.

In a certain denomination, says the Inquirer (London), it became necessary to appoint students, not yet through college, as pastors of poor congregations. The secretary of such a congregation happened to be a Welshman with but an imperfect knowledge of English, and, meaning well, he gave the printer orders to announce the preacher as "Studo-Pastor" The inteiligent printer pointed out that this must be a mistake, and suggested "Pseudo" as the prefix, to which the secretary agreed, with consequences!—Exchange.

SEEN AT A GLANCE.

By Rohert S. Sattersfield, D.D.

"How do you read so many books? Does it do you any good to read so many? Just glancing over a hook is dissipation, according to my way of thinking. I have to read and think, reread and think to get the good of a hook."

He was an old man, himself an author of books. I suspect he was right. "Just glancing" is a poor way to read. But there are so many books and so many things to do that the best many of us can do is to "just glance."

That is about all I do for the church papers. Fourteen of them come to my study every week. And they are all good, though I do think some of them are better than others.

But "just glancing" over the Conference organs and the General Organ helps me to "keep abreast" of what the church is doing. Those people who are complaining that the church is doing little just simply don't know. If they would "just glance" over the papers from week to week, they would become boosters for the church.

In "just glancing" over this week's papers it is plain to see that if Southern Methodist bishops and editors are followed, Alfred E. Smith will not be the next President of the United States. And why should he be President? I cannot think of a single good reason for electing him.

"Just at a glance" I see that the Rev. William (Bill) L. Stidger has resigned (as our Methodist Episcopal brethren seem to be able to do) the pastorate of Boulevard Methodist Church, Kansas City, and accepted the chair of Preaching and Pastoral Science in the School of Theology, Boston University, the most largely attended Methodist school in America, I believe.

This is the man who boasts of reading a book a day, and writes, I believe, a book a month; or is it a book a week? He is Henry Ford's friend, having preached to great crowds as pastor in Detroit, and having written a life of Mr. Ford while there. If "like pedagogue like pupil" holds true, we may certainly count on a new type of preachers just as soon as "Bill" Stidger, as he is familiarly called, begins to turn them out. "Bill" is certainly unlike all other preachers. But he gets the crowds.

And Charles W. Gilkey, Hyde Park Baptist Church, Chicago, has resigned to become Dean of the University of Chicago University Chapel. Dr. Gilkey is one of the most attractive pulpiteers in America to-day, especially among young people. However, his recent book, "The Cole Lectures at Vanderbilt," are disappointing. These lectures impress one as being a conglomeration, as the Negro cook said of a certain dish made up of many and sundry things—leftovers.

And our own Gilbert T. Rowe, as we have known for some time, goes to Duke University to teach Doctrine. What do all these new "chairs" mean? I have just read about a dozen books on the preacher and pastor, especially with reference to rural work, and all these new books are demanding, possibly not a new preacher and pastor, but certainly one with something that all these authors say is lacking in the "rank and file" of preachers to-day. These books say the theological schools are turning out men who do not want to serve in the country and village, men who are thinking about "good charges" that pay well, provide well for the minister and his family.

"W. P. King has been unanimously elected Book Editor and Editor of the Quarterly Review." Had I been a member of the Book Committee, there would have been one more vote for Dr. King, pastor of First Church, Athens, Ga. He made a good editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate for a number of years. He has written one of the best books we have on Jesus, "The Practice of the Principles of Jesus." Dr. King is progressive, but sane. He is fearless, but a brother. He is a clear thinker and writer. His is an easy style. He is also able on the platform and in the pulpit. He is fifty-seven years old.

And the Book Committee did another thing on July 11 which will meet with general approval. John Wynne Barton was elected a member of the Book Committee to succeed Mr. Joe Morgan, Jr., resigned. Mr. Barton did a great work for the church during the four years that he was one of the book agents. He is now President of Ward-Belmont College for Young Women. He is a teacher of a big men's Sunday school class at West End Church, is chairman of the building committee erecting the new West End Church, is a trustee of George Peabody Teachers' College, and is recognized as one of the outstanding citizens of Nashville.

The first period of the Standard Leadership Training School at Mount Sequoyah, the Western Methodist Assembly grounds, July 5-19, was more largely attended than any similar school that has been held there since the opening of the assembly grounds. Reports of pastors' schools indicate that the attendance has been large at all of them this year. The Board of Missions announces a "New School of Missionary Education," which is, I understand, an enlargement of the missionary educational work which is already counting for much. Possibly no other line of work for the last ten years will mean quite so much for the work of our church as the teacher-training work of the Sunday School Board.

Isn't it fine that all ages and classes are going to school?

The announcement that Dr. O. E. Goddard, Foreign Missionary Secretary, is the author of the new book to be used in the January-February cultural period next year will be welcomed. Southern Methodists believe in Dr. Goddard.

In "just glancing" over the papers I find that vacations are the order of the day. That is at it ought to be. Every preacher needs a vacation and every congregation needs to benefit by the pastor's vacation. Do preachers know how to make vacations profitable? If not, they should not vacate. Editor Carley is right: "If he comes back worn to a frazzle, he has lost more than he has gained," and so have his people. I want a vacation.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

St. John, the beloved, says, "I write unto you, young men, because you have overcome the evil one." The inference is that youth has strength and purpose to accomplish this victory over Satan, who is the invisible yet powerful expression of all evil. I wonder what the young men of this fair land of ours, think of the patronizing, apologetic attitude assumed by some of the popular publicists toward them. I love young men—their vigor, their manhood, their confidence in themselves to meet every responsibility and emergency that life may present, the promise and affluence of the coming years; all these, and more traits of character and gifts of personality are admirable. But, my son, you can't shift your responsibility to God, to your fellow-men and to your country. No matter what these piddling hirelings may write about the unwelcome restraints that a faithful father and careful mother threw around the formative years of your life, and with perverted imagination conjure a vapid story to cover up the sins of your life, and thus pass the burden or buck to parental failures, you know better, and you know, too, who can and who can't. Most men who have done things worthwhile, started young. The enthusiasm of youth is the enthusiasm of accomplishment. Occasionally an old man may arouse his latent powers and do a notable deed, and the thing becomes a seven days' wonder. I consider all this apologetic piffle these writers are pulling off in our current periodicals about the weakness and irresponsibility of our bright, strong, intelligent American youth sheer, unadulterated nonsense. They know what they are doing, and know it full well. And I should not wonder if many of them are laughing in their sleeves at the simplicity of those who are posing as their champions.

Church and State. Don't mix politics and religion, cried the alarmist. The Constitution guarantees every man's freedom in religion. That is true, and it also grants him liberty in civic, social, and political affairs. Because a man is a churchman, he is no less a citizen of this great commonwealth. No church vows, no ordination to the ministry, abrogates citizenship. On the contrary, a good church man cannot escape his responsibility, when great moral issues are at stake. In the old days the clergy, who were the church, just about ruled the entire body. But with us it's different—the laity and not the clergy have much and many things to say and do concerning the conduct of the church. When you can keep the American people out of politics, you can keep the church out of politics, and not before. In fact, the average red-blooded American enjoys a political fight. That is his inheritance from away back when they were battling for that precious right of sovereign self-government he now claims. And moreover, every average American citizen considers himself a statesman, and some who are below the average think they are capable of running the country. The pity is, their neigbors don't generally agree with them. Party lines are all breaking up North and South. I believe Mr. Jefferson could shake hands with Mr. Hoover as a good Democrat. So it does not matter much how or what you call them, it's the man and what he has done, and is doing that count. But some fellow will be saying, as they sometimes say when something I write jars his think pot, that I am a bit off my base on this thing. But for thirty long years I stood and fought for prohibition in this country, and by the grace of God and the help of my common sense, I shall vote for no man who disregards the Constitution as well as the avowed statement of his own party platform. And by all the tokens I am a better Democrat than he, for I do regard what the people have declared by their sovereign right of suffrage.

THE PREACHING WHICH MAKES CONVERTS.

It is based on the word and the truth of God.

It is presented plainly and pointedly and without frills.

The preacher speaks simply and naturally and above all sincerely.

The message is candid, honest, fearless, and does not spare sin.

Each sermon is one of thoughtfulness, earnestness, and evident love.

There is information, illustration, reasoning, persuasion, and power.

The preacher evidently believes his own message and preaches because he must.

Every sermon is seasoned with spice, salted with prayer, and served hot with conviction.

Under such preaching the mind glows, the heart melts, and the soul feels itself to be in the presence of God.

The preaching which makes converts believes unreservedly in Christ, exalts him, and presents him as the one and only Saviour.—Bishop Leete.

The train came to sudden stop between stations with a tremendous grinding of brakes. Immediately a worried-looking man rushed down the track and demanded the reason of the guard.

"What is it?" he asked. "An accident?"

"Somebody pulled the communication cord," was the reply. "The driver put on the brakes too quickly, and one of the cars went off the rails. We'll be held up about four hours."

"Four hours!" exclaimed the passenger. "But I'm to be married to-day!"

Instantly the guard turned on him.

"Say," he demanded, "you ain't the fellow who pulled the cord, are you?"—Exchange.

BABY BOY.

Sitting by the window
With a winsome smile,
Baby laugbs and cuddies,
Cooing all the wbile;
Little fingers scratching
Here and everywhere
On the snowy pillow
In his go-cart there.

Baby's eyes that sparkle
In tbe morning light
Bring us joy and pleasure
Mixed with strange deilght;
See him as be watches
All the moving things
Which appear before him—
Then bis laughter rings.

Rosy cheeks and dimpies,
Sugared lips has he,
Chubby hands that fondle
Mother dear and me;
Feet that kick and juggle
Things into tbe air.
Watcb him now in action
Here and everywhere.

Who could help from loving
Sucb a baby boy?
How he brings us pleasure,
Happiness and joy;
You're a lump of sugar
Sitting there—and sweet;
Let us kiss you, darling,
On your lips and cbeek.

UNDER THE SNOWBALL BUSH.

"When are you going to see the little girl round the corner?" Letty's family asked her.

Lety looked bashful. "I want her to come to see me first," she said.

"Strangers don't pay the first call, you know," her big brother, Roger, reminded her. "That's not the way to do."

But Letty shook her yellow head. "I've been as far as the gate twice," she said. "And I just can't get any farther. Don't ask me to."

"Tut," said her grandfather. "And all this time the little girl may be very lonely."

"Then, why doesn't she come to see me?" asked Letty quickly.

"Maybe she has come—as far as the front gate," said Roger.

Letty laughed outright; she could not help it. But still she did not go to see the new little girl.

That afternoon on her way to the postoffice she kept craning her neck to look into the new people's yard, on Prescott Street, which was just around the corner from own home. She wondered what the little girl's first name was, and whether she liked to play.

"Now, where can she be?" she asked herself crossly. "If she'd only come out she could walk with me under my big umbrella."

But there was no little girl to be seen; perhaps the threatening clouds had driven her into the house. Letty sighed.

By the time she started home a few drops of rain were falling. The wind was blowing hard, and, though she grasped her umbrella with both hands, it was all she could do to keep her hold on it.

"Oh, dear, I'll just let it down and not mind the rain!" she said; but the umbrella would not come down, though she tugged and pulled hard at it. There was nothing to do but go on with it as it was. "For never, never in the world," puffed Letty, "will I lose my mother's best umbrella!"

Presently the wind began to blow so hard that she could not keep her balance at all; but she held the umbrella aginst her head and struggled bravely on.

Then all at once the wind jumped under the umbrella and picked her right up off the ground. She felt herself being blown rapidly along; but where she was being blown to she had not the slightest idea. Suddenly she came to a stop against something soft. She peeped out from under her umbrella. It was a bush that had stopped her—a snowball bush in full bloom. Letty gave a gasp.

At that moment a little girl's head was thrust out between the branches.

"How do you do?" the owner of the head said quietly. "Come in."

"I can't because of my umbrella," Letty explained.

The other little girl helped her, and together they lowered the obstinate umbrella. Then Letty crawled under the snowball bush.

She felt as if she must be dreaming. The branches hung low, so that they made a cozy little room that was dry as toast. Two dolls were seated at a tiny tea table set with blue china. A plate of small sandwiches was in the center of the table and a blue chocolate pot was steaming at the head.

"Where am I?" Letty asked. "And who are you?"

"I am Dulcie Ray," the little girl answered. "This is my playhouse. I thought you never were coming to see me."

Letty still looked puzzled. She parted the branches and peered out. There at the end of the yard was Prescott Street, and round the corner stood her own familiar house.

"You must be the new little girl," she said. "But how did I get here?"

"You blew here," Dulcie said. "I saw you. Right around the corner from Fisher Street, and across our lawn."

Letty looked again at the steaming chocolate pot, the delicious sandwiches and the waiting dolls. How delightful everything was!

"But I didn't come on purpose," she said.

Dulcie was seating herself at the table. "Well, you came, anyway," she answered. "Won't you take a seat and let me pour you a cup of hot chocolate? The sandwiches are fine."—The Youth's Companion.

A TOWN WITHOUT JESUS.

Would you like to live in a town where Jesus, our wonderful Savior, is not known? Children in our great and large country cannot even think what kind of a town such a town would be.

A man who likes to write things for children to read relates a very pretty story which tells us some of the things that would be missing in such a town.

Little Hettie, this story tells us, had a model village and she never tired of setting it up.

"What kind of a town is that, Hettie?" asked her father.

"Oh, a Christian town," answered Hettie quickly. Hettie did not want any other town and would not want to live in any other town. But her father said:

"Suppose we make it a heathen town. What must we take out of it?"

"The church," said Hettie, taking it to one side.

"Is that all?"

"I suppose so."

"No, indeed," her father said. "The public school must go. Take the public library out also."

"Anything else?" Hettie asked, sadly.

"Isn't that a hospital over there?"

"But, father, don't they have hospitals?"

"Not in heathen countries. It was Christ who taught us to care for the sick and the old."

"Then I must take out the Old Ladies' Home," said Hettie very soberly.

"Yes, and that Orphans' Home at the other end of town."

"Why, father," Hettie exclaimed, "then there's not one good thing left! I would not live in such a town for anything."

Nor would any of us. For besides all this, a town that didn't have Jesus Christ in it would miss many other beautiful things. No one could tell how many lovely things would be lacking if Jesus Christ did not abide in the town by his people.

There wouldn't be any Sunday school, for example. We would never hear little children singing, and it is very doubtful whether anybody else would sing. They wouldn't have the kind of happiness that makes people sing. A great many of the prettiest hymns ever written were written about Christ and because people loved Christ. Oh, there are thousands and thousands of such hymns and children sing them all around the earth.

And there would not be any Christmas trees. There was no Christmas before Christ was born into the world. He was a little baby and he was born in a manger where cattle stayed at night to give them shelter and to make them safe. But a bright star was shining in the sky and very bright light shone on everything for a little while. And the angels sang a beautiful song. If Christ had not come, there would be no singing, even at Christmas.

So we see what a difference Christ makes in the world. People are kind to one another and love one another because of it, and that is the very greatest thing of all.—Hill Craig, in the Christian Evangelist.

THE SIGNERS OF THE DECLARATION.

The other evening we heard a Connecticut lawyer laughing over the fact that there were not eighty men in his town who could name the Connecticut signers of the Declaration of Independence. We kept perfectly still, for we could not have told for the life of us, the signers from our own State. We decided to know more hereafter, and since others will want to know more also, we publish the following list by States. Pick out your State and commit to memory the names of the signers:

Massachusetts: John Hancock, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Robert Treat Paine, Elbridge Gerry.

New Hampshire: Josiah Bartlett, William Whippel, Matthew Thornton.

Rhode Island: Stephen Hopkins, William Ellery.

Connecticut: Roger Sherman, Samuel Huntington, William Williams, Oliver Wolcott.

New York: William Floyd, Philip Livington, Francis Lewis, Lewis Morris.

New Jersey: Richard Stockton, John Witherspoon, Francis Hopkinson, John Hart, Abraham Clark.

Pennsylvania: Robert Morris, Benjamin Franklin, Benjamin Ruth, John Morton, George Clyner, James Smith, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross.

Delaware: Caesar Rodney, George Reed, Thomas McKean.

Maryland: Samuel Chase, William Paca, Thomas Stone, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton.

Mary, three years old, was having an unhappy morning, fussing and crying without cause.

To change her thoughts her mother said to her: "Mary, run to the window and see the big dog going by."

Mary watched the dog out of sight and then turned to her mother and said: "Mamma, what was it I was crying about?"—Chicago Tribune.

Prof.—Why don't you answer me?

Freshman—I did, Professor. I shook my head.

Prof.—But you don't expect me to hear it rattle away up here, do you?"—Exchange.

THE DEATH OF REV. S. D. HOWARD.

The sudden death of Rev. S. D. Howard, our pastor at Columbia, La., last week, brought sorrow to many friends throughout the State and removed from the Louisiana Conference one of its consecrated and useful members. According to the records, Brother Howard was received into the Conference from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in 1904, being in orders at that time. He was a faithful minister of Jesus Christ, and his loss will be keenly felt. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to his sorrowing family and loved ones. We trust we shall have a suitable memoir for publication in due time.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. A. Y. Brown, of Minter City, Miss., recently assisted Rev. O. A. Clark in a good meeting at Zama, on the Kosciusko circuit.

We regret to learn that Rev. J. C. Price, pastor at Gilbert, La., has recently been quite ill, though we are glad to learn that he is steadily improving.

A Daily Vacation Bible School was recently held in the Methodist church at Kosciusko, Miss. Miss Violet Strahan had charge, assisted by Miss Aiva Thomas and Mrs. M. W. Harwell.

The Big Brothers' class, Greenville, Miss., has put on an attendance campaign, the two "armies" being commanded by A. D. Brooks and M. P. Massey. The Big Brothers are hustlers.

Mr. Calvin Joyner, son of Dr. and Mrs. N. E. Joyner, is acting engineer in charge of the British Municipal Council at Tientsin, China. Mr. Joyner has achieved distinction in the field of engineering.

Rev. W. H. Royal, pastor of the Natalbany charge, Louisiana Conference, is conducting a revival meeting at the Pine Ridge church this week, assisted by Rev. T. E. Nicholson, of Bucatunna, Miss.

The thirty-fourth annual season at Winona Lake, Ind., opened on July 1. Compared with former seasons, the opening this year was one of the best in the history of this famous religious resort.

President D. B. Raulins, of Mansfield College, was in New Orleans on Monday of this week, speaking to the Methodist preachers in their weekly meeting, and paying the Advocate office an appreciated call.

Rev. J. C. Wasson, the pastor, reports a good meeting recently at Bowling Green, in which the preaching was done by Rev. J. O. Dowdle. There were three additions to the membership of the church on profession of faith.

Major F. A. Howell, of Durant, Miss., in expressing appreciation of a recent editorial in the Advocate, says: "As long as I live and can see to read, I want the Christian Advocate weekly." Brother Howell is one of the grand old men of Mississippi Methodism.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan, of Millsaps College, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. He is greatly interested in the new science building to be erected at Millsaps, and is visiting other institutions to see the latest designs in buildings of this kind.

Brother James H. Ramsey, of New Albany, Miss., writes: "I have not received the dear old Advocate this week, and as I have been a subscriber for almost forty years, I miss it greatly when I fail to get it." Of course another copy was mailed him immediately.

Protection Against Old Age

Three members of the faculty of Mansfield College are studying in Europe this summer—Miss Chloe Steel, of the department of modern languages; Miss Letha Coger, of the department of expression, and Miss Loudale Simmons, teacher of violin in the department of music.

Rev. Marion S. Monk, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Monroe, La., recently assisted the pastor, Rev. J. C. Price, in a meeting at Gilbert, La. Our report from the meeting is to the effect that the church and community were greatly blessed by the ministry of Brother Monk.

Rev. and Mrs. John Brandon Peters, with their little daughter, Mary Manning, left on Monday of this week for their summer home on Chesapeake Bay, Virginia. Brother Peters will return about the middle of September to resume his duties as pastor of the First Methodist Church, this city.

Rev. J. G. Snelling did the preaching at Oakland, on the Greensburg charge, in a gracious tabernacle meeting last week. Services were held three times a day. The community was greatly blessed, and there were several additions to the membership of the church. Rev. R. S. Rutledge is pastor of the church.

The forty-fourth session of the Patrons' Union is in session at Lake, Miss., closing on Thursday of this week. On last Sunday, the Sunday school was conducted by Brother O. C. Hull, Mississippi Conference Extension Secretary, and the morning and evening sermons were preached by Rev. J. W. Sells, of Pascagoula, Miss.

The new Sunday school building of the Fourth Street Methodist Church, Lynchburg, Va., was formally opened on Sunday, July 22. The building has three stories and is completely equipped for the most modern type of Sunday school work. Dr. E. K. Means, formerly of the Louisiana and the Mississippi Conferences, is pastor of this great church.

Dr. W. W. Holmes, presiding elder of the Shreveport District, Louisiana Conference, held a union quarterly conference for the Shreveport churches on Monday night of this week. The members of the conference were invited to bring their wives or husbands with them, and to bring a watermelon for the social time following the business session.

General Evangelist Mark Terrell, of Dallas, Tex., is holding a community-wide revival at Taylor, Ark., which has resulted in a great number of conversions and a very large increase in membership of the different churches. On Aug. 12, Dr. Terrell will begin a two weeks' campaign for Mangum Memorial, Shreveport, where Rev. R. M. Brown is pastor.

Rev. James L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, writes that Signor Mario Capelli, the famous tenor who is to sing at the Laymen's Conference at Lake Junaluska, N. C., will be at the Seashore Camp Ground from Aug. 6 to Aug. 12, and will sing during the camp meeting. We are sure many will be glad to take advantage of the opportunity to hear this great singer.

We acknowledge with appreciation the receipt of a beautifully engraved invitation from the pastor and the congregation of the First Methodist Church, Lake Charles, La., to attend the opening service in their new church on Sunday, August 12, at eleven o'clock in the morning, at which time the sermon will be preached by Dr. A. F. Watkins, pastor of Central Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss.

The Winn Parish Enterprise gave a full account in its issue of July 26 of the recent semi-centennial sermon preached by Rev. D. C. Barr in the Methodist church at Winnfield. In the same write-up, it also gave an account of the pageant rendered at the night service, given by Mrs. A. J. Gwin's Sunday school class, the pageant being "The Good Samaritan," given in connection with the Golden Cross enrolment.

We acknowledge the honor of an invitation to attend the golden wedding anniversary of Rev. and Mrs. M. L. White, to be held at the Methodist church, Lake, Miss., on Wednesday evening, August 8. Brother and Sister White have made a great contribution to Mississippi Methodism, and many friends will rejoice with them on this happy occasion. The editor of the Advocate extends heartiest felicitations in advance.

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, presiding elder of the Meridian District, accompanied by his wife and his niece, Miss Stella Galloway, joined the "Methodist motorcade" to Lake Junaluska, N. C., which left Meridian last Saturday. He will return via Huntsville, Ala., to spend the day with his brother, Rev. Ira F. Hawkins, presiding elder of the Huntsville District. He expects to be back for his quarterly conference at Union church, on the Porterville charge, on Aug. 18.

Rev. Hal T. Cunningham, Jr., son of Rev. H. T. Cunningham, of the West Texas Conference, has been appointed to fill a vacancy in the pastorate at Thrall, in the Georgetown District of the Central Texas Conference, Rev. D. K. Porter, presiding elder. Brother Cunningham has had two years in Southwestern University, but has been employed in the Second National Bank, Houston, Tex., for the past year, earning the money to complete his college work.

Rev. Jeff Cunningham, son of Rev. E. H. Cunningham, presiding elder of the Corinth District, North Mississippi Conference, served as pastor of the Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., for a month during the absence of the pastor, Dr. W. M. McIntosh, on his vacation. The Columbus Dispatch speaks very highly of his service during that period. Brother Cunningham will assist in the Oxford camp meeting and other revivals until the opening of college in September.

We thank the pastor, Rev. Osmond S. Lewis, for a copy of the Year Book and Directory of the Jefferson Street Methodist Church, Natchez, Miss. The well printed booklet contains an interesting history of the church, beginning with the preaching of Tobias Gibson in 1799. The first house of worship of which there is record was built in 1807. Natchez became a station in 1826, being probably the first "station" in the Southwest. The Year Book and Directory is a valuable and interesting booklet.

The thirty-eighth annual session of the Bluff Creek camp meeting will begin on Friday night, Aug. 3, and continue through Sunday, Aug. 12. The preaching will be done by Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, and other pastors of the district. The music will be in charge of Rev. A. M. Wynne. Rev. B. D. Watson is the pastor in charge. The Bluff Creek camp ground is a beautiful and historic place. Those interested in attending should write Mr. O. E. Townsend, Oaknolia, La.; Mr. H. C. Lipscomb, Istrouma, La., or Rev. B. D. Watson, Clinton, La.

The meeting at Tangipahoa, La., in which the editor of the Advocate assisted the pastor, Rev. William Schuhle, came to a close last Sunday night. The attendance upon the services was good, and the people seemed interested in the meeting. There were two additions to the membership of the church. Helpful assistance was rendered throughout the meeting by Rev. W. J. Newsom, whose home is in Tangipahoa. The editor greatly enjoyed the hospitality of the good people of this beautiful little town. The presiding elder, Rev. L. W. Cain, was at the service on Friday evening.

While at Tangipahoa last week, the editor had the pleasure of driving out to Pine Ridge church, where he found Rev. W. H. Royal busy training the choir for the revival services this week. He also had the pleasure of visiting historic Greensburg and calling at the office of the St. Helena Echo, the sprightly paper edited by Brother W. T. Holland. Brother Holland has recently had to suffer the amputation of his foot, on account of an infection, but we were glad to learn that he stood the ordeal well. He was not able to be at the office, of course, but the editor was graciously greeted by his son and shown the courtesies of the craft.

Brother J. L. Pierce, chairman of the board of stewards of the Pearl River Avenue Church, McComb, Miss., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Friday of last week. Brother Pierce is also chairman of the building committee, which has had charge of the erection of the new church, which was formally opened last Sunday afternoon, the opening service being in charge of the pastor, Rev. J. F. Campbell. The building is of brick veneer construction, with an auditorium that will seat 350 people, and a Sunday school department thoroughly modern in all its appointments. The Sunday school department has room for 400 pupils. The building of this beautiful new church is a great achievement, and we congratulate the pastor and people on the consummation of their hopes. The building complete has cost about $17,000. The other members of the building committee are Louis Allen and H. C. Lawrence. The contractor was B. H. Casey, a member of the church. The opening service was the beginning of a revival meeting, conducted by the pastor.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

DEATH OF REV. S. D. HOWARD.

Dear Brother Carley: Rev. S. D. Howard, our pastor at Columbia, La., died on Tuesday night of last week. He had been in fairly good health this year, but had for some years been troubled with a serious heart affliction. Wednesday evening he went to church services at Grayson, one of the churches of his charge, and returning home retired about 9:30 o'clock. He chatted for awhile after retiring and seemed to be feeling as well as usual. Wednesday morning when the family went to call him they found he had passed away during the night. The doctor thinks he died soon after retiring.

In my opinion, Brother Howard was doing the best work of his recent years in the charge at Columbia. He had successfully completed the Mission Special, had presented the cause of the Superannuate, had preached all the year to splendid and increasing congregations at his churches, and, best of all, had established himself in the hearts of his people. We shall miss him from the work to which he was called, but we know he has gone to his eternal reward.

Our prayers and sympathy go out to his bereaved family, of whom there are four children and the widow. May God comfort them in this hour of trial, is our prayer.

Presiding Elder, Monroe District.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE YESTERDAY.

By President D. B. Raulins.

Among the forces in the making of the romance of Methodism in Louisiana Mansfield College enjoys a place of more than secondary importance. It was one of the pioneers in the field of college education in this section, and it is said to be the first college west of the Mississippi River offering training for women.

Opening its doors in 1854 under the leadership of Dr. H. C. Thweatt, a native Virginian and graduate of the University of Virginia, for three-quarters of a century Mansfield College has been taking from the Methodist and other homes of this and adjoining States, giving them training, and turning them back, a steady stream of wholesome and helpful life, into the currents of cultural, social, educational, religious and domestic acitivities of the homes and communities from which they have come. Many of them have taught with distinction and credit to the profession, and many have become the mothers of families that have been the cultural and religious leaven of the communities of which they were a part.

Dr. Thweatt, the founder and first president, seems to have been a man of exceptional ability and attainments. He was a poet, preacher, scholar and educator. According to his request his body rests beneath the pines on the campus. His grave, marked by a simple white shaft, according to his wishes, is still a place where the college girls frolic and play.

Two statements from the pen of the founder of Mansfield College indicate something of his educational foresight and his religious vision:

"In this age and country we are not called upon to prove value of classical education, or the importance of extending it to females. In many respects it is quite as important that they should be well grounded in a competent knowledge of the learned languages as the other sex. They will give the first impulse in all that is good and useful to the next generation—they may reform this one. (Blackface mine.) Our country has already produced women, who, in capacity and acquirement, have equalled any who have lived in any other."

As to the religious life of Mansfield College, he said:

"The school, in a religious point of view, will be conducted without reference to sectarian influence. The pupils will be required to attend church regularly on the Sabbath, of such denomination as their parents or guardians may designate."

With the exception of two years during the Civil War (during which years the college was closed, a part of this time the building being used as a hospital for wounded soldiers from the Mansfield battle), and one other year, since 1856, Mansfield College has graduated a class.

More than once during its long period of service the college has passed through extreme financial straits, each time its friends coming to its relief with a heroism and self-sacrifice that regarded no personal loss great if the college could be saved and assured of its opportunity to continue its valuable work.

Some years ago, under the far-sighted leadership of President Bobbitt, who saw the coming importance of the church junior college for girls, the college was placed on that basis, and has been so conducted since that time. The wisdom of this action has been justified by subsequent events and educational changes that have come about in that time.

The place of the junior college to-day is one of marked importance in our educational system, both in church and State. The heavy enrollment of the larger senior colleges and universities and the immaturity of the vast majority of high school graduates have made the junior college a necessity; not only has the junior college proved itself a necessity, and justified its claim to a place in our educational system, but the Church Junior College for Girls has proved itself the occupant of even a larger place.

Two regular academic courses have been offered, the literary and the teacher training or normal courses. In addition to this work a strong Fine Arts Department is maintained, giving courses in Pipe Organ, Piano, Violin, Voice, Expression, and the theoretical brahches connected with these courses.

So much for the yesterday of Mansfield College. What of its work to-day? You will please wait until next week for this.

On July 2, 1928, the spirit of MRS. JOSEPHINE BABERS NEAL, of Pleasant Hill, La., took its flight to the life beyond. She was born in Jackson, Miss., March 7, 1857, and joined the Methodist church in early girlhood, and continued a faithful member until her death. She was laid to rest in Zion Rest cemetery, by the side of her husband, the late H. T. Neal, and a son who had died a few years ago. She leaves the following children: W. T. Neal, Birmingham, Ala.; J. M. Neal, and J. T. Neal, Smackover, Ark.; Mrs. Anna E. Frazier, Pleasant Hill, La.; Mrs. J. T. Rawlins, Louann, Ark.; Mrs. L. B. Moffette, Harmon, La., besides a host of grandchildren, nieces, nephews and friends to mourn her death. She laid down the duties of this life for the crown prepared for her. We miss that loving face, that tender voice, and motherly watch care, but we must remember that God knows best. We shall meet to part no more on that other shore. The floral offerings were numerous and beautiful. Rev. J. B. Williams conducted the funeral services. Her favorite hymns, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," and "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," were sung.

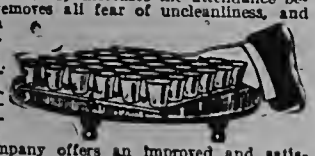
The Holy Communion

THERE is no time in the Christian's life when he comes into closer and more intimate relationship with the Divine than when he sits at the Lord's table. Why not approach its celebration with unalloyed joy; discarding all fears; thinking only of the wonderful privilege?

"The Sanitary" INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION Cups

It is now generally recognized that the Sanitary individual cup increases the attendance because it removes all fear of uncleanliness, and promotes a deeper reverence in the communicant. The Sanitary Communion Outfit Company offers an improved and satisfactory outfit throughout, including the highly polished beautiful mahogany tray here shown, which eliminates all noise, is lighter and more easily handled than others and is more in keeping with the furniture of the church than a tray of any other material.



Make your communion service all that it should be; send for free booklet and catalogue (with quotations).

A LETTER FROM THE TOLLES.

Dear Advocate: Come to Lakeland, "The Home of Southern College," and see us in our new fourteen-room "Paradise Parsonage," as Bishop Quayle used to say. When Bishop Dobbs read out our name for Lakeland, and Joe Tolle for Oakland Park and Progresso, and C. F. Tolle for Oneco and Samoset, we had three thrills instead of one we have been having at Annual Conference for twenty-six years. Corning, being sent back for the second year on his charge, gave his father and Joe this advice: "Now see if you can't do good work this year so you can go back. You will never amount to much moving around so much; now I am one of the kind that can go back."

Lakeland is a beautiful place, and in our parsonage yard we have about twenty big orange and grapefruit, two guava, and two pecan trees, all hanging full of fruit. We are overlooking Mirror Lake, which is a perfectly beautiful lake and looks like its name at night when the civic center million-dollar lights are turned on. Two long rows of old live oak trees, hanging with moss, line Orange Avenue, on which we live.

We think the Lord has dealt very kindly with us again, as he ever has. We were sorry to leave our friends of old First Church, Tampa, after five very busy years, even as we were loath to part with all our friends from "Ole Miss." when Bishop Ainsworth sent us here. We often see Brother and Sister Purcell and their fine family and hear Mississippi news.

Bob graduated from Southern College in June and will teach mathematics in High School. Martha, who was born in paradise parsonage in Lake, Miss., will be a Junior in college next year. She is red-headed and smart—you know the two go hand in hand. Mary Love, born in paradise parsonage in Newton, is 14 now, in High School, and loves to take care of all the babies in the congregation.

Dear Doctor and Mother Featherstun were our patron saints in Newton, and we enjoy reading his articles in the Advocate. We would love to see our old friends on the Seashore Camp Ground, where our own children spent many happy summers. We find old friends here from Laurel, where we spent one hectic year of smallpox, operations, "flu," etc., among the "best people on earth." The children still speak of old Capitol Street Church as "back home," but to children who belong to the fraternity of the P. K.'s (preacher's kids), many, many places are "back home."

Sincerely,

THE TOLLES.

I AND MY ROSE.

"There is a world of wonder in this rose;
God made it, and his whole creation grows
To a point of perfect beauty
In this garden plot. He knows
The poet's thrill
On this June morning as he sees
His Will
To beauty taking form, his Word
Made flesh, and dwelling among men.
All mysteries in this one flower meet
And intertwine,
The universal is concrete
The human and divine,
In one unique and perfect thing, are fused
Into a unity of Love,
This rose as I behold it;
For all things gave it me,
The stars have helped to mold it,
The air, soft moonshine, and the rain,
The meekness of old mother earth,
The many billowed sea.
The evolution of ten million years,
And all the pain
Of ages, brought into its birth
And gave it me.
The tears of Christ are in it,
And his Blood
Has dyed it red.
I could not see it but for him
Because he led Me to the Love of God,
From which all beauty springs.
I and my rose
Are one."

—G. Studdert-Kennedy ("Woodbine Willie").

Until June, 1927, our Methodist Mission at Dinuba, Calif., near Fresno, was the only Japanese school and religious center in this locality, but as the mission grew the Buddhists began to fear it, and in the summer of 1927 they opened a big temple here costing $10,000. In the work in this temple they have tried to copy all the work at the Christian center, including the language school, the Sunday school, and a service on Sunday morning similar to the church service at the mission. The Rev. S. Oishi is our Methodist pastor at Dinuba.

Woman's Missionary Society

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

Ten Conference officers and three district secretaries answered the call of the Conference president, Mrs. L. W. Alford, to attend the Executive Committee meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society, Mississippi Conference, held Wednesday, June 6, in Galloway Memorial Church, Jackson, at 10 o'clock a. m. These were: President, Vice President, Corresponding Secretary, Treasurer, Superintendents of Young People's Work, of Children's Work, of Publicity, of Social Service, of Supplies, and Historian; the secretaries of the Jackson, Seashore, and Vicksburg Districts.

The President, Mrs. L. W. Alford, presided; also conducted the devotionals, followed by prayer by Mrs. A. F. Watkins.

Each officer present reported for her department, and in each case there was a decided increase in interest, spiritual growth, membership, and finances. Each district secretary told of new auxiliaries and plans for their district and zone meetings.

Mrs. Watkins urged that the interest in the Jubilee continue, placing special emphasis upon the spiritual life. She asked that each auxiliary secure the Jubilee books and read, also secure the Jubilee offering boxes at once, that our Week of Prayer offering might be greatly increased.

It was announced that Miss Eurania Pyron, one of our Conference girls, would sail July 21 for Poland, to take up her life work. Plans were made for a love gift to Miss Pyron from the women of the Conference.

Mrs. Alford announced that Nannie V. Davis, one of our volunteers, graduated from Whitworth College this session with honors. She has been accepted and approved by the candidates' committee for Scarritt and she will enter Scarritt College in the fall. We are indeed happy to send again one of our Conference daughters to this great institution for preparation for a life service.

Mrs. Cochran and Mrs. Wilson told of their plans for the work of Young People and Children, which they have well in hand and will be very interesting to these groups.

It was with much regret that the resignation of Mrs. J. E. Brown, of Gloster, editor of the woman's page in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, was accepted.

Mrs. Alford reminded the committee of the importance of reaching the goal for the Missionary Voice—a Missionary Voice in every home.

Mrs. Goodwill was elected to be sent to the Social Service Conference in Atlanta, Ga., in January.

Mrs. Alford was elected to be sent to the Junaluska School of Missions in July.

Mrs Cottrell offered the closing prayer, and the committee adjourned.

ELLA WAYNE ORMOND,

ZONE MEETING AT PORTERVILLE, MISS.

The second missionary meeting during 1928 for this zone in the Meridian District was held at the Methodist church, Porterville, June 26, with the Porterville auxiliary hostess, and Mrs. Walter Rogers, chairman.

The meeting was called to order promptly at 10 o'clock. There were representatives from every society in the zone present. The devotional was conducted by Rev. J. A. Baxter, of Scooba.

The welcome address was given by Mrs. Rush, of Porterville, and the response by Mrs. Grantham, of Electric Mills.

Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, Conference Corresponding Secretary, and Mrs. Stanley Wilson, Conference Superintendent of Children's Work, were introduced by Mrs. Rogers. Both gave splendid talks.

A paper on stewardship, "Our Time and Personality," was read by Mrs. Seamore, of De Kalb.

"Will Our Religion Stand the Test of the Foreigner?" was discussed in a paper read by Miss Pearl Kennon, of Scooba.

At 1:30 o'clock the afternoon session was opened with the devotional service by Rev. J. T. Abney.

A paper was read by Mrs. Englebert, "Jubilee Looking Backward and Thinking Forward."

Porterville reported one hundred per cent subscribers to the Missionary Voice.

A round table discussion led by the president of each auxiliary, "What Our Missionary Society is Doing."

The invitation for the next zone meeting was extended by Rev. J. A. Baxter, of Scooba, and was graciously accepted. This meeting to be held the third quarter in Scooba.

The meeting was brought to a close by singing the doxology and prayer offered by Mr. Boyd, of Porterville.

STATESMEN AS MONEY MAKERS.

As things go, Senator Charles Curtis, candidate for Vice President of the United States, is a poor man. That is to say, he is poor in purse. But he is, in the imperishable values, rich so long as this nation endures.

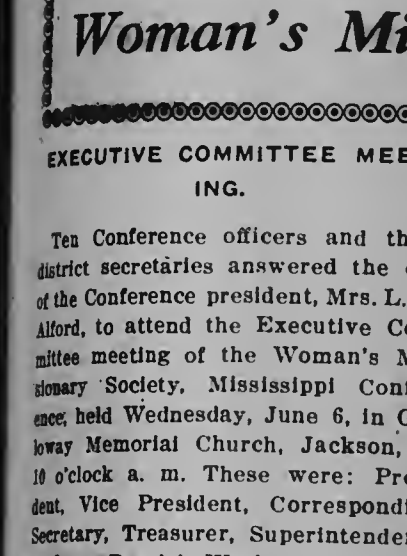
Such an instance of riches that are not in check books is disclosed in the filing of the will of the earl of Oxford and Asquith a few days ago.

The death of the earl of Oxford and Asquith called forth from the classes and parties in the British Empire, a tribute such as belongs only to a statesman who embodied the highest ideals of public service.

After occupying the Home Department from 1892 to 1895, he was for ten years in private life, and that would be the period when his income as a leading barrister must have been large. From 1905 to 1908 he was chancellor of the exchequer, and for the next eight years prime minister. After his retirement from the cabinet it is obvious that he could have commanded large financial rewards by following the example of other distinguished British statesmen and going in for journalism.

When he retired from political life a testimonial purse of about forty-five thousand dollars was presented to him. His will, now made public, discloses the disposition of an estate of something less than forty-six thousand dollars. It was not known at the time, but it is plain now, that had he not had that testimonial he would have been in actual want.

It is not the first or the last such instances. Poverty with dignity and poverty with an honorable record behind of disinterested service is a symbol of wealth; it calls attention to the real riches. It is not to be shunned. Because it lays emphasis on that great fact that there is a kind of riches that is entirely independent of bags of hidden coin. It is a wealth the bags of coin cannot buy.—Central Christian Advocate.



MOST people know this absolute antidote for pain, but are you careful to say Bayer when you buy it? And do you always give a glance to see Bayer on the box—and the word genuine printed in red? It isn't the genuine Bayer Aspirin without it! A druggist always has Bayer, with the proven directions tucked in every box:

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

WILL GLADLY ANSWER LETTERS FROM WOMEN

Asking for Information About Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MRS. GLADYS ROGERS
Route 5, Grand Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Atlanta, Ga.—"My mother gave me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was a girl about 14 years old, when I was just entering womanhood. Then after I married, I took more of it. During the time before my baby was born this medicine gave me splendid results. I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Pills for Constipation also and recommend these medicines to my friends and will answer letters asking about them."—Mrs. Gladys Rogers, Route 5, Grand Avenue, Atlanta, Georgia.

A Lot Better By Taking It

Trafford, Pa.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I could not eat a thing. I had no appetite whatever and never felt good. I was talking to my friend one day and she passed the remark of how thin I was getting since I got married and I told her my trouble and she advised me to take the Vegetable Compound. I feel a lot better now since I have been taking it regularly and I can eat most anything. I recommend your medicine to anyone who tells me of troubles like my own, for I know what it has done for me. I have also used your Sanative Wash. I am willing to answer women if they ask about the medicine."—Mrs. E. Gelatic, Box 502, Trafford Pa

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Surely we can have fifty schools observe Childhood and Youth Week during the first week in October. Methodist people have been trained to wait for the pastor to lead in all the work of the church. Brother Pastor, give this project a fair trial and you will be gratified with the results. Think of it, all the literature is furnished free and no "collection" is to be taken. Instead of the pageant that has been given in the past, let a big sermon take the place of the pageant. The main items: Have teachers visit the homes, invite the parents to attend the service, plan for a forward step in behalf of the children and young people. I do not know what I would give if some man would write me asking for literature.

Sunday School Day programs have been sent to about two hundred schools. Up to date one hundred and six schools have made remittances. Occasionally a man will send a check with mission money and Sunday School Day money and fail to say that he has done this. It will save confusion if the person who remits will state what the money is for. Remember, when your school is checked that you get a score for ten points if you are working under the A Program of Work; five points if you are working under the B Program of Work. We expect to begin checking next month.

If you think an institute will stimulate your people in adjoining charges, write me to this effect. We are anxious to lend a helping hand. Dr. Fennell P. Turner, who is in charge of the mission work of the General Sunday School Board, said in an address at Mount Sequoyah, "My work is not that of a promoter, but that of a gardener." This statement shows that he is a wise man. The gardener fertilizes and cultivates. The promoter makes you think he is doing something, but he is not doing much.

Daily Vacation Church Schools have been held at Kosciusko, Tie Piant, Cochrum, and Tupelo. Others may have been held, but I have not heard from them. The best of reports come from this work in behalf of the children. Twenty-five juniors were enrolled and seventeen primaries at Tupelo. They had almost 100 per cent in attendance during the session of the school. The children enjoyed the project of preparing school bags for the Mexican school children. This kind of teaching helps build the kingdom of our Lord. Blessed are the children who have teachers that love and cherish them.

Cheering reports are coming from the men and women who are teaching Cokesbury schools. We do not ask one to look for a complete revolution as the result of teaching one class. Earnest study for five days will help wonderfully, but it requires a lifetime to become fitted to teach religion, and it requires much more than a lifetime; it requires a life hid with Christ in God. The day will come when a man will be considered a failure if he is not able to teach the people how to live the Christ-like life. The day must come when entire communities practice the principles of the kingdom. Men with a passion born of the Spirit have led in this work, and such men will continue to lead. It requires as much of the Spirit to teach religion as it does to preach religion.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The leaders of the "Older Girls" Camp Conference think wise to postpone the 1928 session of the Camp Conference on account of the small pre-enroliment list. A vote of thanks is due the Dean and Educational Director, Dr. R. H. Wynn and Miss Pauline Wynn, for the faithful work done.

The writer was in Lake Charles this week and visited the new Methodist church where the Annual Conference will be held in November. There will be a formal opening of this church on Aug. 12, which will no doubt be a great day in the history of Lake Charles Methodism. The writer appreciates invitation from the pastor to be present. There may be larger and more expensive churches in Louisiana, but none are more beautiful.

Mr. T. E. Cranford, of Oberlin, writes: "We have planned to hold the opening of our new Methodist church Sunday, Aug. 12, and wish to extend you an invitation to be present." We have already seen the new church at Oberlin and congratulate the congregation on their new building. Much credit is due the faithful pastor, Rev. George D. Purceli, who has put much personal labor on the new building.

Mr. J. H. Carter, of New Orleans, District Secretary, is hard at work on his Standard Training School, which is booked for Oct. 14-19. He has secured Dean Smith for the Bible Course. New Orleans Methodism has in store a great treat in the course taught by Dean Smith.

Mr. S. M. Reynoids, of Monroe, District Lay Leader, is working up a ciass for a course on "Stewardship" at their Standard Training School booked for Oct. 21-26.

We spent Tuesday, July 24, in Ruston in conference with the Board chairman, Dr. W. W. Drake, and the Extension Secretary, Rev. A. K. McLelian, concerning extension work in the missionary area of our Conference.

Dr. Drake has decided on the following courses for his Standard Training School, Sept. 9-14: "Stewardship," "Program of Christian Reiigion," "Primary Lesson Material," and "Junior Lesson Material."

The leaders in Mansfield are interested in a Standard Training School, the pastor, Rev. W. C. Childress, wrote us some time ago. In a recent letter from Prof. D. B. Raulins, President of Mansfield Coliege, he says: "We have been thinking about a Training School for next fali. Seems that we should have about the following courses: 'Organization and Administration,' 'Principles of Teaching,' 'Bible,' and a special like 'Beginner or Primary.'"

Rev. A. K. McLelian, Extension Secretary, reports an interesting joint school on the Choudrant charge. The pastor, Rev. D. W. Poole, and other leaders showed a great spirit of cooperation.

We were glad to learn that the Epworth Laegue had held a very successful institute there just prior to this school, under the leadership of Miss Elizabeth Langford.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

THESE OLD MEN MADE GOOD.

John Wesley, the preacher, lived to be 88 years old. Arnauld, the theologian and sage, translated Josephus in his eightieth year. Dryden, in his sixty-eigth year, commenced the translation of the Iliad. Dr. Cary, the founder of missions, acquired many of the dialects of India after he was quite advanced in life. Michael Angelo was still painting his giant canvases at eighty-nine years of age; Titian, at ninety, painted with the vigor of youth, and kept on painting untii he was ninety-nine. Franklin did not commence his philosophical pursuits untii he was fifty. Newton, at eighty-three, worked as hard as he did in middle life. Verily, it would seem that there is no age at which a man—or woman—may retire! An old lady was running over the catalogue of her ailments to her physician, and he repiied, "What would you have, madam? I cannot make you young again." "What I want you to do is to help me grow old a iittie longer."—The Christian Herald.

Gather you, gather you, angels of God—
Freedom and Mercy and Truth;
Come; for the earth is grown coward and old;
Come down and renew us her youth.
Wisdom, Self-sacrifice, Daring and Love,
Haste to the battiefieid, stoop from above,
For the day of the Lord is at hand.

SOUTH UNION CAMP MEETING.

Just about two and one-half miles west of Ackerman, Miss., this celebrated camp ground is located. Last night (Wednesday) closed the fifty-seventh camp meeting. The first camp meeting was held in 1872.

The old pioneer preachers and fathers of the seventies who conceived the idea of starting a camp meeting at this place have long since passed to their great reward, there being left only about half a dozen of the original tent holders. Practically every tent was filled and the camp meeting spirit seemed to pervade every heart.

It has been the custom all these years to have some of the best talent that could be found in the North Mississippi Conference to hold these series of meetings, and it may be truly said that the pastor of the Chester charge, the Rev. W. R. Crouch, did not vary from the former custom, when he secured the services of our ex-presiding elder, Rev. A. T. McIlwain, of First Church, Corinth, Miss., to do the preaching. Brother McIlwain was there for the first service, and it was said by all that heard him that they never heard better gospel messages. He was assisted by the following pastors who brought messages from time to time that stirred and gripped the hearts of all: Rev. W. L. Storment, of Sunflower, Miss.; Rev. J. A. Biffle, near New Albany, Miss.; Rev. S. W. Hemphill, of Winona, Miss., and Rev. C. A. Northington, and Rev. W. L. Graves, of Ackerman, Miss.

On Monday our much beloved presiding elder, Rev. W. N. Duncan, brought a heart-searching message at the 11 o'clock hour. In the afternoon the elder held his third quarterly conference for the Ackerman and Weir charge and the Chester charge, jointly. Good reports were made by both pastors, showing the work in these parts far in advance of that of twelve months ago.

There were some eight or ten additions to the church.

At the sunrise prayer meeting this morning (Thursday), that being the last service, the tent holders expressed themselves as considering this the best camp meeting they have experienced for a number of years. Also extended to Brother McIlwain their appreciation for his faithful service rendered, and extended to him and all the other ministers a hearty invitation to be present at the 1929 camp meeting.

The wind blew and the rains descended, but the camp meeting was a great success. On Sunday at the 11 o'clock hour young John McIlwain came over from Artesia and sang a solo. This young man is only about 12 years of age, but oh, how he can sing. He is a nephew of the Rev. A. T. McIlwain, but his uncle is not in his class when it comes to singing. John, we are going to expect you at the 1929 camp meeting to sing several solos.

A School of Distinction

Morgan School has been known to the writer many years. He also knows intimately Prof. Robt. K. Morgan, its founder, the high ideals he has for the school and the high type of work done. The school is a Christian institution; and building character in the boy, along with a high scholarship, is the chief aim of the school. When parents entrust their boys to Prof. Morgan for training, they need have no fear for the future. Mr. Morgan loves boys, understands and helps them. Thousands of former students can attest to this. Boys are taken and under his skillful guidance moulded into men of the highest character. If you have a boy to educate, write to Mr. L. I. A CHINESE DAUGHTER'S LOYALTY.

Greetings from a Chinese daughter to her mother church across the seas! Such a letter of greeting recently came from St. John's Church, Soochow, China, to St. John's Church, St. Louis, Mo., expressing all a daughter's loyalty and affection for her mother. For St. John's Church of St. Louis is really the mother of her namesake in far-away China, since it was the members of the St. Louis church that gave the money to build for their brethren in Soochow a house where they might worship God. And the Chinese Christians have not forgotten this gift of love, and at the last quarterly conference it was decided that a letter of greeting and appreciation should go from this daughter in China to her mother church in America, telling just what their love gift had meant to Christians in China during the times of recent stress and storm.

The letter was written by Mr. Peter S. T. Shih on behalf of the members of the Soochow church, and was sent to the Rev. Ivan Lee Holt, D.D., pastor of St. John's Church, St. Louis, on behalf of the congregation of that great church. The letter follows:

St. John's Church,
Soochow, Ku., China,
May 22, 1928.

St. John's Church, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

Dear Fellow-Christians: It was voted at our last quarterly conference that a letter of greeting be written from the St. John's Church, Soochow, Ku., China, to her mother church at St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A. In this revolutionary age many changes have taken place, and many more are taking place, but among the things that have stood the test of time is the Christian virtue of filial piety. This among other reasons has prompted us to express so inadequately your daughter's loyalty and affection for her mother.

First of all, we express from the bottom of our hearts our appreciation of your self-denial and sacrifice in giving us a temple in which the community can worship the Lord. It has meant a "City of Refuge" to not a few who had gone astray. The building itself is an example of very fine, if not perfect, architecture and is in itself a symbol of worship. The ground floor is for the Sunday school, and is attended by the children of the community, who are being nurtured in the love of Jesus. The main auditorium on the first floor seats about 1,000 people, and a gallery can take care of 300 or 400 more.

Pastor Wu Tsong-gi, who came into our church some years ago following a beautiful and profound spiritual experience, is now our pastor in charge. He holds a degree in the Chinese old classics and is now a constant and devoted student of the Bible, Our board of stewards, Sunday school workers, and assistants work in harmony under the wise spiritual leadership of our pastor.

Our church centers its program of service around the worship of God on Sundays, for we then receive strength and guidance for conducting our Bible classes on Sundays and during the week, for carrying on our social service work, and preaching in out-stations in the country and in the homes of our people. We have large and flourishing societies of women doing missionary work. We seek to hold up the light of the gospel to all the people of the large district about us. We have felt the power of the Spirit of God among us for good in the prospering of our many branches of service in his name.

Inspired by the missionary spirit and example of our "mother church," we have for many years not only been self-supporting, but we have tried in our meager way to help other needy charges. However, we hope that as the years go by we can do more work of this sort. We already bear quite a share in the Manchurian Mission. "Carry On" is still our slogan. Furthermore, we hope that our relationship can be closer and closer, so that we may all feel more truly the great throbbing heart of our common Redeemer and that in him we may be more truly one.

"For he is our peace who hath made both one and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us. . . . Now therefore we are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God."

Yours in Christ,

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: When I am out in the State working with my Epworth Leaguers the time certainly hurries by. I am very fortunate to have the pleasure of working in the rural communities during such hot summer weather. The cordial hospitality and entertainment extended me cannot be exceeded anywhere.

Last week I spent two days at Bear Creek community, Ruston District, organizing and training a fine group of young people in Hi League work. Rev. D. B. Boddie, of Opelousas, was conducting a revival there at the time and was most lovely to me as we worked together with the Epworth Leaguers. Mrs. Ed. Boddie entertained me in her home. Mr. Layman Napper, evangelistic singer, and Rev. J. L. Cady also assisted in my work most willingly.

From Bear Creek I went to Douglas, on the Choudrant circuit, where Brother D. W. Poole is now pastor. Brother Poole is one of our fine new pastors, this being his first year in the Louisiana Conference. Needless to say that he is winning the hearts of the young people of his churches, as he is working very diligently with them. At Douglas I found one of the finest groups of young people I've met with anywhere in Louisiana. Each evening we had about thirty attending, with the finest fellowship in both work and play. Miss Zulene Leachman entertained me at her home.

On Sunday afternoon the Douglas Leaguers motored to Hilly, where they conducted a devotional program, returning the favor of the Hilly Leaguers rendering a program to them several Sundays ago. We had a very large attendance, having several Leaguers from Long Straw also present. Each of these rural communities can boast of a fine League recently organized. With the enthusiastic work of Miss Elizabeth Murphy, our District Secretary, Ruston District, is doing the best work it has done in years. I am proud of Elizabeth's interest and am glad that the Leaguers of the district are so in love with such a sweet Christian leader.

I had the pleasure of meeting with the Ruston Leaguers at their League hour last evening, Mr. Floyd James, son of our Epworth League friend, Mr. Tom James, of Ruston, is now president of the Senior League. I feel sure that the League will grow under his efficient leadership.

I have not yet printed the news of those Leagues in the State that received certificates on the Standard of Efficiency at Assembly for their last year's work. The certificates were mailed to the following Leagues with the grades here given: Pineville Senior, 89; Pineville Hi League, 100; Minden, 100; Selma, 97.5; Gilbert, 100; Rayville, 83.5; Carrollton Avenue, New Orleans, 100; Carrollton Hi, 75; Second Church, New Orleans, 77 2-3; Epworth, New Orleans, 94; Arcadia, 92.5; Jonesboro, 75; Mangum Memorial, Shreveport, 100; Grace Senior, Shreveport, 88.5. Let us endeavor to keep our secretaries' books accurate so that we will rate still higher next summer.

On the 31st of July I am leaving for Lake Junaluska to attend the Eastern Epworth League Assembly, going from there to the Western Assembly at Mount Sequoyah. I am happy to have a number of Louisiana Leaguers going to Lake Junaluska. Mrs. Robt. P. Jackson, of New Orleans, will join me at Chattanooga. In recognition of her splendid services as Recreational Superintendeut the State Leaguers are giving her this trip. Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Grambling, their two sons; Miss Anna Pharr Turner, of Shreveport, and Miss Rosa Langford, of Monroe, will motor to Lake Junaluska, stopping at several places of interest while on the trip. Brother Grambling has charge of registration at that Assembly this year. There are several Leaguers going to Mount Sequoyah, some of whom I do not yet have the names. Miss Julia McGowen, of New Orleans, will represent us in the oratorical contest. Mr. W. L. McDuff, of Chase, Monroe District, is also planning to attend.

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

At Booneville on July 19, 1928, representatives of Epworth Leagues from Corinth District met for their first League Institute of the year. In the absence of Miss Katherine Bryson, Field Secretary, Mrs. N. N. Maxey, retiring district secretary, presided. After the devotional, led by Miss Ramsey Rutledge, Miss Mary Miller Murry was elected secretary of the meeting, and the business was brought up.

Eight representatives from Belmont made no specific report but were very enthusiastic over their League. Corinth, First Church, with eight representatives, reported a $40 pledge, a good leader and interested members. Corinth, South Side, with six representatives present, reported two new Leagues doing good work. Gaines Chapel, represented by three young ladies, gave a report of a reorganized League of thirty members. The Rienzi representative was a Junior Leaguer. She reported thirty members, six subscribers to Juniors, dues paid two months in advance, and working on a Jubilee scrapbook. The report given by Wheeler's three representatives was that of a newly organized League of thirty enthusiastic members. Six representatives of Saltillo also reported a new League with great plans. Baldwyn and New Albany each had one representative, but they made no reports. Potts Camp, represented by ten of their twelve members, reported a $15 pledge and plans for an Epworth League revival in August. Sherman, with eight members present, reported a membership of sixteen. Five representatives from Blue Mountain reported a membership of twenty on the average. Since the college girls in their League are irregular, they report no definite policy. Ripley, with nine members present, reported 90 per cent according to the Standard of Excellence, about twenty on roll, and good attendance. Nineteen representatives from Booneville proved their report of good attendance and enthusiastic work. The business part of the program ended with the appointment of committees on Policy, Resolutions, and Extension and Efficiency.

Seven pastors from different parts of the district were presented to the Assembly, and the program proper—a Bull's Eye program—began. With the slogan, "Hit Center" in our minds we were given talks on: "Hitting Center with a First Department Program," by Miss Daisy Johnson, new district secretary; "Hitting Center with the Missionary Department," Mrs. N. N. Maxey; "Hitting Center with the Social Service Department," Mrs. Bullard. Out of a wide experience along just such lines plus interest and study these speakers gave very helpful as well as interesting talks. Mr. E. M. Sharp sang a solo and then talked to the assembly on Hymnology and the Choice of Hymns for League services.

The meeting was adjourned to reassemble at 1:30 after a very pleasant social hour, with dinner served by the entertaining League.

PILE REMEDY Guarantee
Every 75c tube with pile pipe and every $1.25 box of PAZO OINTMENT is sold by all Druggists with the understanding that money will be refunded if it fails to cure any case of Itching, Blind, Bleeding or Protruding Piles. Why not try it.

Miss Ruth Richardson led the devotional for the afternoon session and then the committee reported as follows:

We, your committee on policy of Epworth Leagues, recommend that each League form the best policy possible for it to carry out. In this policy we should have at least a devotional program each week, and should maintain the quiet hour and fellow-worker covenant, and should have all study classes required by the Epworth League handbook. Each League should send at the beginning of each year a written policy to its district secretary. We recommend further that you encourage wholesome recreation and fairness in all games and play.

MRS. BULLARD.
MISS BERTIE HALMARK.
MISS RUTH RICHARDSON.

We, the Committee on Extension and Efficiency, beg to submit the following report:

We have approximately forty-four Leagues in the Corinth District. So far so good, but we also have 126 preaching places in the district, 118 organized churches, and when we see the field as a whole we see how far short we fall in the extension of the League program in our district. We should have at least twice as many Leagues as we have.

Some of the Leagues we now have are not Standard Leagues. We therefore urge that these Leagues work dilligently to make themselves more efficient and become Standard Leagues.

We also urge that each League have a "Flying Squadron" to go out to churches where there are no Leagues.

In Five MILLION HOMES TONIGHT

There are times when all a mother's love can't soothe a fretful baby. No way of telling just what's wrong, yet something must be done. Castoria time! A few drops, and Baby has dropped off to sleep. Yet this marvelous means of quieting a restless infant is utterly harmless. There is not one ingredient but what all doctors know and approve, and would let you give your baby every day in the week. In fact Castoria is a purely vegetable product. Gas pains, constipation, even diarrhea can be dispelled in this same manner. Castoria is older than you are, but physicians still say "nothing better for babies." An old-fashioned remedy if you count its years, but parents are old-fashioned who still raise babies without its aid! And at least five million modern mothers keep it handy day and night, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Buy yours now; don't wait until you need it.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

and put on programs, and organize Leagues. After organizing these Leagues the home League should give sympathetic counsel and aid, exchanging programs with them and having socials together.

We especially recommend that the Leagues in the following counties of our district organize League Unions: Tishomingo Union, Alcorn Union, Prentiss Union, Ittawamba and Lee to join with Prentiss County, Union and Tippah with parts of Marshall, Benton, and Pontotoc to form a union. The purpose of these unions is to encourage better Leagues and the extention of League work in other churches.

Respectfully submitted, your Committee on Extension and Efficiency.

E. M. SHARP.
MISS TRYPHENA ROGERS.
MISS RAMSEY RUTLEDGE.
MISS SARAH CUNNINGHAM.
MISS FREDDIE WARRINER.

We, the Leaguers of Corinth District, who are privileged to be present, desire, first, to express regret at the absence of Miss Katherine Bryson and to extend to her our sympathetic interest and regard with the hope that she may soon be restored to health and to the work which she so splendidly carries on.

Second, we desire to express our appreciation to Mrs. Maxey for her efficient leadership at this meeting and for her helpful work during her term of office as District Secretary. We extend to Miss Johnson, our new District Secretary, a hearty welcome and pledge our sincere support to her. We thank the ministers and our presiding elder for their presence and their manifest interest in our League work.

We especially thank Brother Sharp for acting as "General Flukey" and for the pleasing manner in which he performed this honorable task. With unanimous vote we thank the Booneville Leaguers, Brother and Sister Mounger, and all their helpers for the gracious hospitality—the delectable lunch, and for the social features of the noon hour.

This day of inspiration and fellowship shall long remain in our memories as one of our most pleasant days.

Submitted by your Committee on Resolutions.

MRS. H. P. LEWIS.
MISS RUBY ACRES.
MISS LUCILE NABORS.

All these reports were adopted without amendment, after which Mrs. Maxey, as Conference Superintendent of Epworth Hi Work, made a strong appeal for the very best work in that line. Mr. Sharp then in a very interesting way told how we might "hit center" with the fourth department.

A song by Nina Grace Cunningham concluded the program, and we were dismissed by our League benediction.

MRS. N. N. MAXEY,
Presiding Officer.
MARY MILLER MURRY,
Secretary.

MONROE DISTRICT RURAL LEAGUE INSTITUTES.

Lake Providence has been added to our list of institutes held in the Monroe District, making a total of five. In view of the fact that Miss Turner was able to help us only two weeks, this one was conducted by the district secretary, with the assistance of the pastor.

Great interest was manifested by the Leaguers in the work of the different departments. They have some splendid young ladies for officers, with only one or two young men; however, the young ladies promised to do better in the future by seeing that more gentlemen attended and took part in the League. We're counting on them to be one of the 100 per cent Leagues in the district this year. They can, and I am sure they will be.

It was a pleasure to meet Mrs. Hill, a resident of the town, and to learn that she was State secretary back in 1900, also district secretary of what was formerly the Arcadia District. We learned, too, that Dr. Parker, Secretary of the General League Board, was once pastor in this beautiful lake town.

Miss Mullen, of Scarritt College, was conducting a Daily Vacation Bible School in the afternoon for the Juniors, and I'm sure that same will serve as a strong foundation, giving us more and stronger Hi Leaguers, Seniors and laymen in the years to come.

Our first night's attendance at the Institute was about fifteen, the second night thirty-five, and the third night forty-five. Brother George, as well as the other League pastors, is very anxious to see us live up to Item Five on the Standard of Efficiency—at least 50 per cent of active membership attending church services. Leaguers of every district, we can! Why not? Let's make it 75 per cent.

Yours to help make each League a 100 per cent League,

WM. L. McDUFF,
Monroe District, Secretary,
Box 54, Chase, La.

DOING ONE'S DUTY.

He who does not do his duty in this world will never do his duty in any world. He who does not do his duty to his brother will never do his duty to his God. I am bound to put my whole strength and energy and wisdom into my business. To be lackadaisical, half-hearted, so taken up with things above as to be slipshod in my dealings with things below, is to serve neither God nor man, to serve neither this world nor the next. Because I am a Christian I am bound to be earnest, and indeed enthusiastic in all that makes for the welfare of the place in which I live and of the people about me and of the nation to which I belong. He will never do his duty as a Christian who does not do his duty as a citizen. I am unworthy of my liberties unless I seek to extend to others the good that has been conferred upon me. Surely there is nothing more cowardly than that which seems to say: "This is the victory that overcometh the world, to run away from it."—Mark Guy Pearse.

SPOTS BEFORE EYES

Miner Had Dark Spots Before Eyes. Felt Dull, Tired, Achy. Doesn't Get Down Any More.

Somerset, Ky.—Telling how he had known of the merit of Thedford's Black-Draught since he was a boy, Mr. Albert Garland, of this city, recently said:

"I used to work in the mines, but lost quite a bit of time on account of the sick spells I had. I would get to having a bad taste in my mouth, and a very dull, tired feeling and ache. I would have dark spots in front of my eyes, and I would be so dizzy I would stagger like I was drunk.

"I took medicine, but didn't seem to get any better.

"My mother told me to try Black-Draught, which I did, and after a few doses I felt much better. Now I take it as soon as I feel the least bad, and I don't get down. I certainly can say that it has done more for me than any other medicine I have ever taken.

"I never get without Black-Draught. If I go on a visit, I take a package along in my suit-case. My health is better now than it has been in years, and I believe it is the use of Black-Draught that did it."

Black-Draught is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, of high-est quality. Try it. NC-195

Here's Speedy Relief From Bunion Pains and Soft Corns

Get a two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) to-day. Every well stocked drug store has this, with the distinct understanding that your money will be cheerfully returned if it does not reduce the inflammation, soreness and pain much quicker than any remedy you ever used

Two or three applications of Moone's Emerald Oil and in fifteen minutes the pain and soreness disappears. A few more applications at regular intervals and the inflammation is gone.

And as for Soft Corns a few applications each night at bed time and they just seem to shrivel right up and scale off

No matter how discouraged you have been with pads, shields, or other applications, if you have not tried Emerald Oil then you have something to learn

It's a wonderful formula—this combination of essential oils with camphor and other antiseptics so marvelous that thousands of bottles are sold annually for reducing varicose or swollen veins

Every good druggist guarantees the first bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil to end your foot troubles or money back.

EDUCATION AND DEMOCRACY.

The great voice of America does not come from the seats of learning. It comes in a murmur from the hills and woods and farms and factories and the mills, rolling and gaining volume until it comes to us from the homes of common men. Do these murmurs echo in the corridors of the universities? I have not heard them. The universities would make men forget their common origins, forget their universal sympathies and join a class—and no class can ever serve America. I have dedicated every power there is in me to bring the colleges that I have anything to do with to an absolutely democratic regeneration in spirit, and I shall not be satisfied until America shall know that the men in the colleges are saturated with the same thought, the same sympathy that pulses through the whole great body politic.—Woodrow Wilson.

"A period of depression is like going through the tunnel. The sun has not ceased shining, because we do not see it. The sun of righteousness is still shining. Be patient and wait. This darkness is only permitted that the trial of our faith, which is more precious than gold, may strengthen, purify, and perfect it."

"A wise man built his house upon a rock--- and the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock."

Like rock house foundations, the essential quality of rock for monuments is durability. Other important qualities are beauty, legibility of inscriptions and adaptability to design. Granite is the only stone that fills these requirements, and many granites do not possess all these qualities.

Winnsboro Granite

is a true granite, as pure a granite as is known. It possesses all of the above essential qualities for the ideal memorial, and it contains less deleterious ingredients—iron, lime, water—than other granites It is, therefore, the most durable.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument your purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

TWELVE HOURS TO LIVE.

The rich fool of the parable made two mistakes. The first was in believing that his soul could be satisfied with much goods; and the other was in believing that he had ahead of him a long tenure of life. We suppose men and women to-day, whether they are rich or not, are making the same mistakes. We look about us and see everywhere a feverish activity to accumulate goods, no toil being counted too great, no sacrifice too severe, if only money may be accumulated. And these people who are giving their all in the pursuit of wealth are forgetting that happiness does not come that way. Their souls cannot eat, drink, and be merry with that which is purely material. Soul hunger, which every normal person feels, can be satisfied only with spiritual food.

Nor is there any guarantee of another day of life—"this day thy soul is required of thee." Many hearts are made sad every day by the untimely passing of loved ones or friends at whom no one could suspect the finger of death was pointing. "In an hour that ye think not, the Son of man cometh." With such warnings constantly before us, it is indeed strange that anybody should enter the next world unprepared. The foolish man trusts in his riches and acts as if he will live forever; the wise man satisfies the hunger of his soul and is constantly prepared to meet God. Foolish, or wise—which shall it be?

PITIFUL IGNORANCE.

Mr. John J. Raskob, the Roman Catholic, wet, late Republican, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, who, according to his own statement, accepted his position because it gave him an opportunity to fight the "damnable affliction of prohibition," is disqualified by ignorance if by no other cause for acting in the capacity to which he was elected at the request of the Democratic presidential nominee. In a press dispatch appearing in the Memphis Commercial-Appeal on Aug. 2, we find the following:

"New York, Aug. 1.—Southern ministers opposed to the presidential aspirations of Governor Smith are being brought into line by threats that they will lose contributions from their parishioners, according to reports reaching John J. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Raskob told of receiving this information from the South, in an interview to-day at Smith headquarters. * * * 'Nothing in the South is giving us cause for alarm,' Raskob declared. 'Analyses show that the opposition to Governor Smith is based more on religious prejudice than anything else, and that can be dispelled. Substantial people in the South, including Methodists, are saying to their preachers: "This opposition must stop, or you will receive no contributions."'"

This statement shows that Mr. Raskob is pitifully ignorant of the character of the loyal, God-fearing, Protestant people of the South. It is a gross misrepresentation of the Protestant laymen of the South even to suggest that they will undertake to control the voice of their ministers by withholding their financial support. These laymen love their church, they are loyal, they are tolerant, and they freely allow their ministers the right to hold and express their own opinions as they demand that right for themselves. They are too big, too loyal, too generous even to think of trying to control their ministers by the threat of starving them out.

This statement by Mr. Raskob shows, too, that he is pitifully ignirant of the character of the Protestant clergy of the South. It is a gross misrepresentation of them even to suggest that they can be bluffed or bought out of their conscientious convictions when a great moral issue is at stake. These are the men whose forefathers were willing to die for the right; and they themselves are worthy sons of noble sires. No need to fear that they will not "stand hitched" when their convictions are involved.

Poor Mr. Raskob! Some of his Democratic friends will do him and their party a great service if they will send him off on a vacation until after the election, without pen and paper and away from telephone, telegraph, and wireless service. The less he says, the better off he is.

THE REAL ISSUE.

The real issue before us to-day is not who will be the next President of the United States, but who will be a citizen of the kingdom of heaven. There are many things of interest and importance to engage our attention; but the gratest value we have to deal with is the soul. What shall a man be profited if he gain the whole world and lose that? It was a poor emperor who played his fiddle while the city burned. It is a poor farmer who raises fine hogs and cattle while his children go to the dogs. It is a poor business man who gives all his time and talents to making money and piling up wealth while his family makes shipwreck. It is a poor man indeed who pays attention to everything else and neglects his soul. There is only one "pearl of great price."

DR. MOTT'S RESIGNATION.

The recent resignation of Dr. John R. Mott from the general secretaryship of the National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association, to accept the leadership of the International Missionary Council, is an event of more than passing interest. In the minds of many of this generation the name of John R. Mott is inseparably connected with the work of the Young Men's Christian Association, especially in its college activities. The recollection of our own college days brings a vivid picture of the influence of this great man upon our own life and the lives of scores of students with whom we were associated. It was our privilege to hear him speak on numerous occasions and to be associated with him several times in conferences. Two characteristics of his life were always outstanding—the transparent sincerity of his personal religious faith, and his broad vision and grasp of the world-wide mission of Christianity. After forty years of active connection with the Young Men's Christian Association he severs that connection for another field of activity. But his heart and life are still devoted to the establishment of the kingdom of God upon earth. Even when he is translated to the sphere beyond the stars, his memory and influence will abide.

AND THEY CALL THIS LEADERSHIP!

Mr. Robert Ewing, owner of the New Orleans States and the Shreveport Times, is Democratic National Committeeman for Louisiana. We take the following from the States of Wednesday, Aug. 1:

"The campaign for Al Smith for President in Louisiana was launched at a rousing meeting of the Democratic State Central Committee, held at the Roosevelt Tuesday noon, at which speeches were delivered by Robert Ewing, Democratic National Committeeman * * * and several others. The keynote of the meeting was sounded by National Committeeman Ewing when he declared that anybody who said he was against Al Smith because of prohibition 'knew he was lying in his heart, because prohibition is not an issue in this campaign.'"

Prohibition not an issue! The Louisiana Democratic National Committeeman is about the only person in the United States that we know of who maintains that prohibition is not an issue in this campaign. We wonder if he read Governor Smith's telegram to the Houston convention. We wonder if he reads the newspapers. We wonder if he knows what trained political writers over the country are saying. Prohibition not an issue in this campaign!

And "anybody who said he was against Al Smith because of prohibition knew he was lying in his heart!" So all the godly men of this State and of other States; all the devout women who have labored and prayed with a holy passion for a dry nation; all the clear-headed, true-hearted business leaders throughout the nation who have fought for prohibition all these years and now see the results of their labors threatened with destruction—all these who say they are opposed to Al Smith because of prohibition "know they are lying in their hearts!"

We do not think we have misquoted Mr. Ewing, for we find the record in his own paper, the New Orleans States, of Wednesday, Aug. 1.

THE JUNIOR COLLEGE.

By Dr. G. F. Winfield, President, Whitworth College.

Foreword.

By Dr. D. M. Key, President, Millsaps College.

Nothing has been more fortunate in the recent development in our educational interests in the Mississippi Conference than the coming of Dr. George F. Winfield as Associate President to have charge of Whitworth College. The formation of the Millsaps-Whitworth Collegiate System, which provides a standard arts and science college course of the highest grade for our young women, constitutes the utilization to the very best advantage of the resources committed into the hands of the Board of Trustees. The baccalaureate course is divided into two parts. The first two years are planned with more of prescription and direction and personal instruction, whether done at Jackson or Brookhaven. These are the junior college years. Dr. Winfield has for many years given his thought and executive ability to the junior college field and is probably the best trained and ablest junior college administrator in our church. He was a pioneer in writing the first Master's thesis on the Church Junior College. He was one of the organizers of the American Association of Junior Colleges and President of that national collegiate body. In his article on the Junior College, Dr. Winfield states admirably the educational principles that are being followed in the Millsaps-Whitworth college course for young women.

The junior college movement is unquestionably the most significant development in American education in this generation. The increase in the number of junior colleges in the first quarter of this century has astounded even the most ardent advocates of the movement. The following definition of the junior college was published by the United States Bureau of Education: "By a junior college is meant an institution offering two years of college grade or at least thirty year hours beyond regular four years of secondary training, but not equipped for a four-year college course leading to the Bachelor's degree."

"More than a quarter of a century ago, President William Rainey Harper began to advocate vigorously that the first and second years of college work should be considered as secondary education, and that the line of demarcation as to the nature and presentation of these two years should be clearly drawn at the end of the sophomore year. So, when he became the first President of the University of Chicago, which opened its doors on Oct. 1, 1892, the freshman and sophomore work was put into a distinct division of its own and called the Academic College, and the second division, or the work of the junior and senior years was designated as the University College.

"Four years later, in 1896, the divisions were designated as Junior College and Senior College, respectively. This plan of organization still remains. The student entering the university as a freshman is regarded as a high school pupil still pursuing high school subjects. Real university work does not commence until the end of the sophomore year." (From catalogues quoted in Master's Thesis of 1916 by the author of this article.) A few schools in that section became correlated with the University of Chicago, which admitted their graduates as juniors.

The school of Joliet Township, Joliet, Ill., was the first tax supported school to be raised to a junior college. This was accomplished in 1901. In the same year Hardin College, of Mexico, Mo., arranged its curriculum to conform to the first two years of college work and was recognized by the University of Missouri.

California was the first State to pass a law providing for the establishment of the junior college. This was in 1907, but it seems to have been 1910 when the first schools were fully established under the new law. Thus we see that the movement is only about a quarter of a century old, yet it has grown so rapidly that the most recent study by Mr. Frederick L. Whitney, Director of the Department of Educational Research of the Colorado State Teachers' College, Greely, Colo., reveals that three hundred and four junior colleges actually filled out his questionnaire and that there are in all the States four hundred and seventy-six junior colleges. (There are only about 700 four-year colleges and universities in the United States).

This study reveals a number of very interesting things in the development of junior colleges. Of the 136 tax-supported junior colleges reporting on time of organization, one-half have been organized since 1924. In this as in most movements in education, the church schools first led out, there being forty-seven church or privately owned junior colleges by 1910. At the same time there were only five tax-supported junior colleges. Of the 178 independent junior colleges reporting, half of them have been organized on this basis since 1920.

No thoughtful man or woman can longer ignore this movement, but every intelligent citizen should inform himself or herself on the standards and work of the junior college.

Present Standards.

One of the first things with which every one is concerned is the mattter of standards. This is a time when we are standardizing everything. The Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States has been most conservative in recognizing junior colleges. Up to the present (1928) this regional standardizing agency has recognized only thirteen junior colleges in all the Southern States, and only two of these are in Mississippi. Briefly stated, these standards are: teachers must hold the Master's degree or its equivalent and must be paid adequate salaries and limited to sixteen hours of class work per week. The number of students in the class must be limited to thirty or in the case of language to twenty-five. The annual income must be at least $20,000, half of which must come from fixed sources, such as taxation or endowment. The library and laboratories must be adequate for all subjects offered. No student is to be admitted to college classes who has not graduated from an accredited high school with at least fifteen units or passed an approved examination on fifteen units of work. At least sixty semester hours of college work must be required for graduation. The regular junior college title or degree, A.A.—Associate in Arts—may be granted.

All buildings must be modern, well equipped, and kept in a sanitary conditon at all times. These standards strictly enforced insure thorough work and an atmosphere of culture and refinement in which the best in each student is called out. This is real education.

Psychological Basis.

Educators do not try to make boys and girls conform to a set pattern or type of school. "The need of the child is the law of the school." The student is the center around which every efficient school must be organized. Life is a unit, yet it is one unfolding process. Our task is to analyze the needs of the individual at each stage of development and organize an institution to meet these needs.

Most authorities agree that adolescence, or the youth period, reaches from about twelve to twenty-four years, and that this period is characterized by about three waves of influence, which determine the chief or dominant interests of the youth; as we are dealing with a growing, developing organism and unfolding personality, of course, definite bounds cannot be set, but periods of development can be indicated. The first, termed by many psychologists the early adolescent period, is characterized by more rapid growth. It is the time when the body of the child is being made over into the body of the adult. This is from about twelve to about sixteen years of age, varying with different individuals. The junior high school is being organized to meet the needs of this period. The second, or middle adolescent period, covers the years from about sixteen to twenty. This is the emotional period. It is when young people act largely on impulse. This is preeminently the junior college period. Many of the leading junior college men and women advocate making it a four-year institution superimposed upon the junior high school covering the last two years of high school and the first two years of college.

The average age at which boys and girls finish high school and get ready for college is from seventeen to eighteen. This, then, is right in the midst of the emotional period of adolescence. There is no psychological or educational reason for taking that seventeen or eighteen year old youth up out of the home and the high school, where he has the companionship of parents and teachers, where he has had specific assignment in laboratory and library, and transplanting him into a totally different environment where he does not have the personal guidance of experienced older people who are responsible and where the university method of instruction is employed. In the university, assignments in laboratory and library are general rather than specific. The library, rather than the teacher, is the center of interest. The lecture method takes the place of the question and answer method, the discussion method, the project method, and the socialized recitation and supervised study.

This is the chief explanation of the large number of failures in the freshman classes of the university. The per cent of failures of those going directly from high school to the very large college or university ranges from twenty-five to forty per cent. This is too great a price to pay for lack of correct articulation of schools to meet the needs of young people. In each of several Western universities from five hundred to eight hundred freshmen fail each year. Most of them go back home discouraged for life and never go to college. This is a grim monument to our folly in rushing our immature boys and girls off to the university.

That there is rather a distinct change that takes place about the age of twenty is recognized by all. Reason becomes more dominant, better judgment born of wider experience is in evidence. That the university recognizes this is shown by its allowing the student to elect his course within certain limits after the first two years of prescribed work; that the State recognizes the same truth of life development is attested by its extending the right of the ballot and to contract at the age of twenty-one.

Later adolescence is the university period, and a number of universities are coming to recognize this and are discouraging students entering the first two years of the College of Arts and Sciences in the university, and allowing no one to enter other departments of the university who has not had at least two years of college work. It is estimated that by 1934 Leland Stanford University will have entirely eliminated freshmen and sophomores. Already John Hopkins accepts junior college graduates as candidates for the Ph.D. degree . We conclude then that the junior college is psychologically and educationally sound.

Is It Efficient?

This is the question that every patron or student has the right to ask. Is the junior college efficient? The whole curriculum and school activities of the junior college are organized around the needs of the freshman and sophomore. To develop correct emotional attitudes and vigorous response to right standards is the chief aim during this period. In fact, it is of more importance during the whole school career to arouse right emotions and let them issue in meeting actual life situations than it is to develop ability to think logically. Emotions affect the will more directly than does reason, and this is pre-eminently the time to direct the young to the highest and best things of life. Boys and girls may be led to love the beautiful, the noble, and the altruistic way of conduct, and this is made the chief aim in the junior college. The curriculum is arranged for the purpose of laying foundations for advanced work if the student plans to go to the university. As the architect requires the builder to dig deep to lay the foundation for a skyscraper, so young people must lay their foundations in proportion to the distance they expect to go up.

There came recently to my desk two requests in one week for an outline of the pre-engineering and pre-agricultural courses we offered in the co-educational junior college with which I was then connected. Both of these requests were from deans of Agricultural and Mechanical Colleges, one in the North and one in the South. Each said that they— the faculty of his institution—had found that the boy who had stuck closely to the regular courses in high school and junior college was best prepared to specialize. They also said they were reorganizing on the basis of a junior college for the first two years and the requiring three years of specialization work beyond the sophomore year. The records of junior college students prove the value of the curriculum and the whole organization.

Junior colleges have reduced the percentage of failures among freshmen to from five to ten per cent as against from twenty-five to forty per cent in the universities. It has been found in several States recently that the junior college graduates make, as a rule, higher grades in the junior and senior years' work than do even those who have survived two years in the university. About fifty per cent of the junior college graduates go on immediately to higher institutions, though many for economic reasons have to drop out for a time. I kept the records for five years for students in three junior colleges and found that in over a hundred students going to higher institutions from each of these the failures ranged from one to five per cent. Taking then the upper figures in each case, these junior colleges reduced the failures from an average of thirty-five per cent of those going direct to the university to fifteen per cent of those who went through the junior college.

The extra-curricula activities are likewise organized to suit the tastes, interests, and ambitions of the middle adolescent. The law of learning is that one learns by doing. So while the freshmen and sophomores of the large college are sitting back watching the juniors and seniors run things, or at times running from the upper classmen, the freshmen and sophomores in the junior college are running student affairs of their school, and forming no inferiority complexes. This accounts for the fact that they become the leaders in the senior college when they go on. They soon demonstrate superior leadership, and are elected to the responsible places over the students who have been longer in the higher institution.

Next to who a child's parents are, his teachers are of the most importance so far as the influence of adults on his life is concerned. The strongest personality possible should be teacher, companion and friend of the adolescent. Culture is caught, not taught. The junior college offers superior advantages in this personal contact between student and counselor which every teacher becomes. In addition to the personal efforts of each teacher in a well organized junior college, one of the strongest members of the faculty devotes his or her entire time to studying each student, giving intelligence and educational tests and aiding the student to discover himself or herself. Self-discovery must precede the highest self-development and normal self-improvement. Nearly every one can excel in something if he can find his place. Guidance is the big word in education. Every student should, by the time the junior college has been finished, have selected a life work and accepted certain ideals of conduct. By this time he or she should have come to a personal consciousness of kinship to the Man of Galilee and of communion with the Great Personality that challenges the best in every human heart.

Economically Sound.

Just as the junior college is educationally sound and efficiently organized, it is economically justified. A recent study of the cost per student in four-year colleges shows that of twenty-three colleges studied it cost on an average of $266 per student for instruction only. The whole cost ranges from three hundred to four hundred dollars. The cost in the junior college ranges from $150 to $250, the median being about $175. Professor Reeves' study shows that there is an increase of seventy-four per cent of cost for the junior and senior years over the cost during the freshman and sophomore years. It has been estimated that two-thirds of the income from tuition in a four-year college is from the students of the first two years, and that two-thirds of the expenses is on the last two years. So it can be plainly seen that the school that leaves off the two most expensive years and retains the two most productive can render better service for the amount paid during those two years. Patrons should remember however, that it costs from $175 to $226 per session to teach each student. Most independent junior colleges charge from $90 to $100 tuition for the nine months' session. The difference between this and the cost is made up by interest on endowment and church assessments. The church is glad to do this in order o train Christian leaders for the various walks of life and to aid in the great and growing task of education in this country.

The Millsaps-Whitworth System.

We confidently believe that in combining Whitworth with Millsaps College both have been strengthened, and that this will point the way to the solution of the pressing problem of maintaining proper standards for the junior college, and give it the confidence of patrons and benefactors who are willing to invest in education for the great rank and file of young people who want to go to college.

Millsaps is one of the six strongest colleges in all the South; Whitworth is one of the thirteen junior colleges in all the Southern States to win recognition by the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States. This is a great distinction, and a guarantee to students that their credits will be accepted anywhere in the United States. We think the plan approaches perfection. At Millsaps, boarding girls are not received below the junior year. At Whitworth, boarding girls are admitted only for the freshman and sophomore years. The Fine Arts faculty at Whitworth becomes the Fine Arts faculty at Millsaps, where studios will be opened two days of the week. As classes demand, more days will be given and the faculty increased. The Whitworth Fine Arts faculty is one of the strongest in the South. Two members of the faculty of the Cincinnati Conservatory are graduates of Whitworth.

The standard junior college is in no way inferior. It is superior. It is the best place for college freshmen and sophomores.

MEETING OF STOCKHOLDERS, LAKE JUNALUSKA.

AN ENGLISHMAN ACTUALLY CAN APPRECIATE JOKES.

By Rev. F. B. Hill

I have a great affection for bishops (some one suggests it may be because I have so little personal contact with them), but my sincere regard for them singly and collectively does not hinder me from appreciating this little story of an Episcopalian bishop who was paying a visit to a country church and its day school. He had noticed many large posters in the shop windows referring to the bishop's visitation, and accordingly began his talk by asking the children the meaning of the word, "visitation."

There was one little boy who knew, and he had been looking it up in his dictionary. "Please sir," he answered, "It is a plague sent by Providence."

A prominent member of a church "fell asleep," and the vicar thought it was fitting to announce the sad news by pinning a notice on the church door, couched in these words, "Brother Sam departed for heaven yesterday at 6:15." Unhappily, a son of Belial passed that way after the vicar had gone, and to the latter's shocked dismay he found next day another notice under his, which read: "Heaven, 8:30. Greatly distressed. Brother Sam not yet arrived.—Peter."

Another dear lady left her home hurriedly one day to nurse her ailing sister. Her nursing failed to keep her alive. She sent a telegram to others of the family, which read like this: "Aunt Sarah went to heaven yesterday at 2:35. Very disappointed. Returning to-morrow at 11:15."

The Wesleyan Annual Methodist Conference is now being held in Liverpool, England. Some years ago at one of the Annual Conferences, it was dealing in its wisdom with candidates for the ministry. A question arose concerning a candidate because the doctor had reported adversely on the condition of one of his eyes. It appeared that eventually he might lose the sight of it.

A minister rose and said: "Mr. President, doctors are often wrong; and if the worst comes to the worst, the young man will be able to serve the Lord with a single eye."

President, Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension.

SEALS ARE BORN WHITE.

Do you know that seals are born white and, being the color of the ice and snow among which they live, are thus safe while unable to care for themselves? As they grow older they turn dark. —Kind words.

A RETIRING AGE FOR OUR BISHOPS.

By Judge James G. McGowen, of the Supreme Court of Mississippi.

In the Christian Advocate of June 22, Bishop John M. Moore, writes of "Four Things I Liked" about the Methodist Episcopal General Conference. The chief one appeared to be the method of retiring its bishops.

Bishop Moore gives three reasons why he would welcome a similar law passed by our General Conference: (1) It would give a bishop notice of his end the day he begins, and "save him from the humiliation that would come from the discussion of his infirmity of body or mind;" (2) prevent distress to the bishop and his friends, since "within the last thirty years most of the retirements of bishops have been accompanied by distress and heartaches;" and (3) it is difficult to bring about even a just superannuation under our present system.

Notwithstanding Bishop Moore weighs his words well before he writes, his claims in this article are as amazing as his grounds are fallacious.

In the first place, such a system as he desires assumes that at a certain age all men reach a dead level of mechanical sameness in mind, body and spirit, while the fact is that some men are much more efficient at seventy-two than are others at sixty-two. The only legal disciplinary grounds for a Methodist preacher, pastor, or bishop, to become a claimant upon pension relief funds is that he "shall be worn out in the itinerant service." There is no age limit for pastors and there should be none for bishops, for all men cannot conscientiously claim superannuation at the same age.

The wisdom of an inflexible age limit of service, to be fixed regardless of a bishop's efficiency, around the age of seventy is not supported by the evidence found in the facts of history. When Doriand made his study of the lives of four hundred of the world's greatest figures, he discovered that thirty-five per cent of them continued their active service beyond seventy, and many much beyond. Witness: Gladstone, Balfour, Clemenceau, and Root; Depew, Rockefeller, Edison, and Zeppelin; and Joffre, Foch, Hindenberg, and Sims; and Wesley, Abbot, and Cuyier. John Burroughs said: "I am more able to do my work at seventy-seven than at forty-seven or fifty-seven. Old age brings a deeper and wider outlook on life."

"Under our system the infirmities of age frequently have to be strenuously and distressingly exposed in order to bring about even a just superannuation" and "within the last thirty years . . . most of the retirements of the bishops have been accompanied by distress and heartaches upon the part of these bishops and their friends." This is severe language and it is not without reflection upon the bishops who have gone before, as well as a presumptuous prophecy of the future.

Did not Bishops Pierce, Keener, Hargrove, Granbery, Fitzgerald, Morrison, Hendrix and Kilgo ask to be retired? Why then now talk about the embarrassing difficulty of securing even a just superannuation of a bishop? It is easier in all respects to superannuate a bishop than it is to retire a preacher on a circuit. The bishop is cared for, the poor circuit pastor is not—and all "the giraffes" and most connectional preachers and college presidents feel that they could far excel the "old bishop" in the administration of the office.

The association in an Annual Conference is close, warm, and intimate, while comparably, a General Conference is an iceberg.

The following is a part of an editorial which appeared, July 11, in the Herald Tribune, a metropolitan daily of New York:

"We hope very much that the report from Washington that Oliver Wendell Holmes will resign from the Supreme Court next October is untrue, for our highest courts can ill spare him. He not only holds the record for length of service on the bench, but being in his eighty-eighth year is also the oldest man in point of years now sitting on it. But if old in years, Mr. Justice Holmes is far younger than most of us in mind and spirit."

This writer wrote of Judge Holmes in the case of United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company vs. Parsons, reported in 147 Mississippi, at page 373: "The distinguished Mr. Justice Holmes who now sits as the oldest in point of years and withal one of the clearest of his age a master of the history as well as the philosophy of the law." The retirement of bishops was not in our minds when the court approved this statement.

It is unfortunate that our church should consider at this time the fixation of an age limit when science, backed up by the actuaries of the great life insurance companies, assert that human life has been extended substantially. It is a trite saying, but a true one, "Old men for counsel, young men for war," and to many laymen it is apparent that we have a splendid crop of belligerents in our leadership at the top, and a dearth of sage counsellors; but we stand by, because we believe as the leaders grow older they will grow in sanity.

How long will the children of this world be wiser in their day and generation than the children of light? If without any age limit tends to take one beyond his usefulness, then a fixed limit would tend to bring him up to that limit regardless of his lack of efficiency. Our great men whom the church has chosen to be bishops, sacrificing their lives on the altars of our beloved Methodism, should be given words of good cheer and assurance and expressions of gratitude and esteem. The church can well afford to trust them, knowing that if they are "worn out in the itinerant service," they will ask to be released, as nearly every one of their predecessors did who lived to reach that distinction and the roll of honor.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE TO-DAY.

By President D. B. Raulins.

What greater curse can come upon a person or place than to be taken for granted? Yet such has been the lot both of persons of eminence and places of importance. Of Jesus it was asked, "Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and are not his sisters here with us?" It is observable that this attitude is often characteristic of those to whom the place or person may be nearest and mean most. Familiarity is substituted for knowledge and appreciation. And the attitude of indifference growing out of it is blighting, and proves a formidable handicap. The outsider almost invariably measures a matter in terms of the appreciation and interest of those to whom it is nearest and means most.

How much better is the attitude expressed by Browning:

"Only be sure thy daily life,
In its peace or in its strife,
Never shall be unobserved;
We pursue thy whole career,
And hope for it, or doubt, or fear—
Lo, hast thou kept thy path or swerved—
We are beside thee in all thy ways,
With our blame, with our praise,
Our shame to feel, our pride to show,
Glad, angry—but indifferent, no!"

Seemingly few people, even among our Louisiana Methodists, realize what Mansfield College is, or know what it is doing. It is richly endowed with tradition and sentiment, but does not share as generously as it should in the mobile, aggressive, and sacrificial interest of our own times.

The campus of Mansfield College, though small, is one of the most beautiful to be found in this or adjoining States. Nine acres are crowded with charming attractiveness. Trees of different varieties are to be found: pine, sweet gum, white oak, water oak, hickory, sycamore, catalpa, willow, china, pecan, walnut, cedar; and smaller trees like apple, peach, fig, etc. Numbers of flowers are to be found and more are being added all the time. The grass is kept neatly mowed.

The buildings are commodious and comfortable. Thweatt Hall, the oldest of the group, was erected in 1854. In it are housed the office, library, laboratory, studios, with second and third floors given to rooms. Sheppard Annex, at the north end of Thweatt Hall, has class rooms, lobby, and rooms for the girls. The lobby of the annex was recently furnished and equipped most tastily by the Epworth Leaguers of the State. Chairs, lamps, book sections, settees, and other furnishings have made this one of the most attractive nooks about the place. Housed in another building connected by an archway to Thweatt Hall is the Bobbitt dining hall and Epworth auditorium. This is a two-story building. The dining hall has a capacity of 200. The auditorium, said by many to be one of the most beautiful small auditoriums in the State, has a seating capacity of 500. It is handsomely equipped with velour curtain, draperies and stage furnishings, and substantial seats. All it lacks to make it complete in every sense is a great pipe organ, for the installation of which we anxiously wait upon some interested and generous friend of the college.

Near by the campus, under separate roofs, are three wooden buildings, all the others just mentioned being of brick. These buildings share liberally in the history of the school, and will be recalled with considerable interest and some amusement by students of earlier days. These buildings are now arranged in a line running east from the main building. First in the line is the Y. W. C. A. hut, where the girls hold their devotional meetings. The next is what was formerly known as the "Old Session Hall." In it are the President's apartment and music studios. The last in the line is Alumnae Hall. In it the Model School is housed.

Mansfield College conducts a Model School, carrying the child through the grades. Its high school work is accredited by the State. The students of this department enjoy the advantages offered by college teachers. There are two years of junior college work, the college being a member of the American Association of Junior Colleges. This department offers two courses, the Teacher Training, and the Arts and Sciences. Students are graduated with 68 semester hours of college work. The Fine Arts School, with its courses in pipe organ, piano, voice, violin, theoretical branches, and expression, is doing work of a very high order.

The faculty assembled for this year is exceptional, both as to equipment for teaching and character. The school has never had a better faculty, if as good. Among the teachers are four A.M. graduates, coming from such schools as Southern Methodist University, Chicago, Peabody, and Columbia.

But, some one will say, a school may have a faculty made up of representatives from all the famous schools of this and other countries, and still fail in the work of the church school. And to this we heartily agree. The administration of Mansfield College proceeds upon the conviction that a church school must meet these two exacting demands: it must offer academic training on a par with that of the State and other institutions; it must provide a religious and character training offered by no other institution. The latter we regard as the only ground, under most circumstances, upon which the church school can justify its existence and its claim to patronage and support.

For the above reasons Mansfield college teachers understand that it is not sufficient just to know their subjects and to be able to teach them. They are aware that girls need guidance that is not found in mathematics and science, a guidance that will be theirs when these subjects are forgotten. Each teacher furnishes the president with a weekly report of each student experiencing difficulty in the field of her studies or her way of living. It is felt that a girl well trained in the arts and sciences may easily prove a menace to the community if she does not have the spirit of Christ.

A number of teachers are taking special training during the summer, three of them doing advanced work in Paris, France.

Graduates of Mansfield College are proving themselves capable in the work of teaching and in advanced work at senior colleges. Of the class of thirty-five graduated in 1927, twenty-four found employment as teachers in Louisiana and adjoining States, eight entered senior colleges without examination to continue their college training. The latter have entered such institutions as Southern Methodist University, Centenary, State Normal, and Texas University.

Not only by a long history of very acceptable work does Mansfield College justify its claim to the support of Methodists and others, but by a type of work being done now it proves its worthiness to remain in that confidence and support.

But what of the future? See article to follow this next week.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

A certain wise New England woman remarked that she accepted the universe; and crabbed old Thomas Carlyle countered by saying, "She had better." But the universe that Margaret Fuller knew and accepted is not the universe that we have revealed to us to-day.

Men of science and religion are reaching upward and downward, inward and outward, and bringing to our poor limited human understanding a greater universe. Stars rise and set in the vast reaches of a boundless sky; others like Polaris, pour out their light from seeming immovable points of splendor; clustering constellations wheel and turn through mighty sweeps of space; and lying far beyond human vision, modern astronomy teaches, are other solar systems surpassing the one in which our planet moves and lives, in size and grandeur.

And the physicist has eliminated matter from this new universe and resolved everything—if there be any things left—into energy or electricity or some marvelous force akin to it, the basic principle of all. So dead, inert matter is a dream of the past. The atom is no longer the adamantine, flint-like uncrushable particle of Isaac Newton, nor is it a vortex, nor a miniature solar system. The latest news from scientific headquarters is that the protons and electrons are circling lines of energy. And that's that, until some more discoveries are made. Of course no one has ever seen an atom—all this we are assured is deduced from well known laws governing electricity. But where is the Sadducee, the materialist? He is surely left out in the cold, for there is no matter, all is energy.

The heavens indeed declare the glory of God. As men discover more and yet more of the laws and unseal the mysteries of divine handiwork, they must perforce draw near to him who is the creator and ruler of all in all. Order, system, beauty, are seen and known with each succeeding lesson that comes to us. Why should men falter and refuse to acknowledge divine revelation of spirit and life, when all about us veils are being lifted and countless voices are saying, "After all, the mystery of life is the glory of life, since the hidden things of yesterday, like seed corn planted, are the fruition of to-day?" Possibly, some of the prophets of the Lord to this generation are in the laboratories.

He was academic, analytical, had a good command of language and talked rather pleasingly while we listened to his exposition of the lesson. He wondered what motivated St. Paul, what was the great incentive of his life. Why one should spring such a question is a wonder to me. The veriest tyro who had given any attention at all to that splendid life of sacrifice, suffering and service should know this much. And yet we meet these irrelevant questions and some seem to count them useful and wise. A wooden roller detached from the machinery is sometimes placed on a belt to shorten the slack. It is called an idler. It adds no power, it only turns itself. So are men who talk merely for talk's sake, or for amusement, with no urge or conviction for imparting truth. Oh, friend, when you attempt to fill the high office of teacher—the Master's title—have a message, direct, forceful, earnest, replete with the mighty convincement of truth. Then expectant hearers, longing for refreshment from the springs of God's own giving, may say, "I was thirsty and ye gave me drink." For he who fills the office of Interpreter must know the language of the King.

FOR GOOD WORK.

By Rev. A. H. Williams.

When God made the sun and sent it to flame through the heavens, he had a place for it, and a sublime purpose in making it.

A greater purpose, and vastly more captivating, is in the mind of God when he makes a Christian.

"Created in Christ Jesus unto good works," were the words of St. Paul.

More in "value than many sparrows," said the Master concerning such as are his own.

Valuable for the fact of being "sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty."

"Heirs of God" to the measureless riches of the Supreme Ruler.

The sun is vital in the work of creation; every star has its place, and the angels, in some way, minister to the needs of humankind, but no agency in the domain of creation can grade above the world's members of the family of God. They in a peculiar sense are to do his work upon the earth, ordained and divinely fitted for an opportunity which the tallest of God's creation would covet.

We talk of "old-time religion"—any kind we have is "old-time," if in fact we have religion. Old as Abraham at least. His faith was "counted unto him for righteousness," and people of the present day are "justified by faith;" and St. James said: "I will show you my faith by my works." Also again said the Divine Redeemer, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

His work was divinely given, and this same is true of every son and daughter of the races of mankind, and will so remain until the final finish. "Created in Christ Jesus" applies to all alike. "Old things pass away, and all things become new."

Not all, however, are assigned to the same type of place and work. The demands are numerous and multiform. Great, therefore, must be the variety in workers, and in the kinds of service rendered.

Gifts differ; so also do churches; but the spirit and purpose are the same universally. Mrs. Samuel Wesley specialized in training her household for God. Mrs. Wesley could read the sermon of her rector husband to the congregation if perchance he was ill. She also could visit the sick in emergencies, but "Mr. John," and the others, must have first and special attention. "Rejoice evermore," says the Word, and shouting is flue on occasions. When Mr. John Wesley finally secured his bearings, and literally "shook the world for Christ," Mrs. Wesley may have expressed aloud her gatitude to Almighty God.

Joy belongs to the ardent Christian worker. Not all of them, however, give utterances in vocal indications. Mr. Pepper may shout some day over his great Sunday school. For reasons the most profound and fascinating the angels break forth in joy over the saving of one individual. The joy of the faithful, however, is more or less incidental, as a consequence of fidelity at the post of duty. "Something to shout over" is the important essential. A new church is a cause for joy, likewise the planting of a great Christian school, or the success of a missionary campaign and the effort for revivals. Good "church steps" in places, convenient access to "the house of God," are reasons for gratitude and for joy. A merchant lost $1,000 per year for the lack of an inviting entrance to his store. A strip of a girl created happiness by "washing the dishes" for a poor family where the shadows of death had fallen, and the stewards made glad the pastor by paying the "salary" in full. The sermon was better, the angels hovered about, and the people went away with increased faith and hope for the heavenly land.

God's own are divinely chosen agents, and here to enjoy, of course, but principally to do a few things and to go out finally to the bliss of heaven, the royal splendors of the eternal city. At the "beautiful gate" the Master will say, "Go in—I remember all about it."

DEBT-PAYING.

By a Steward.

The recent article in the Advocate about paying debts is timely.

Do the stewards and members of most churches realize the embarrassing position many pastors are forced into? Note reports at Conferences of the number who do not report salary in full. They get little enough when paid in full. Again, do stewards realize that many pastors are compelled to go into debt, depending on their salary coming up, not knowing but that they may be moved?

When the pastor is compelled to leave a debt and borrow money to move, it is a great hindrance and injustice, and the incoming pastor has that stigma on him and he may be lucky that he is not in the same plight.

In many rural churches it is thought by many that the pastor is extravagant in his dress, because he is compelled to dress neatly. If stewards realize that few pastors have any ready cash (having borrowed money to move on), why don't the stewards at the first meeting chip in, present him at least one-fourth of his quota, and give him a "lift?" He is human and must live.

It is a shame that churches neglect the small pittance that pastors get. Surely they could preach better and feel better. How can a man stand before an audience knowing he owes debts that he can't pay? What does the merchant think of the incoming pastor who may be compelled to ask for credit or go hungry? Three moves are almost equal to a burn. It is a burden to move, if only every four years. Stewards should realize the predicament that some good, honest pastors are in, and make up early something for the new pastor and see to it that he gets his salary monthly, besides his full salary at the end of each quarter.

The church and not the pastor is often at fault. Let us as stewards see to it that the pastor is paid in full.

Do you know that some pastors have taken from their salary and applied to the Conference claims to show a full report? If every member in Methodism would tithe, he would not miss it and everything would come up in full.

Cut out a few non-essentials, those luxuries that do us no good. Just a part of the price of gas and oil used for pleasure. In fact, a little more economy will make up the ten per cent tithe and never be missed.

Fifty years to make the entire nation of Japan at least nominally Christian! That is what the Rev. S. E. Hager, one of the leading Methodist missionaries of Japan, is looking forward to, provided the American, Canadian, and English churches will co-operate heartily with the churches in Japan. But without such vigorous co-operation, says Mr. Hager, it will take at least 200 years to make Japan Christian.

PROPHECY: GOD'S PERSPECTIVE ON HISTORY.

By Rev. Chas. C. Jarrell, D.D.

The whole Bible bears witness to Christ. The fact of redemption and the features of the Redeemer can be seen in the Old Testament no less than in the New by any one who follows the method of Jesus and takes the "bird's-eye-view" of revelation. "And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself" (Luke 24:27). The entire Old Testament is prophetic of the New. Fundamentally imbedded in the Old Testament is this consciousness of being an incomplete, imperfect, and provisional order, a prophetic preparation for the future kingdom and the coming King.

To find that which was permanent, teleological, and peculiar to Israel's prophecy, we must turn to the writing prophets—those preachers, statesmen, reformers, and heralds of the kingdom. So considered, prophecy will be seen to he the wonder of the ages, an inherent and consistent part of revelation itself. Pascal, I believe, has said that the witness of prophecy to Christ constitutes the supreme evidence of the Christian religion. It clings as closely to the main issue as do the history, ritual, poetry, and legislation of the Bible. It has its roots in a moral purpose, the religious discipline of the race and the spiritual culture of the church. Its outlook is toward that divine society on earth which hecomes more and more clearly known as the kingdom of God.

The necessity of prophecy arises from the very nature of the revelation. The revelation of redemption must be a revelation through history. For history to be the vehicle for revelation, it must be seen to have unity and continulty, and so must be seen with the eagle eye of prophecy. Prophecy is God's perspectlve on history. History must he seen from ahove and in relation to its central event, the cross of Christ. The true proportlons of the Cross can never be understood wlthout adequate hackground and horizon. This history alone can furnish, and to furnish this is the true phllosophy of history. It takes all of history to give the scale for such an event; and only prophecy, wlth its insight and foresight, its intuitlons and vlsions, compactlng and compressing the ages into its consciousness, can thus shape history lnto a vehicle for this revelation. Prophecy ls no more an idle marvel than miracles are. They are both inseparahly involved ln the revelation. They transcend reason when seen simply in the light of the natural order; hut they both answer the highest demands of reason when placed in the light of this higher order of divine necessity, the necessity of redeeming love to reveal itself.

Prediction is as much a part of prophecy as miracles are of the gospel story. With the predictive element torn out, the fragmentary remains of such a mutilated mass would absolutely refuse to comhine lnto anything intelligible, much less impressive. As they are, they form an edifice of thought and faith grand, lmposing, and spacious, with Jesus Christ the "Head of the corner."

The most important prophecies are those concerning the Messiah. The Messianic hope ls indelihly impressed on the Old Testament. The New Testament writings look on the Old Testament as of being full of the Messianic expectation and freely quote it to show how it has been fulfilled in Jesus and the gospel. Each of the four Gospels and the books of Acts, Romans, First Corinthians, Ephesians, Hebrews, and First Peter contaln passages referred to as Messianic prophecies fulfilled in Christ. These New Testament quotations of Messianic prophecies fulfilled in Chirst number in all seventy-four. They are taken from the books of the Old Testament as follows: Genesis, seven; Deuteronomy, two; Psalms, twenty-eight; Isaiah, twenty-one; Jeremiah, one; Hosea, two; Joel, one; Amos, two; Micah, one; Habakkuk, one; Haggai, one; Zecharlah, four, and Malachi, three. These seventy-four passages cover the whole range of revelation and stamp the entire Old Testament with a Messianic import. Jesus himself said: "These (the Old Testament Scriptures) are they which testify of me."

The Messiah was to be "woman-born" and not a theophany (Gen. 3:15), of the stock of Abraham (Gen. 22:18), of the line of Isaac (Jer. 23:5-6), a native of Bethlehem (Micah 5:2), heralded by a Forerunner (Mal. 3:1, Mal. 4:5, Is. 40:3), he was to be a worker of mighty deeds of mercy and healing (Is. 35:5-6), hailed as King (Zech. 9:9), rejected (Is. 53:12), reviled in his death (Ps. 22:7-8), offered gall and vinegar (Ps. 69:21); his garments were to be gambled over (Ps. 22:18); his violent death was foretold (Is. 53:8); he was to be pierced in his side (Zech. 12:10), buried with the rich (Is. 53:9); and he was not to see corruption in the realm of the dead (Ps. 16:10).

It is an intersting and profitable study to note how the Messianic Figure takes shape under the hands of successive prophets. There is a unity, progressiveness, and consistency about this Messianic hope that puts the argument far above the mere question as to whether this or that particular prophecy is Messianic or not.

Also we find in the various prophets and Psalms conceptions of the Messiah that seem inconsistent with one another. The Messianic Figure is at one time the commanding Prince of the Fourfold Name. At another time, a Somber Figure fills a picture of ineffable sadness. The suffering Servant of Isaiah is diverse from the Messianic King. The twenty-second Pslam appears far removed from the one hundred and tenth Psalm.

The character of Jesus presented in the New Testament combines these apparently incompatible Messianic conceptions. They are combined, not in a philosophy, but in a life—a life that has in it hirth, suffering, service, death, and triumph over death. The Christ of the New Testament is just as much a fact of revelation as the Messiah of the Old. Each is a perfect answer to the other. This consistency is complete, binds all the books together in the highest kind of unity, and gives coherence to the whole.

The fragmentary visions of the prophets became the perfect revelation of the Father through the Son. The long line of human priests came to completion and passed away when the perfect Priest made his soul an offering for sin. Israel's kingship passed into her Messianic King. The suffering Servant poured out his soul unto death. The Good Shepherd, smitten and rejected, gathered his scattered sheep lnto one fold. On the eve of his ascension, the risen Lord said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "And this gospel shall be preached among all the nations for a witness unto them. Then cometh the end." "There shall be a new heaven and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

The Bible taken as a whole and allowed to make its own impression will take care of its own claim to be the inspired Word of God. Without the Word of God, there is no clue to human history and no meaning to human life. With the Word of God as a key, history becomes his story.

The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. Christ is the goal of prophecy, and the goal of history is his kingdom. The kingdom has come, but the goal is still ahead. "Then cometh the end, when he shall have deliverd up the kingdom to God, even the Father. . . . that God may be all in all" (1 Corinthians 15:24:28).

FOUR CURIOUS CROPS.

By Willis P. Knight.

There are many very curious crops in this world and I am going to tell you about four which I think are very interestlng.

Let us take a trip to the northern coast of France. Here we shall find that on the week of the highest spring tide the farmers gather one of the most curious crops imaginable. This is a crop of sea weed. In our own country we do not think much of going out at any time and gathering sea weed. To be sure, we do not gather sea weed in very large quantities, but the people of northern France use it as fertilizer, and there is a law which prohibits digging lt out any time except during the week of the highest spring tide, which occurs in March. Just as soon as the law is off, the farmers and their families go out to the reefs and gather the sea weed. The entire week is given to this and it is a very exciting week indeed. At its close, tons of sea weed have been gathered and plled up on the shore to be used as fertilizer later in the spring planting.

Another curious crop is found in Lower California at the place called Salton. If you should happen to go there when this crop was being gathered, you would see great heaps of what looked hay cocks of snow, even though the heat is so great that only the Indians can work in this acreage. But closer examination shows that these heaps are salt which have been plowed up with steam plows and are now drying in preparation for market.

This place is very peculiarly situated and the salt springs send out their waters into the basin. Then by a process of evaporation the water disappears and salt deposits are left scattered over about one thousand acres of land to a depth of a foot or more. This is one of the best salt deposits in the world, and each year brings a new crop just as good as the last.

For our third crop let us go down to Cotuit, Massachusetts, where some of New England's most famous oysters are to be found. Here we will find plots of ground staked out into wide arms, and no man ls allowed by law to encroach upon the domains of his neighbor. The oysters are first put in in the form of "seed;" these are the smallest, about the size of a ten-cent piece. As much care has to be taken of them as with the most fancy garden truck, and each year sees an increase in size. Finally after four or five years the oysters are full grown and ready to be raked up, put in the shallow pans and kept near the house untll the market calls for them.

Dld you ever hear of a gold fish farm? Out in Indiana there are two such farms, and the "crop" brings in a good return. Here, too, the best possible attention has to be given to gold fish, for they can be handled but very little. There are many pools, each having a graded size of fish, and fresh water flows continuously. The banks of these pools are raised so as to keep out the wind, inasmuch as rough water stirred up by a heavy breeze will do great damage to the crop. The young gold fish do not look any different from the ordinary minnows or darters which one finds in the country brooks. As they grow older, they grow darker, becoming almost black, after which the beautiful colors of the adult fish begin to show themselves, and the fins and tails develop. The "crop" is gathered at certain seasons, the oldest fish being taken and sent to market in special tanks. Even with the greatest care many of the fish die en route, just as in all other farm crops a certain proportion is reckoned as sure to go bad. —Texas Christlan Advocate.

POTTER.

I found a piece of plastic clay
And idly fashioned it one day;
And as my fingers pressed it still,
It moved and yielded to my will.

I came again when days had passed;
The piece of clay was hard at last,
The form I gave it still it bore,
But I could change it nevermore.

I took a piece of living clay,
And gently formed lt day by day,
And molded, with my power of art,
A young child's soft and yielding heart.

I came again when years had gone;
It was a man I looked upon.
He still that early impress bore,
And I could change him nevermore.

BUSY AS A BEAVER.

Oh, a busy lad is the beaver bold
As he chews at the mountain ash.
He works around and around its base
Till down it comes with a crash.

He says to the saucy mountain stream:
"I think I'll make me a lake,
I'll pile the limbs in a big brush-heap
And use my claws as a rake.

"My feet are webbed and my teeth are sharp,
And a useful thing is my tail,
It's now a rudder and now a stool
And now turned into a flail.

"The baby beavers will find my pond
And race and wrestle with glee
Or sun themselves on the fallen log,
Or sip mountain water for tea.

"So I bring the limbs of the cottonwood
And the twigs of the aspen, too,
And take a bit of the slippery elm
To make me some slippery stew."
—George F. Paul, in Our Dumb Animals.

PLAYING DETECTIVE.

"We need just one more dollar," announced Harry, as he and his sister Edna sat perched upon a big limb of the greening tree, where they had climbed to peep into an oriole's nest.

"Oh, dear!" sighed Edna, "I wish fountain pens didn't cost so much. We've been working and saving for weeks. I haven't spent a penny for candy for a long time."

"There's a whole month before mother's birthday," repiled Harry, "and I know she wants a fountain pen; she'd like it better than anything we could give her."

It was growing dusky and the mother oriole was hurrying to feed her hungry babies before dark.

"Mrs. Oriole works hard all the time, and she doesn't earn any pennies," said Edna. "She loves her cunning babies and likes to feed them."

"Birds work hard building their nests, too," added Harry. "Say, there are lots of blueberries! Why can't we sell enough blueberries to earn that last dollar?"

"Mother needs lots of berries. I like blueberry pie and cake and steamed pudding. It doesn't seem fair to make mother pay for our berries, when we eat all the nice things she cooks. She will want a lot to can up for next winter. I think we ought to earn our money some other way," objected Edna.

"We have run errands, and pulled weeds, and sold all the iron-holders that grandma made for us. I don't know any more jobs that we can get," said Harry. "Oh, look!" he cried a minute later, "Grandpa's cows are over in Mr. Dean's garden again. He'll be real mad. Run and tell grandpa; I'll get Laddie and try to chase them home."

Harry and grandpa, aided by Laddie, who barked excitedly as he darted about, worked for some time before the seven runaway cows were safe in their pasture. They loved fresh vegetables and were not easily driven away from such a treat.

"I'd like to know who lets my cows out of the pasture," scolded Grandpa Morse. "This is the third time that they have tramped through that garden. It cost me a pretty sum last time. I didn't blame John Dean for being angry. I've put in extra posts; the wires were sagging, and I thought maybe the cows pushed them up and crept under. Then I stretched a stout wire all along the top and supposed I had made everything snug and tight.

"Just look at this gateway! I left hooked ends on the wires at this post, so I could open up a way to drive to the wood lot and cornfields. Somebody has unhooked the wires and let out all the cows. I don't know what John Dean will say, or what I'm going to do. I'd give a dollar to know who's doing the mischief!"

"Really and truly—a whole dollar, grandpa?" asked Edna.

"A whole dollar—'twould be worth it."

"Harry and I will play detectives and catch the villain," offered Ednat eagerly. "We need a dollar."

"It's a bargain," agreed grandpa. "Whoever did it was mighty bold; right in daylight!"

"This gateway is near the blueberry patch; we can pick berries and watch for the fellow at the same time," planned Harry.

"We must hide behind the bushes and keep real still," planned thoughtful Edna. "Nobody would let the cows out of the pasture if they saw us watching."

Every morning the busy little berry pickers went to the pasture. They picked quarts and quarts of berries while the cows chewed their cuds peacefully on the other side of the fence, or waded in the shallow brook.

Every night, Grandpa Morse teased the disappointed little detectives.

"Must be you talk too loud," he laughed. "I'm afraid you won't earn that reward, if you watch all summer."

"It's a mystery," sighed Edna.

"It surely is, dear," smiled grandma.

When the berries were gone, they made a playhouse in the pine grove, which was also in sight of the gateway. Edna took her dolls to the rustic playhouse and Harry had a new book which his aunt had sent from New York.

While Harry read his book Edna watched the gateway; then Harry took his turn, while Edna made dresses for her dolls.

At last their patience was rewarded.

"Look at that, Edna!" cried Harry excitedly.

"I was just going to tell you," she laughed. "We'll get that dollar. Grandpa is in the cornfield; I'm going to get him, so he can see for himself."

Grandpa hurried to the pine grove with Edna. He arrived just in time to see the old black-and-white Daisy, the biggest cow in his herd, shove her horns under the lowest wire, unhook it, and lead the other cows in triumph through the opened gateway.

"Daisy was the villain. Doesn't she act proud? She unhooked the other two wires just the same way, grandpa!" cried Harry. "She is the cow that's always waiting for you at the gate."

"Grandpa pets Daisy; she must have seen him unhook the wires. Isn't she clever? She can use her horns, if she hasn't any hands," laughed Edna.

"It's rather hard to own such a smart cow. I brought her up from a bossy—maybe I educated her too much. Guess I'll have to use a padlock and key. I must say you little folks had plenty of stick-to-it-ivness. Here is your dollar. You have earned it, all right."

"Oh, thank you, grandpa! It is mother's birthday next week. Now we can send to Boston by father to-morrow and get a nice fountain pen for her," planned Edna.

"It is great fun playing detective," said Harry. "We'll take another job any time grandpa."

"All right. The rest of John Dean's garden will be safe, anyway. I can fix those wires so that old Daisy's horns won't unfasten that gateway again this summer," chuckled grandpa as he started back to the cornfield.—Nellie M. Leonard, in Zion's Herald.

THE POND OF THE LILIES.

By Emma F. Bush.

The Water Fairy was very busy down in the Lily Pond. It was spring, and there were so many, many things to attend to. All the little grubs that lived in the bottom of the pond had to be taught to make their new summer dresses, all the green things had to be started growing to make things fresh and fair; and every one knows it is ever so much harder to make others do things than to attend to them yourself. Yes, the Water Fairy was very busy indeed.

There was one lazy lily bud that while all her sisters were busy spinning and weaving their dresses of white and gold just shut her green leaves closer and closer, and grumbled: "I just can't do it. The idea of asking me to make anything out of this old slimy black mud! I can't, and I just shan't try."

The Water Fairy bent over her, and sang softly over and over, until the lily bud was a bit ashamed of herself. Still it was hard work to spin, and ever so much more pleasant to lie still and dream, so she began to make excuses.

"Little bud, little bud, spin your gold,"

"I can't; really can't. The water is cold, and the mud is so black. Who ever heard of anything coming out of black, black mud, and you tell me to make gold. I can't. I don't know how."

But the Water Fairy was very patient indeed and still sang softly,

"Little bud, little bud, spin your gold,"

until the lily bud opened her heart just a little bit, and thought after all she would try.

Still the Water Fairy sang,

"Little bud, little bud, spin your gold,"

and then she said gently, "My dear little bud, I love you and I only want you to do your best. I cannot help you until you begin to help yourself. Every one wants to help you. Listen."

Just then a little breeze went by on the surface of the water, and the ripples it made sang over and over,

"Little bud, little bud, spin your gold."

Then the lily bud really tried, and began to spin and weave, and although she could not see what was going on under her tight green mantle she felt happier than she had felt before.

Still she grumbled a little, "Who can see me if I do spin white and weave gold, beneath this tight green mantle that hides me from even the pickerel who swim by, and there is no one but fish and grubs here anyway."

Then the Water Fairy laughed and sang,

"Beneath the waves it is dark, cold,
You think there is nothing but mud and mold,
But little bud, little bud, spin your gold."

One morning just at sunrise the lily bud found herself with her head above the surface of the water. The sunlight crept softly along the water and touched her lips, and the little breeze danced along on the surface of the water and caressed her. Then the tight green mantle fell away, and there was a beautiful white lily with a golden heart.

Oh, how happy she was then, and how glad that she had done as the Water Fairy wished! She looked around her and she saw the whole surface of the water was covered with beautiful flowers like herself. They rocked gently on the surface of the water, and sang softly in the sunshine, and the lily bud listened to their song,

"From out the dark, and mud mold,
We wove and spun our white and gold."

But the little lily bud remembered how she had grumbled and grumbled and the sorrow and trouble she had caused the Water Fairy, so she did not join in their song, but gently touching the surface of the water, she sang a song for the buds still below,

"Little buds, little buds, spin your gold,
Soon you will rise from the mud and mold,
And into flower shall surely unfold."

DIRECTIONS:

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. and Mrs. J. Tillery Lewis, Water Valley, Miss., have recently enjoyed visits from their children.

Brother M. H. Honeycutt, of Rayville, La., writes: "The Advocate is a very welcome visitor to our home."

It is the custom of the Wesleyan Methodists to pay the moving expenses of their pastors. Their Conference year begins on Sept. 1.

Miss Elizabeth Hughes, of Daleville, Miss., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, says: "I simply cannot do without the Advocate."

Rev. A. S. Oliver and family, of Decatur, Miss., are enjoying an automobile trip to Lake Junaluska and other places in that beautiful section of the world.

Rev. J. P. Bonnecarrere requests us to state that he has moved from Gonzales, La., to Donaldsonville, La., his address there being Railroad Avenue and Opelousas Street. All goes well on his pastoral charge.

Rev. Porter M. Caraway, pastor of Parker Memorial, this city, left on Monday morning of this week to assist the pastor, Rev. E. C. Dufresne, in a meeting at Gueydan, La. This will be Brother Caraway's "vacation."

The editor of the Advocate has information of a fine opening in a good town in Louisiana for a well qualified Methodist physician. He will be glad to put any one interested in touch with his source of information.

Rev. J. M. Alford, our pastor at Vivian, La., has recently assisted Rev. R. O. Wier in a ten days' meeting at Emory, Tex. The work at Vivian is in fine shape—everything in full to date, and the congregations large all the time.

The Advocate notes with sorrow the death of Mr. Arthur Davidson, one of the faithful members of the Big Brothers' Bible class, Greenville, Miss., recently. We extend sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends.

We call the attention of correspondents of the Woman's Missionary Society to the fact that Mrs. Janie Drake Cooper, Church Hill, Miss., is now the editor of the Woman's Missionary Society page in the Advocate, and all communications for that page should be sent direct to her.

Mrs. Sallie Phillips, of Pineville, La., in renewing her subscription to the Advocate, says: "I have been taking the Advocate twenty-six or twenty-seven years, and it grows better all the time." We appreciate her kind words.

The Sunday school of the recently organized Second Methodist Church, Gulfport, Miss., had its picnic at the Naval Reserve Park on Friday of last week. Apart from the near-tragedy by drowning of one of the teachers, who was rescued by prompt assistance, the day was a delightful one in every way.

The Seashore Camp Meeting began on Friday night of last week, with a good congregation; and the attendance has been good since. Rev. Luther Bridgers is meeting all expectations as to the preaching. Signor Mario Capelli, the famous Italian tenor, was announced to be present this week.

Rev. A. M. Serex, pastor of Second Church, New Orleans, assisted Rev. L. R. Nease, Jr., in a meeting at Barham, La., July 9-20. The services had gracious results. Barham has been a mill town, but the mills are moving away and it is probable that the church organization there cannot be maintained after this year.

Dr. B. F. Jones, financial secretary of Whitworth College, writes: "The last session of Whitworth College was perhaps one of the best and most prosperous sessions in the history of the college. The prospects for the approaching session are most pleasing and encouraging. We are confidently expecting great things for the college under the present administration."

We thank that distinguished Sunday school leader, Mr. John R. Pepper, of Memphis, for a copy of his booklet, "Thirty Years at the Superintendent's Desk." Though not a recent publication, it is still one of the best books available for Sunday school superintendents who would like to make a success of their work. It fully meets the often misused descriptive term, "multum in parvo."

Rev. L. M. Sharp, our pastor at Georgetown, Miss., writes: "Everything goes well with us on the Georgetown work. We had a Cokesbury Training School here from July 15 to 20, conducted by Mr. E. R. Whitten, one of Millsaps College's graduates, which helped our Sunday school at Georgetown and Providence very much. Then followed the Hanes meeting, of which a report is enclosed."

Rev. Elmer C. Gunn, presiding elder of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, authorizes the Advocate to state that Rev. John Rasmussen, of Delhi, La., has been appointed pastor at Columbia, La., to succeed the late Rev. S. D. Howard, and that Rev. T. W. Stodghill, local preacher, has been appointed to serve at Delhi until the meeting of the Annual Conference. These appointments have been approved by Bishop W. A. Candler.

Rev. C. A. Northington writes, under date of Aug. 2: "On July 8 we closed what is considered the most effective revival meeting that has been held in Weir Methodist church in many years. The preaching was done by Rev. John W. Robertson, one of our evangelists, of Steele, Mo. Brother Robertson delivered a series of sermons to my church that all who heard him consider to be the best, clearest, and most effective ever preached in our church at Weir."

The following is taken from the Greenville (Miss.) Democrat of July 31: "Rev. J. E. Cunningham was quite painfully (though we hope not seriously) injured in a fall yesterday afternoon at Glen Allan. In an attempt to cross the dam at the lower end of the lake he slipped and fell some six feet on the cement, bruising himself considerably. Dr. Farr dressed his wounds. He was able to drive his car home." Brother Cunningham has the sympathy of many friends in his sufferings.

Miss Lois Cooper, daughter of the late Dr. I. W. Cooper of the Mississippi Conference, will leave this month for Kobe, Japan, where she goes under appointment by the Woman's Council as a teacher. Miss Cooper spent three years as teacher and principal of the McTyeire School in China. Returning home for further preparation, she received her Master's degree from Columbia University last year. She has recently visited friends in Brookhaven, Miss., where the Missionary Society tendered her a reception.

The General Education Board of New York has offered to Morehouse College, Atlanta, the sum of $300,000 toward an endowment fund, conditioned upon the raising of an equal amount by the institution within the next three years. Morehouse is one of the oldest Negro colleges in America, and has made a notable record in training the youth of the race in character and leadership, numbering to-day among its alumni ten college presidents and many outstanding preachers, teachers, social workers, and professional and business men.

Rev. W. T. Griffin, Summit, Miss., writes that he has recently held meetings at Hickory, with Rev. A. S. Oliver, and at Sebastapol, with Rev. T. E. Cooper, and that he is now in a meeting at Quitman, with Rev. J. A. Moore. Attendance has been excellent in all the meetings, and a deep spiritual interest has been manifest. Brother Griffin and family will make a motor trip to Florida this month, visiting their children. They will be back by Sept. 1. Communications addressed to Brother Griffin at Summit will be forwarded to him.

A VISIT TO THE WORLD'S TENTH SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

By Rev. T. J. O'Neil.

After a motor trip of about two thousand miles in company with my wife, youngest daughter, and youngest son, visiting friends and relatives in the Mississippi Delta, Louisiana, and Texas, I bought a tourist ticket at Shreveport, La., July 4, and headed toward Los Angeles, Calif., the seat of the Tenth World's Sunday School Convention, via the Southern Pacific Railroad. My first stop-over was at San Antonio, where I spent twenty-four hours very pleasantly, visiting the Alamo, the scene of some of the greatest heroism ever displayed by man; some of the Franciscan missions; Brackenridge Park; the Sunken Japanese Gardens, which appeal powerfully to the aesthetic nature; the civic and commercial centers; Buck Horn, Curio Shop, and other places of interest. From thence, I wended my way across the great divide, where the mercury registered 126 in the shade, and the wind that swept in through the windows of the coach felt as if it were fresh from the frontiers of Dante's Inferno.

My next stop-over was at El Paso, Tex., where I spent another interesting day, visiting the custom house, some of the old missions and civic centers, and crossing over into Mexico for a brief visit to our southern neighbors. The primitive manner in which the Mexicans live in their unventilated, poorly lighted, adobe huts is almost unthinkable to a visitor from the States, and is conclusive evidence of the wisdom of studiously steering clear of Roman rule.

Bidding adieu to El Paso, I crossed the deserts of New Mexico and Arizona, where the giant cacti look like silent sentries, keeping watch over this gateway to the great fruit regions of the West, and spent a very pleasant night at Phoenix in the fertile Salt River Valley. From thence, I had an all-daylight run to Los Angeles, through some of the most beautiful farms and orchards I have ever seen, which brought a very refreshing feeling to the traveler after crossing the hot desert sands.

At Los Angeles I was entertained in the Auto Inn, just four blocks from the Shrine Auditorium, where the principal sessions of the convention were held. The nights were so cool, I slept under a blanket each night while at Los Angeles. How different from the nights on the plains!

The Sunday School Convention was so great as to beggar description. More than 8,000 delegates registered, about fifty different countries were represented. Association with that great company of Christian workers was inspiring. The singing of the hymns of Zion, led by a choir of 1,300 trained singers, supported by a Knabe piano and an immense pipe organ, was thrilling. Some of the addresses were superb, but the greatest element was the unanimity of spirit. One felt like singing with zest:

"Blest be the ties that bind
Our hearts in Christian love."

After choosing Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, as the seat of the eleventh convention, which is to be held in 1932, the convention closed with the evening session of July 18.

Bidding adieu, with reluctance, to Los Angeles, where I had enjoyed the convention immensely, and the hospitality of my good friend, Mr. J. W. Dean, whom I used to know at Moss Point, Miss.; Mr. P. J. Youngdahl, who once lived here at Poplarville; Mr. R. C. Welsh, whose mother lives here; Senator James Donovan and his good wife, who is President of the Guild of the Methodist Hospital in Los Angeles; Mr. Charles Graham, a Noble of the first class, and several others, all of whom brought me under lasting obligation to them by the many kindnesses shown, I rode the daylight limited train No. 20 over the Southern Pacific Coast Line to San Francisco.

One who has not traveled over this scenic route can hardly fancy the magnificent panorama of mountain scenery, fertile valleys laden with fruits and vegetables and farm products, shore lines, old missions established by Spanish Jesuits in the long ago, cliff dwellings, etc., that greet the gaze of the visitor as he meanders along this road that consists for miles and miles of a series of loops of varying length and declination, the most noted of which is Horseshoe Curve, near San Luis Obispo, on the southern slope of St. Lucia Mountain.

I spent a very pleasant day sight-seeing in San Francisco, visiting Twin Peaks, from the summit of which one gets almost an airplane view of the city; Civic Center, where are to be found some of the most substantial and attractive municipal buildings known to the great West; Presidio, the great military station; Cliff House, Seal Rock, the Golden Gate, and Golden Gate Park, one of the largest and most beautiful parks on the Western Continent, with its great aviaries, inhabited by almost every known bird, its great aquarium in which is found practically every variety of fish known to man, its imposing monuments, Japanese Gardens, etc., and last but by no means least, the great ferry boat house on San Francisco Bay. This great clearing house, whence all ships going out upon the Pacific Ocean must start, and at which point all travelers going overland to the Northwest, North, or East must entrain, must be seen to be appreciated. Its ponderous proportions, its magnificent appearance, its many apartments, and the immense volume of business done there cannot be described by tongue or pen.

Leaving this splendid gateway to the Orient, which had painted pictures on the walls of my memory that the hand of time or forces of varying experiences cannot efface, I turned my face homeward, touring the fertile Sacramento Valley, crossing the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and arid Plains of Nevada, the Great Salt Lake, so large that one feels like he is going to sea by train, and finally reached Salt Lake City, where I spent a day filled with the thrill and shock of the unexpected and the very unusual. The streets of this famous city are one hundred and thirty feet wide, all well paved, and bordered with excellent sidewalks. Almost all the buildings consist of brick, red stone, or concrete, and are very substantial and attractive appearance. The State House stands upon a high prominence near Signal Mountain. It cost almost $3,000,000, and was completed without one penny of debt on it. The main lobbies and senate chamber are ceiled with onyx stone. The Governor's reception room in color scheme is one of the most harmoniously finished rooms to be found in any public place, and is one of the most exquisitely furnished rooms ever constructed. The furniture in this room alone cost $65,000. The Municipal Library, the Utah State University, the great Hotel Utah, the L. D. S. College buildings, are all structures that will easily engage many hours of the visitor's time; but greatest of all are the Mormon Temple and Tabernacle, both great structures on Temple Square. None except Mormons are admitted into the Temple, which is a very imposing structure begun in 1853 and finished in 1893; but any one is admitted into the Tabernacle, which is a large, dome-roofed structure that seats 10,000 persons, and in which is one of the largest pipe organs in the world. Each day at noon a free organ recital is given here. I had the pleasure of hearing one of these recitals.

NASHVILLE TENNESSEE

Protection Against Old Age

Leaving Salt Lake City, I climbed the slopes of the Rocky Mountains till I found myself at the giddy height of 11,000 feet above sea level at Tennessee Pass, whence we plunged through Royal Gorge on the Arkansas River, where the Pillars of Hercules stand up to the dizzy height of 3,750 feet on either side, and wended our way eastward till we reached Colorado Springs, where I spent a day visiting the Garden of the Gods, Seven Falls, Manitou with its famous sulphur springs, and the Cave of the Winds, which is one of the great wonders of the world, with its eighteen rooms, long corridors, and fantastic formations of stalactite and stalagmite, which furnish interesting themes for the study of the most exacting geologist.

From this great pleasure resort I went to Denver, where I spent a few hours very pleasantly sight-seeing. Then I sped along across the great plains of Kansas, where great wheat fields spread out almost to the sky line on each side of the train, till I reached Kansas City, one of our great railroad centers, and the seat of some of our great packing plants. After a short stop-over here, I found myself speeding along at forty miles an hour on the Kansas City Southern's Flying Crow, to Shreveport, the place whence I started westward just four weeks previous, and was soon safe at home again.

This tour carried me over almost 8,000 miles, across thirteen different States, to the greatest Sunday School Convention the world has ever know, across arid plains that rival the Sahara Desert, through some of the most fertile lands to be found anywhere, into some of the most beautiful and growing cities of the Western Continent, and introduced me to thousands of people. I enjoyed it immensely and feel that I am amply repaid for every hour of time and every dollar I invested in it; but, to be candid, I am not ready to transfer to-day nor to-morrow.

NEW CHURCH ORGANIZED.

A Methodist church was organized at Scuna Valley School House, Aug. 2, 1928. Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder of the Grenada District; Rev. E. G. Mohler, the pastor of the Coffeeville charge, and about ten other people were present when the church was organized. We have sixteen charter members of this church.

Scuna Valley is about five miles east of Coffeeville. They have a splendid consolidated school in this community. It is a good farming section and a railroad runs through the community. At one of our services in a meeting recently held in this community we had present about 125 people under twenty-five years of age.

We hope to build a new church at Scuna Valley in the near future.

MEETING AT GEORGETOWN, MISS.

We have just closed one of the greatest revivals in the history of Georgetown. Rev. James O. Hanes, of Birmingham, Ala., general evangelist, and Mr. H. M. Scott, of Milan, Tenn., evangelistic singer, were with us.

The entire town was mightily moved upon. A spirit of prayer and reconsecration seized the people in a compelling grip. Church members of all denominations threw themselves into the meeting with a deep interest and a spirit of service. The attendance was good from the beginning in spite of the rains that fell from the first of the meeting.

The inspiration of the meeting spread beyond Geogretown. People came from the country around to hear the great sermons and feel the swell of the high spiritual tide. Brother Hanes preaches the old-time gospel, and God honors it, and sends the Holy Ghost from heaven to revive, convict, and regenerate souls. Mr. Scott does the most constructive work with the young folk of any man I know. Besides, he is a great solo singer and leader in song, also fine with the trombone.

The meeting closed Tuesday night, July 31. The evangelist left immediately for a short stay at home, thence to Cleveland, Ala., for a county-wide campaign; then to Ferriday, La., and later to Talladega, Ala. He is kept very busy. He says: "Much prayer, much power; little prayer, little power; no prayer, no power."

A twenty-minute prayer service is held each morning just before the classes begin at the Songdo Higher Common School, Songdo, Korea. All the 329 students are required to attend this chapel service, and Bible study is given in each class twice a week.

MARLOW PHILLIP BENNETT, son of T. M. Bennett and Fannie Marlow, of Pulaski church, on the Trenton charge, passed to his heavenly reward on June 1, 1928. Our community was shrouded in gloom; hearts were filled with sadness, because of having to give up such a noble friend and brother. While his departure is a great loss to us we feel that it is heaven's gain, as his assurance to his friends and family was that he was willing that God's will and not ours be done. Marlow was born in Scott County, near Morton, Miss., where he spent his boyhood days, attending school, preparing himself for life work. In early manhood Marlow left his father's home and located at Holly Bluff, Miss. During his stay there he made many warm friends. However, this was true wherever he went. He was kind and considerate of those about him, especially his mother. He never drifted from the teaching of his home. There he was taught to be loyal to his church, and throughout his life he was right in the midst of all church services and activities. He joined the Methodist church early in life, and later, under the preaching of Brother J. V. Bennett, he reconsecrated his life to God, and lived a Christian life ever after. He leaves a father and mother, five sisters, one brother, as well as a host of relatives and friends. The funeral was held at his home, in the presence of a large host of relatives and friends. The services were conducted by his pastor, assisted by Brother W. L. Mulous, pastor of the Baptist church. The family has the deepest sympathy of pastor and the entire community.

R. M. GIBSON, P. C.

JOHN WESLEY TOLES was born near Rome, Ga., Dec. 29, 1847, and died at his home, near Dekalb, Miss., May 24, 1928. In early manhood he settled in Lauderdale County, Miss., later moving to Kemper County, where he spent a useful life. Two years of his life were served in the Civil War. Like all men of his type, he was often misunderstood and his motive misconstrued. Nevertheless, he was a good man, his outstanding qualities consisting of those noble, high principles of honesty, veracity, integrity, generosity; and withal he had an optimistic, forward-looking, and progressive nature. The writer had the privilege of knowing him for over thirty years, first as his pastor, then in a more intimate relationship as his son-in-law, and I have never known a truer man in all relations of life. He was, at all times, true to his friends, his family, his church, his country, his God. For a number of years he rendered faithful service in the church as steward, and as Sunday school superintendent. He was the preacher's true friend, and his home was always open day or night to the ministers of all denominations. He is survived by his widow, two sons and two daughters, one sister, and other relations who mourn his going, but cherish in their memory his helpful life. He was laid to rest at Bethel church, in Kemper County, the service in charge of his pastor, Rev. B. M. Ware, assisted by Rev. H. E. Raley, and in compliance with his expressed desire, Rev. Eugene Stephens, of the Baptist church, delivered a beautiful talk on his life and character. A truly good man, one of God's noblemen, has gone to his reward. We fully expect to see him again when the mists have rolled away.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved friend and co-worker, MRS. B. W. WHITE; and,

Whereas, Mrs. White has been an active and loyal member of the Woman's Missionary Society and has served as the efficient leader of our Junior department; and,

Whereas, she has been faithful and devoted to her church and has given valuable service to the Sunday school as superintendent of the primary department;

Therefore, be it resolved by the members of the Missionary Society and of the Sunday school of the Hazlehurst church:

That we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

That we have suffered a great loss in the passing of our beloved member and appreciated officer, who by her Christial character has left us a noble example.

That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family, and pray that God whom she loved and served comfort and sustain them.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, to the Hazlehurst Courier, and be recorded in the minutes of the Missionary Society.

Signed: Mrs. J. S. Wise, Mrs. Benj. King, Miss Patsy Lewis, Committee.

RESOLUTIONS

Adopted by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Grayson, La.

Whereas, God has seen fit to take from us our beloved pastor, REV. S. D. HOWARD, leaving us in the sad state of a flock without a shepherd; but, whereas, we are taught in his Holy Word that he doeth all things well;

Therefore, be it resolved, That we bow in humble submission to this dispensation of his providence and pray that we may soon be permitted to welcome a successor, and that he may be filled with the Holy Spirit and go in and out before us dispensing the pure gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ as did Brother Howard.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy is extended to Sister Howard and children, and we would hereby offer the consoling thought that though we sorrow in the flesh for the loss of husband, father and pastor, we can rejoice in spirit in the knowledge and belief that his earthly trials, troubles and disappointments are all ended and he is now safe in the mansion prepared for him in 'that beautiful city of God."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and one to the Caldwell Watchman for publication; a copy to the bereaved family, and that they be spread upon the record of the proceedings of this society.

A FEW WORDS FROM THE EDITOR.

In assuming the duties of this office, Mrs. Cooper desires to thank those who have given her this opportunity for service. She bespeaks the continuance of that hearty co-operation of which Mrs. Brown made grateful mention in her farewell editorial. With such help from the numerous societies which should have representation on this page, there is no reason why the Woman's Page should not grow in interest from week to week.

For several weeks to come it will be necessary to condense and slice numerous reports which have accumulated. In this connection it seems well to call attention to a pargraph from the report Mrs. Brown sent to the Annual Conference of the Mississippi Missionary Society last April. She wrote:

"My greatest trouble has been in cutting down reports, for they came in so fine that it hurts to leave out any part, but Dr. Carley asks that we condense. He would prefer instead of the whole program of a meeting in detail, just the high points, as I have cut a song here and a roll call there, to bring them within my instructions from him."

Certainly reports should have a large share of this page, for they are a record of the work being done and are valuable both from historical and inspirational staudpoints; but may we not look forward to the time when the reports will be so condensed and yet so comprehensive that we may have space on this page for one column of round table discussion? Would such a forum add to your interest, or what other suggestion have you for this page?

May the editor test your spirit of co-operation by asking that every reader of this page will send an answer of not more than fifty words to the question: Should there be any change in the general character of this page? Eight of these answers will be selected for publication.

NURSES know, and doctors have declared there's nothing quite like Bayer Aspirin for all sorts of aches and pains, but be sure it is genuine Bayer; that name must be on the package, and on every tablet. Bayer is genuine, and the word genuine—in red—is on every box. You can't go wrong if you will just look at the box:

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

ANOTHER JUBILEE AUXILIARY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Malvina church met for its business and social meeting on June 30. Mrs. L. E. Tyer was hostess to the society, serving a delicious course during the social hour. Good reports from superintendents of the departments were given, and plans for the work of next quarter were discussed.

The Malvina society is very small, having only four members. It has been organized only one quarter, and we were not able to make as full report as we should have liked; but we hope by next quarter to have more members and better reports.

ZONE MEETING AT PONCHATOULA, LA.

The women of the Methodist church in zone No. 6, Baton Rouge District, held the second quarterly meeting on Wednesday afternoon, June 27, at Ponchatoula, with the leader, Mrs. C. B. Johnson, presiding. "The Year of Jubilee is Come" was sung. Mrs. Bailey of Springfield, followed with Scripture lesson, the theme being, "Faith and Sacrifice." Mrs. Johnson gave Jubilee sketches.

Mrs. A J. Coburn next presented "The Life of Belle H. Bennett." Brother Coburn followed with appropriate remarks, telling especially of her zeal in prohibition work.

The audience sang "A Jubilee Song," while the pioneer women stood in front.

Mr. T. A. Barksdale, accompanied by his sister, Miss Anna Letile, gave a violin solo, which was enjoyed hy all.

Little Miss Pearl Kemp gave a reading entitled, "Carry On," after which Mrs. C. Lipscomb told of the women messengers from "The ends of the earth" attending the Council meeting at Nashville.

Mrs. Reynolds gave a report from the district meeting, which was especially enjoyed by those who did not attend that meeting; she stressed Prayer as the keynote of success in our work.

Mrs. Sechrist treated us to a lovely piano selection, after which Mrs. Robert McGee told us the necessity of studying our Year Book and Minutes.

Mrs. Johnson suggested a Year Book quiz at the zone meeting in September.

Miss Emily Etta Way concluded our program with an appropriate piano selection.

A short business session followed, with minutes, roll call, and reports.

There were forty in attendance.

Hammond extended an invitation for the September meeting, which was accepted, and Mrs. E. S. Merry dismissed us with a short prayer.

The ladies of the Ponchatoula auxiliary served iced tea and sandwiches during the social hour.

MRS. W. R. KEMP, Secretary.

AUXILIARY MEETS AT MANGHAM, LA.

The Missionary Society met at the W. O. W. Hall, which they have been using for the past few years for church, on July 9 for their regular monthly study meeting. The president and vice president both being absent, Mrs. F. D. Childress, Superintendent of Local Work, also of program committee, presided. After the devotional, the study was given in different parts by almost every member present. The lesson from our mission study book, "Our Templed Hills," showed the necessity for trained leaders in rural communities, and that to be a successful leader one must not only be trained, hut be interested. After the lesson, matters of interest were discussed.

Our past quarter's report, as shown by our treasurer, Mrs. E. L. Williams, proves we are doing some splendid work, having sent our Conference treasurer in the sacond quarter a total of $26; sent to Houma, $3.50 cash, and spent on local work $66.92.

Our children's department, including junior and primaries, is doing spiendid work under the leadership of Mrs. C. E. McConneli and Mrs. L. L. McConneli. Our Superintendent of Social Service, Mrs. M. W. Wroten, sent the telegram to the Democratic convention stating we would not support any candidate who did not heartily approve the Eighteenth Amendment.

Each officer is doing her part to make it possible for Mangham auxiliary to be put on the Honor Roll in this our Jubilee year. Both our adult and children's department have almost their entire pledge ready, also the Epworth League.

The Masons of Louisiana are to lay the corner stone of our new church on the fourth Sunday of this month.

The zone meeting for the past quarter met with us, with Mrs. Frank Hatch, new District Secretary, as the chief speaker, and a pageant was put on by Mangham charge—Mangham, Buckner, and Little Creek. Many of our friends from other denominations met with us at this time and helped to make it a success.

MRS. J. H. PRESTON,
Superintendent of Publicity.

What of My Boy's Future?

Many parents are asking this question. Their boy comes first and his training for the future is of vital concern. Prof. Robt. K. Morgan knows and loves boys. For thirty-five years he has devoted his life to them. It has been a life of dedication to the young manhood of America. He understands and helps them. All his former pupils can attest to this.

He wishes to train your boy, prepare him for college and life. He recognizes in every boy possibilities which if developed will make him a leader. He loves to develop that trait in boys. His faculty is a strong one. The price is very moderate and the climate is ideal. A postal addressed to Mr. L. I. Mills, Secretary, Morgan School, Petersburg, Tenn., will bring catalogue and full information.

WOMEN'S PAINS

They Were Relieved by Cardui Which This Georgia Lady Took on Her Mother's Advice.

Columbus, Ga.—"I don't see why women will drag around, in a half-hearted way, never feeling well, barely able to drag, when Cardui might help put them on their feet, as it did me," says Mrs. Geo. S. Hunter, of this city.

"I suffered with dreadful pains in my sides. I had to go to bed and stay sometimes two weeks at a time.

"I could not work, and just dragged around the house.

"I got very thin. I went from a hundred and twenty-six pounds down to less than a hundred.

"My mother had long been a user of Cardui, and she knew what a good medicine it was for this trouble. So she told me to get some and take it.

"I sent to the store for Cardui, and before I had taken the first bottle I began to improve. My side hurt less, and I began to mend in health. I took the second bottle, and felt much better. I followed this by two more bottles.

"Cardui acted as a fine tonic. I do not feel like the same person. I am well now, and still gaining. My sides do not trouble me at all."

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

What is the difference between Childhood and Youth Week and Children's Week?

There is no difference in purpose and plan. The name has been changed to include consideration of all children, regardless of age.

Who in the local church is responsible for the observance of Childhood and Youth Week?

Any teacher who recognizes the value should feel responsible for bringing it to the attention of the superintendent, in order that necessary plans may be submitted to the Workers' Council in September.

What is the purpose of Childhood and Youth Week?

1. To challenge all adults to make the religious development of boys and girls their chief concern.

2. To develop a consciousness of needed changes in conditions hindering Christian living for boys and girls.

3. To improve conditions, and increase the facilities that will promote their Christian development.

4. To set in motion definite plans for self-improvement, and for more adequate provision and programs for boys and girls everywhere.

Some things we may expect as a result of the observance of Childhood and Youth Week:

1. A quickening sense of responsibility on the part of all adults for the religious education of childhood and youth in the home, church, and community.

2. An evaluation of local provisions and programs in the light of what they ought to be.

3. Increased appreciation, understanding, and sense of interdependence between home and church school.

4. A pledge to active co-operation in bringing about specific changes.

From January to June, 664 Cokesbury credits have been issued to workers in our Conference. We are pressing toward the thousand mark. The taking of one course is a beginning for better work in every department of church work.

A few pastors are planning to have Sunday School Day this month while they are taking a vacation. Many pulpits will be vacant this month, but the Sunday school will keep things going. Suppose the schools were to close for twelve months, what would become of the people? Go into a community where no school is held and you can get an imperfect picture of what would happen.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

On Sunday, July 29, the second session of the Smith County Sunday School Institute was held. Four of the eight Sunday schools were represented, and the interest in the meeting was very good indeed. We were more or less pressed for time, as the afternoon groups were slow in forming, and many of the workers failed to return after dinner. I enjoyed the meeting very much indeed.

The church must make a greater effort in Smith in order to discharge our responsibility. We have nineteen Methodist churches in Smith County, and eight Sunday schools now running. There are eleven other Sunday schools that ought to be going in Smith County at this time. The people are there and the needs of the people are just as great now as they will ever be.

I noticed the report of the Baptist church for Smith County, and as near as I could get it, they had thirty-six Baptist churches and reported twenty Sunday schools. I know of one Presbyterian Sunday school in the county, and two Lutheran schools; if there are others, I am not acquainted with them.

The latest public school census reports 6,464 educable children in the county. These are all white. In the last election there were 4,660 votes cast in Smith County, which gives us 11,120 white people living in the county; counting those who voted are all the adults, and the educable children all the youth of the county.

The church membership of the county as reported in the last available figures is 6,500, approximately a little more than the above number; the Sunday school enrollment reported was 2,125, much less than one-fifth of the above figures.

I am giving this because I think this fact proved to be a challenge to the institute; and I think if the matter were worked up, it would prove that many other counties are like Smith, if not worse. Smith County has largely a white population, and therefore it should challenge our attention.

There are twenty-two consolidated schools in Smith County, ten high schools, and only four one-teacher schools in the county. On that side of the ledger it speaks mighty well. The church must make the effort to mean as much in proportion as the public school.

A Cokesbury class should be taught in each of these Methodist churches. That would be nineteen classes in the county. It is the dream of my life that such a thing will happen—to carry the message of training to the last person responsible for the carrying on of the work.

I also dream of the time when every circuit church will have a week's training as regularly as they look forward to any other event in their church life, and get ready for it and plan for it days and weeks ahead, just as they do for other important matters.

This leads me to say that our young people who are teaching for us this summer have done good work. I have received more nice letters in regard to the work done than ever, and the spirit of these who are doing the work is all that one could hope for. Millsaps College has been of great benefit to us, both in equipping these teachers for us and giving to them an incentive to serve. I trust that the communities where these young people work will give them an opportunity to serve in more or less the same capacity this winter.

Mrs. F. L. Van Alstine, of Jackson, Miss., president of the Adolescent section of the Conference-wide meeting, conducted an Adolescent group meeting for us and did a fine piece of work. The group was well pleased indeed. Mrs. Van Alstine also rendered valuable service on the morning program.

Miss M. M. Jones, assisted by Mr. J. E. Okey, conducted the Elementary group meeting. They had a fine representation from the four school represented, and reported a most valuable meeting.

Miss Doris Alford went with us, and during the morning program she took the children to the parsonage and told a story for them, to their delight. This was a fine service that was greatly appreciated by all.

The large number of visitors were taken to the homes of the people for dinner. How the memory lingers! I think the Jackson contingent did their full share and were sorry that there was no provision for taking a helping along with them.

The Adult and Administration group met in the church auditorium, and there was an interested and helpful discussion.

Mr. O. C. Hull, the moving spirit behind the institute, arrived in time for dinner, and was on hand to help in the closing of the institute. The group decided to perpetuate the institute, and elected officers for the coming year.

Hon. E. M. Lane was the presiding officer, and did his part well. He made a very fine president. His fine spirit pervaded the entire program.

We are always glad of an opportunity to go to Raleigh.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

We have before us report on Training Work from Nashville for the month of June, giving total number of credits by Annual Conferences for that month. The four ranking Conferences as to credits received are as follows: West North Carolina Conference, 764; Central Texas Conference, 572; West Texas Conference, 522; Louisiana Conference, 516. Only one of the above Conferences has a Sunday school membership as small as ours, which is 41,253 pupils. The West Carolina Conference has a membership of 133,000. Considering membership, Louisiana Conference ranks second in securing credits in Training Work during the month of June.

It may be news to some that Louisiana Sunday school pupils give per capita more than any other Conference in our Southern Methodism. The General Board minutes, May 2, 3, 1923, gives Louisiana $2.76 average per capita.

In "missionary giving," the report for July shows that Louisiana gave $904.83, only three other Conferences giving larger amounts.

We hear good reports from the fifth Sunday rally at Oakdale. The next group meeting goes to Oberlin. Miss Maxine Terry, the sub-district chairman, deserves a vote of thanks for putting on this interesting program. She leaves for college this fall; Miss Myra Whitman succeeds her in office. Among the speakers on the program were Rev. C. K. Smith, Cleanth Brooks, Jr., Miss Myra Whitman, and Miss Velma Butchee.

On Tuesday of this week we were in Shreveport, and at night attended at Oil City a session of group quarterly conference. Reports from the pastors were full of interest. We noted the large number of new members as a result of revivals for Vivian and the Shreveport circuit. The pastor of Shreveport circuit also reported a Vacation Bible School at Naborton.

At the close of the quarterly conference session the board of managers for the North Caddo Training School met and elected Dr. Alonzo Early chairman of the board of managers.

Tender, Aching Swollen Feet

In Just Five Minutes Those Sore, Tender, Aching Feet Get Amazing Relief.

You probably feel like a lot of other people that about all you can do is dust some powder in your shoes or give your feet a special foot bath and let it go at that, but don't be foolish. Make up your mind to-day that you are going to give your feet a real chance to get well.

Go to any good druggist to-day and get an original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil.

The very first application will give you relief and a few short treatments will thoroughly convince you that by sticking faithfully to it for a short while your foot troubles will be a thing of the past.

Don't expect a single bottle to do it all at once but one bottle we know will show you beyond all question that you have at least discovered the way to solid foot comfort.

Remember that Moone's Emerald Oil is a clean, powerful, penetrating Antiseptic Oil that does not stain or leave a greasy residue and that it must give complete satisfaction or your money cheerfully refunded.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

and Rev. W. F. Roberts, educational director. The date of this school is Sept. 30-Oct. 5, at Hosston.

On Sunday, July 29, we visited Rochelle Sunday school. The young pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Harris, are in fine favor with the congregation and people of this town, noted for its interest in education and religion. In the afternoon, in company with the pastor and other leaders, we visited Winnfield, where we will hold a Standard Training School in the early fall.

Sunday, July 29, was the writer's birthday, but he had his "Birthday dinner" on Monday and invited his presiding elder, pastor, and Sunday school superintendent to his party and talked Sunday school matters.

Mr. W. W. Williams, superintendent at Elizabeth, writes: "I am enclosing money order for $6 Sunday School Day offering. We are moving along fine. Come to see us when you can."

We hope other superintendents will send in their offering at once, as half of it goes to promote the Training School program in each district. The Training Schools for the early fall open with the Houma school and close with the Bogalusa school.

Prof. W. C. Roaten, Educational Director of the De Ridder-Leesville Training School, is hard at work in his school and writes: "Wish to order books at once, hope to have an early reply."

Mrs. R. M. Stewart, of Amite, chairman of the Enrollment Committee, sends out her first publicity matter concerning the Central Baton Rouge District Training School.

Recently we have had some interesting visitors in our office; among them were three from the Ruston Orphanage, two college graduates and one high school graduate; also Mr. W. S. Terry and daughter, of Hineston.

Last night we attended Workers' Council at First Church. The superintendent, Mr. T. W. Holloman, states that prospects for his Training School are the best yet. He leaves for Lake Pontchartrain in a few days.

Mr. W. A. McKennon, superintendent First Church, Shreveport, is just back from his vacation trip given him by his Sunday school, which included a visit to the World's Sunday School Convention at Los Angeles. This is his nineteenth year as superintendent.

Mr. J. H. Carter, superintendent of Carrollton Avenue Church and District Secretary of the New Orleans District, writes: "I expect to leave Saturday for my vacation at the Camp Grounds at Biloxi for the following two weeks."

Epworth League

GETTING READY FOR THE ASSEMBLY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: At the time of this writing the Assembly is only twenty-four days off! I wonder just how many of you are planning to come and have a share in the "grand, glorious, good time" that always awaits us at the Assembly? Let's begin now to pack away grunts, growls and grumbles, and pack up grins, pep and fun in anticipation of meeting the Assembly crowd next month.

Bring with you your tennis racquet, for you'll surely want to play on those fine courts at S. T. C. If you have any new pep songs or yells, bring them, too, and in case you haven't any, get busy now at composing or collecting some, for we're to have some sure enough yelling and singing, and you will want to be prepared to enter into all the fun.

Let's all think Assembly, talk Assembly, and above all pray Assembly.

MISS LEWIS SOON TO RESUME WORK AT GRACE CHURCH, JACKSON, MISS.

We would like to give our latest report from Miss Lena Belle Lewis, who is out of town for the summer, having been threatened with a nervous breakdown some few months ago.

For the past two years and up until the time she was physically disabled, Miss Lewis was our faithful, efficient, and much loved Epworth League president at Grace Methodist Church, Jackson, Miss.

We are very glad to say that she is now steadily improving, and cheerfully writes us that she is planning to be back with us the first of September.

A most cordial welcome is awaiting her, for we miss her very much.

GRACE EPWORTH LEAGUE.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT RURAL MISSIONARY REPORT.

On Sept. 1, 1927, I began work as Rural Missionary for the Baton Rouge District, and various are the tasks and problems that have confronted me.

My first task was getting acquainted with the district, and my survey is not completed even now. May I take this opportunity to urge the three preachers that have not answered the questionnaires that I sent out to please do so as soon as possible.

My work has been teaching Bible study classes, mission study classes, conducting Vacation Bible Schools, visiting in the homes, organizing missionary auxiliaries, seeking new members, strengthening weak auxiliaries, finding and training leaders, distributing Christian literature, teaching missions at every opportunity, giving talks on missionary and devotional subjects, helping Epworth Leagues, Sunday schools, and other church activities.

We have started a circulating District Library, which we hope will be a real help to the auxiliaries in securing books for study. Any one who has missionary study books or Bible study books, or other good Christian books to contribute to the library may send them to me at Rosedale, La., and they will go into the library. This library will be in Baton Rouge, and a capable librarian will lend the books and keep up with them. If missionary auxiliaries will buy one set of mission and Bible study books, and will send them to the library when they have studied them, and in return get books from other auxiliaries through the library, the advantage will be increased for all.

Three Vacation Bible Schools were conducted this summer: one in Live Oak, with an average attendance of sixteen pupils; one in St. Francisville, with an average attendance of twenty-four; one in Clinton, with an average attendance of fifty-four. One hundred and twenty pupils were taught in these three schools. The first two weeks in September there will be a Bible School in Zachary.

During the year I have written 583 letters, visited 1,326, attended 369 meetings, addresssed 274 meetings, reached 10,860 persons, distributed 1,809 pieces of Christian literature, traveled 7,056 miles, and reached 4,909 homes.

Yours in the Master's service,
ORA HOOPER.

LETTER FROM LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: I am at my home again in Jonesboro. I gave up my trip to Lake Junaluska because of my sister's illness, but will attend the Western Assembly at Mount Sequoyah on the fourteenth. Last Monday Rev. and Mrs. J. B. Grambling, Miss Anna Pharr Turner, of Shreveport, and Miss Rosa Langford, of Monroe, left for Lake Junaluska, to be joined at Chattanooga by Mrs. R. P. Jackson, of New Orleans. Of course our Louisiana party will have a great time as well as a beneficial one. I am disappointed in the small delegation of Leaguers going to Mount Sequoyah this summer. We should have many more attending from our Conference.

Last week I spent three days in Calhoun with Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., instructing his Leaguers, and concluded the program by organizing an Epworth Hi League and an Epworth Junior Society. I found some enthusiastic young people and of course an enthusiastic pastor, who is anxious to promote the work among his young people as well as other departments of his church. With such a fine new church, adequate facilities mean much toward the progress of the Epworth League and its program. After a period of instruction we went into a large Sunday school room which could quickly be converted into a social room by means of folding doors, and enjoyed a happy hour of fellowship. On Wednesday evening we enjoyed a picnic on the church lawn, with more than fifty young people in attendance. Mrs. J. E. Bryan, my hostess, was most cordial to me while in her home.

From Calhoun I went to Homer, where I met with the Homer, Lisbon and other Leagues. The attendance was small because of the inclement weather, but on the last evening we had a most enthusiastic crowd. We closed our little school of instruction with a social hour of games and contests. Mrs. Hugh Taylor and Mrs. J. W. Lee served punch and sandwiches to the young people. I appreciate the untiring efforts of Mrs. Taylor in assisting the Leaguers of Homer.

Mr. W. L. McDuff, District Secretary of Monroe District, is in the Minden District conducting instruction rallies in the rural Leagues. He will join the party to Mount Sequoyah on the fourteenth. Mr. McDuff issued a most interesting bulletin to his Monroe Leaguers, which will be most helpful in promoting the district work.

If your League is accomplishing some interesting projects, let your State officers know about it. We don't like to do all of the letter writing without an occasional answer.

Leaguerly,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Field Secretary.

In 5 Million Homes Tonight

A host of babies will enjoy sound sleep tonight. And their parents will have unbroken rest. Castoria is the cause of this contentment in a multitude of homes.

Good old Castoria! Children cry for it. Mothers swear by it. Not a household where there is an infant should ever be without it. A few drops of Castoria quiet Baby in a perfectly innocent manner. It is natural slumber that follows. Castoria is a purely vegetable product. No opiates. No narcotics. Of any kind.

Now you know why trained nurses give Castoria as often as an infant is ailing, or even restless. And why doctors tell mothers it is the first and only home remedy when Baby has constipation, colic, diarrhea, or other upset. It is made for babies, and safe to give babies, and other things are not.

Fletcher's Castoria is "old-fashioned" if you count its fifty years, but it's an old-fashioned mother, nowadays, who worries along without it. Twenty-five million bottles bought last year! Think of the number of mothers who rely on Castoria! All these mothers can't be wrong! To keep a bottle in the house is a precaution you owe your little one.

Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

TO THE EPWORTH LEAGUERS OF LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Dear Fellow-Leaguers: I am sure that I owe you an apology for waiting so long to thank you for your beautiful and serviceable gift to my wife and myself, at the Epworth League Assembly. It was truly a surprise, and we both can assure you that it was a surprise that was appreciated.

I just wish it could have been possible for every Epworth Leaguer in the State to be present on the afternoon when Miss Langford invited both my wife and me to the platform, as though we were to take part in a pageant, and after making a speech referring to my ten years of League connection, and also our tenth wedding anniversary, the curtain was suddenly opened, and there before our eyes was a most beautiful one-hundred-piece dinner set of imported china, of the latest design. No gift could have been given that would have been of greater service than this, and we can assure the Leaguers of Louisiana that we shall always remember with love and appreciation this magnificent gift to us, on this our tenth anniversary.

If you find yourself coming our way, we will be delighted to have you stop and dine with us, but just don't all come at the same time.

Praying God's richest blessings upon you and your work in local chapters, we beg to remain,

Your League servants in Christ,
REV. AND MRS. J. B. GRAMBLING.

FROM THE AMERICUS CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: The church at Salem Camp Ground, in the Seashore District, has been enjoying for the past week the services of Brother Assaf, the home missionary of the Mississippi Conference.

We had a good revival campaign on all the work. We had six additions to the church and a general reconsecration on the part of the church members. I have baptized fifteen infants during the meeting. The community as a whole was greatly impressed, and expressed its appreciation of the far-reaching effects of the campaign. Brother Assaf did some good preaching. During the day we visited the homes of the people and talked and prayed with them.

GOOD MEETINGS ON THE CENTREVILLE CHARGE.

We have just closed a fine series of services at our Centreville church. More than fifty persons pledged to live the Life. Five professed conversion and four united with the church. I was assisted by Rev. W. Hardy Neal, of Green Forest, Ark., and Prof. M. L. Lifsey, of Macon, Ga., had charge of the singing. These brethren made a good team. Centreville is growing, and will in the near future be made a station. Fine people are here, and they are thoughtful of their pastor's family.

Rev. B. M. Hunt, pastor at Gloster, assisted in the meeting at Stepheuson, and greatly endeared himself to the people. He is a good help. There were five accessions to our church and as many to the Baptist church. The Baptist pastor and his congregation added to the success of the services.

During both of these meetings good words were spoken for the Advocate.

H. MELLARD, P. C.

Mrs. M. J. Wasson, who lives at the old home place, at Shady Grove, four-ten miles north of Kosciusko, Miss., was made happy by a home-coming and reunion on the occasion of her eighty-third birthday, when ninety-three children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, and other relatives gathered for a day of fellowship and good cheer.

Three of the sons are preachers, one of the daughters is a missionary in China, and all of the others are active in Christian work. Mrs. Wasson is the widow of the late Rev. N. C. Wasson, who was a local preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and has made her residence at the old home place for nearly fifty years.

All of the eight children were present for the reunion, with their families. Dinner was served on the lawn, out under the trees. A large birthday cake, with eighty-three candles on it, was placed on a table, and a son, Rev. L. P. Wasson, presiding elder of the Greenwood District, made a talk just before the meal was served.

The oldest son, Z. A. Wasson, who lives near the old homestead, is superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school at Shady Grove, and the oldest daughter, Mrs. M. E. Mitchell, lives in the house with her mother. A daughter, Miss Julia Wasson, has been a missionary in Shanghai, China, for about twenty years, and will sail next month for her work in the school there, after a year's stay in the homeland.

Rev. David R. Wasson is pastor of the Methodist church at Thayer, Mo., and Rev. J. Carl Wasson is pastor of the Methodist church at Acona, Miss. This is a remarkable family, and the mother and grandmother is justly proud of them.

"O holy and ever blessed Lord, teach us, we beseech thee, to love one another, to exercise forbearance and forgiveness toward our enemies; to recompense no man for evil, but to be merciful even as thou, our Father in heaven, are merciful, that so we may continually follow after thee in all our doings, and be more and more conformed to thine image and likeness. Amen."

DOUBTS DISSOLVED BY A KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

Doubts concerning God may be cured by a knowledge of God. Christ says, "Learn of me." The source of the strength of Romanism lies not in its pretended miracles, the pretended interference of God in behalf of her followers or her promises of happiness, for she does not promise happiness but rest. In her profession to answer the deepest cravings of the human heart for rest, she speaks of an infallibility to which she would lead men, tired out from the strain of doubt, to rest their burdened minds. The secret of her great influence in humanity is the possibility of error to those within her pale. But is it not better to combat with doubt and perplexity rather than to be content with rest based on the church's infallibility? We turn from the church's recipe for rest to God's. The strength of the invitation lies in the fatherhood of God as revealed through Jesus Christ, for we learn that he is tender, sympathetic and loving, that he values us beyond all his treasures, as the very hairs of our heads are numbered, that he heareth the raven's cry and marketh the sparrow's fall, and loves his own with an everelasting love. We are a part of God and are identified with Christ and shall be superior to death and the grave and shall rise to the heavens through the power by which Christ arose. God through Christ invites us not to an institution for rest, but to himself, for he exteuds his arms and says, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."—Baltimore Southern Methodist.

PATRIOTS IN CHINA.

(An interview with Dr. W. B. Nance.)

"The Chinese nationalists consider themselves just the same sort of patriots as the American nationalists considered themselves in the days of the Revolutionary War when they were fighting against overwhelming odds to establish the independence of their country," declares Dr. W. B. Nance, former president of Soochow University, now in the States on furlough. "And just as the American patriots believed that they would finally win out even in those days when Washington was being villified and the Continental Congress was trying to set him aside, so the patriots in China today believe that they will finally succeed in establishing a stable and independent government for China, in spite of present handicaps and hindrances."

Dr. Nance has been a missionary in China under the Board of Missions of the Southern Methodist Church for thirty-three years and has been connected with Soochow University since the founding of that institution in 1901. In 1914 he was made vice president of the school and was elected president in 1922, which office he resigned in the spring of 1927 to give place to the new day in Chinese leadership. Since that time Dr. Nance has served as "western adviser" of the university. Just prior to his departure from China a few weeks ago Dr. Nance was one of the guests of honor at a birthday celebration given by the alumni of Soochow University to three men who had been long connected with the school and had had much to do with building up its present success. In addition to Dr. Nance, the other guests of honor were Dr. J. W. Cline, a former president, and Prof. Joseph Whiteside, head of the department of English.

"The nationalists under the Kuomintang insist that they must capture Peking," says Dr. Nance, "for whoever is in charge there will inherit the recognition foreign governments gave the Chinese republic after the revolution of 1911-12. In spite of the fact that they control all the country south of the Yangstze river and much of the territory north of it, they have not been recognized by any nation as a government, and without this recognition they cannnot demand any revision of treaties. Therefore, they will not consider any truce with the northern militarists, which would permit each to control his own section of the country."

Dr. Nance refused to prophesy as to when a stable government might be established in China. When he left that country early in March everything was quiet, but just how long this quiet might last he refused to conjecture. One of the chief difficulties facing the nationalists to-day, he says, is that Chang Tso Ling, the northern military leader, is backed by Japan, to whom he has granted wide concessions in Manchuria in return for their military assistance. The nationalists are also handicapped at present by break with the Soviet government in Russia, as they formerly obtained supplies, munitions of war, and expert drill masters from that country.

"Yet in spite of these handicaps and in spite of dissensions in their own ranks, caused by personal ambitions and jealousies, which manifest themselves from time to time," says Dr. Nance, "the nationalists look upon themselves as patriots called to defend their country from foreign oppression, and believe that in the end they will win out."

"I had some real fun yesterday," said Bishop Phillips Brooks to his congregation one Sunday morning. The fun he referred to was his visit to the slums, where he attracted the little children to himself very much as did his Lord and Master. It was a sight to find him walking through the streets with a multitude of the outcast urchins clinging to him and not willing to let him go.

MARRIED.

On June 23, at the home of the bride's parents, Summit, Miss., MR. CLARENCE JONES, of McComb, Miss., to MISS EDITH GODBOLD, Rev. W. T. Griffin officiating.

The Light and Power Company of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, has a big plant on the Parahyba river within the bounds of the Porto Novo circuit. The Methodist pastor on this circuit, Rev. Juvenal Pereria, has visited these workers and held services for them a number of times. Recently, upon finding this out, the superintendent of the plant, a Mr. Hamby, of Georgia, said that he would use his influence to get the company to build a chapel where services might be held for the employees and their families—about 1,000 people. "They need it," he declared repeatedly. This power plant is one of the largest in South America.

Most of our "cannots" are "will nots."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE CHURCH PAPER.

The church paper is simply an agency of the church for promoting the interests of the kingdom of God. It is maintained by the church because it is needed—not for any other reason whatever. Experience has proved that nothing else can take the place of such an agency for the dissemination of church news, for the promotion of the work of the church, for the cultivation of a spirit of devotion and loyalty to the church, for the development of the religious life of the membership of the church, for the maintenance of the spirit of connectionalism that is so essential in the work of the church. Its function is to supply information and inspiration, and to develop the spiritual life of its readers.

The usefulness of the church paper is in proportion to its circulation. The best paper in the world so far as its contents are concerned would be worth nothing if it were not read by anybody. The need of the church for a paper, therefore, is met only as it is widely circulated.

The church depends largely for the support of this indispensable agent of its work upon the income derived from subscriptions. We believe it would be worth all it costs for the church to provide the whole financial support for its paper, if necessary, independently of its income from subscriptions; but the church has not so provided. Hence, for the maintenance of the paper it is absolutely necessary for it to have an income from subscriptions.

Everybody that knows anything about the publishing business knows that it takes a good deal of money to run a weekly newspaper. Religious newspapers are no exception to the rule. Paper bills, ink bills, postage bills, printing bills, wages and salaries have to be met regularly.

The Advocate has to meet its obligations; and as agency of the church it needs financial assistance especially during the slack summer season. The business management and the Publishing Committee would appreciate it very much if our pastors would send in some subscriptions at this season of the year. There are thousands of Methodists who are not receiving the paper now. The subscription price of two dallars a year is less than five cents a week. The church needs the paper and the paper needs the income from subscriptions for its maintenance. We appeal to our pastors and other interested friends of the church to secure some subscriptions and send them in within the next month. There are 496 pastoral charges in the three patronizing Annual Conferences of the Advocate; an average of five new subscriptions from each charge would very greatly help the Advocate at this time. We believe, too, that it would be a blessing to the church. Renewals are also greatly desired.

THE NATURE OF SIN.

Those who are disposed to think lightly of sin and to imagine that it incurs no special penalty hereafter, might with profit read the essay of Dr. Austin Phelps, published many years ago, on "Retribution in the Light of Reason." They would find food for thought in the following:

"Sin is of such a nature as to perpetuate itself. This is the law of all character. If left to itself, with no remedial influence from without, sin never dwindles into nothing. Crimes never shrink into foibles; passions never subside into subacute eccentricities; vice never shrinks into infirmity. Once guilty, always guilty, is the law of all depravity, no external power intervening. Virtue is under the same law. It is the normal condition of character as such. Where the tree falls, there shall it lie—not by fatality, but by the self-perpetuating force of moral choice. Hence the intrinsic and appalling evil of sin. Hence the necessity of subjecting it to imperative control in a moral universe."

KINDS OF CHURCH MEMBERS.

"And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable: A sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the wayside: and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it. And some fell upon a rock: and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture. And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it, and choked it. And others fell on good ground, and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundredfold."

The Master himself gave the interpretation to his disciples of the parable of the sower; but we venture to make application of his interpretation.

There are some unconverted church members. How many, we should not be willing even to guess—too many, we fear. The Word of God is not in their hearts. Their names are on the church roll, but, sad to say, that is all. Tragic!

There are back-slidden church members. They once knew the joy of salvation; they were active in the work of the church and of the kingdom of God; but some temptation, some hardship, some misunderstanding came, they forgot God, and fell back into their sins. Pathetic!

There are worldly church members. They have heard and believed and accepted the gospel; but they are busy people, immersed in business, seeking health and pleasure, burdened with cares of all kinds, so that they cannot give much time or service to the church. They attend the meetings fairly well, pay something to the support of the church, and wish it well generally; but their lights shine dimly and they accomplished very little. Pitiable!

There are devout and spiritually minded church members. They know and love God and are happy in his service. The Word of God is in their hearts, and their lives are shaped according to its precepts. They are fruit-bearing Christians. Beautiful!

"HE KNOWS HIS STUFF."

A very successful life insurance agent, a friend of ours, dropped into the office the other day. His primary purpose probably was to sell us some more life insurance. Having failed in that, he sat awhile and chatted in a friendly and more or less confidential way about the business in which he is engaged, and about human nature and the world in general. This friend of ours has been selling life insurance in this city for more than a quarter of a century—and he has sold a lot of it. Not through idle curiosity, but for the sake of getting a business man's point of view about successful endeavor, we asked him some questions about his own method of procedure—how he keeps in "prospects," how he approaches different people, how he closes a deal, and such like. Being a successful man himself, having a clear mind, and having the ability to state his views clearly, he gave us a pleasant and profitable half-hour discussion of a worth-while topic. Our conclusion from the whole matter is that he is successful because he "knows his stuff" and because he is "on the job" all the time. He has just one thing to sell—life insurance—available in certain forms, such as ordinary, term, endowment, twenty-year-pay, etc. He has the same thing to sell to all prospects, and he has to carry the same message to every one of them. But he varies his method of approach according to the characteristics and peculiarities of the man with whom he is dealing at the time. He never sells his wares to a crowd, but always to an individual. It is a man-to-man process. He studies the individual to learn how he may best reach him. He never gives up. He cultivates friendships. Being a good man, he thinks of the good he may do the other fellow as well as the gain he may make for himself. He boosts his own line without knocking his competitors. He believes in his goods—he carries a heavy insurance himself. He "practices what he preaches." So he succeeds.

We could not keep from feeling that he was telling some of us preachers and Christian wrokers how to succeed. The minister that "knows his stuff," that "stays on the job," that follows up "leads," that deals with people face to face, that believes in his message and practices what he preaches, who studies human nature for the sake of learning how best to approach individuals—the minister that knows and does these things will be able to gather a goodly number of sheaves for his Master's harvest.

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE, 1928.

(Prepared by the Commission on the Church and Social Service, of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, for use on Labor Sunday, Sept. 2, 1928.)

Dreams of a better social order can no longer be dismissed as the impracticable objectives of sentimentalists. Science appears upon the scene as the handmaid of religion. For science has already accomplished the impossible. By its knowledge of law it has subdued the natural order to the will of man. Man flies, he speaks through space, he draws electric power from the sky. By the aid of science we now do these things which previous generations put down as the foolish dreams of impractical men. There is every reason to believe that science can now adopt social ideals as specifications of a great task to be accomplished for humanity and proceed by the scientific method to assist in evolving a new industrial order which shall be increasingly characterized by righteousness and peace.

A score of years ago the churches of this country expressed the ideals of religion in their bearing on social and industrial relations. The abolition of child labor; protective regulations for women in industry; the abatement and prevention of poverty; the protection of the worker from dangerous machinery and occupational diseases and the hardships of enforced unemployment; suitable provision for old age; the right of employees and employers alike to organize; adequate means of arbitration and conciliation in industrial disputes; the gradual and reasonable reduction of hours of labor to the lowest practicable point; a living wage as a minimum in every industry and the highest wage that each industry can afford; a new emphasis upon the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property; and the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised—these are the industrial ideals for which the churches stand.

Certain phases of the industrial problem press for immediate attention. The past year has seen a serious condition of unemployment. The situation has been not less but more challenging because of a condition of prosperity for many while a very large number of men were out of work. The Department of Labor has estimated that there were nearly two million fewer persons employed in January of this year than in January, 1925. Since the so-called normal unemployment is not less than one million, this government estimate means that at least three million workers must have been unemployed during the past winter. Such a condition is economically unsound and intolerable from the point of view of Christian brotherhood. Let the forces of religion vigorously renew their efforts so to inspire our technicians, and so to impress upon industrial leaders and when necessary upon government the demand for solutions for unemployment, that wise and effective measures may be worked out to remove this evil from our economic life.

The coincidence of unemployment and the rapidly productive power of the nation due to the increased use of machinery, new power resources, scientific management, and the growing efficiency of labor suggest the possibility of a further shortening of hours and of a five-day-week in certain industries. Churches and social agencies must be prepared to do their part in providing for the increasing leisure time for all as hours of work are shortened. We have learned to view with confidence the ability of the workers, if opportunities are provided, to make as good use of their leisure time as any other social group.

It is of basic importance in the approach, not only to these problems of hours and unemployment, but to all matters which touch intimately the lives of the workers, that the right of collective bargaining shall be recognized as fundamental. Representation of all the people concerned in a common undertaking, which is the American principle of government, is the only sound and scientific method of adjusting labor relations and of workinng out permanent solutions of industrial problems. We view with satisfaction the forward-looking offers of the American Federation of Labor and other unions to co-operate with management in an effort to eliminate waste from industry, to increase production and to promote efficiency in the service of the public. An engineering approach to industrial problems by the labor unions in practical co-operation with management holds a significant promise of orderly and constructive progress.

It must not be forgotten that the churches are also employers of labor and that as such they are under the same moral obligation as other employers to operate on Christian principles in their relations with those whom they employ. Indeed, they are under greater obligations because of the position they assume as teachers of ethics and religion. The churches must ask themselves not only whether the salaries of ministers, missionaries and church workers are fixed on a brotherly basis, but also whether, in the business enterprises of their boards and publication agencies, conditions of employment, wages, hours and control are in accord with an enlightened Christian conscience. Some labor leaders have not been interested in the liberal pronouncements of the churches because of evasions by the churches themselves of the partical issues involved. A prominent church official has said: "I am about ready to ask my communion either to practice some of its liberal pronouncements or to repeal them."

We, therefore, urge both the religious and secular forces of the nation to renew their faith in the social ideals of the churches as practicable objectives for American life. We suggest to all concerned in industry that they approach the solution of labor problems in a more scientific and cooperative spirit, assured of the possibility of hitherto unattainable social progress. We call upon capital, labor and the public to move forward with good will, courage and intelligence into a new and better day.

MANSFIELD COLLEGE—TO-MORROW.

By President D. B. Raulins.

What is to be the to-morrow of Mansfield College? Is its future to be as glorious as its past? is it to meet the needs of the girls of this generation as ably as did the college of the yesterday meet the needs of that time? Is there within it a vitality that can be turned into a force capable of meeting the issues of to-day?

These are questions that cannot be answered by the president and faculty of Mansfield College alone. They are questions that must be answered by the Methodists of Louisiana, the alumnae, and the friends of the institution, who are the architects of Mansfield's future, the makers of its to-morrow.

All those well informed as to movements of to-day are aware of certain rather definite trends in education, certain currents not so definitely defined as yet, but rapidly taking shape. It is a period of transition and experiment. Directions toward certain objectives are being established.

Among the observable tendencies we are able to detect an increased student emphasis rather than subject emphasis, improved standards, enriched curriculum, moral need, and increased cost.

Certainly the church institution is concerned about all these, especially the human emphasis and the moral need. It finds what it has to offer is very greatly needed. Certainly the matter of cost is not the primary consideration, notwithstanding its increased prominence. For a great while intelligent people have been willing to pay for what they regarded as valuable and important. A more fundamental question is whether or not such training as Mansfield College and such schools offer is important and necessary in the conservation and advancement of civilization and human welfare. Does Mansfield College promise to make any contribution to these great ends? Are the Methodists of Louisiana providing anywhere else for just what it is doing?

Having answered with conviction in the affirmative the above questions, the questions of improved standards and increased costs are greatly simplified.

Church people need frequently to ask themselves concerning the place and value of Christian education, and the particular work being done by their own institutions. They should keep in close touch with their schools. Are these schools worthy of preservation and improvement?

A rather recent survey of higher education, including church colleges, brings out some information worthy of our consideration and action. Certainly it is enough to disturb complacent Protestant Christians. Bulletin No. 34, Higher Education, Biennial Survey, carries this statement:

"In only one instance does it seem that a church group proposes to meet the challenge of the extraordinary demands by immediate and general expansion of facilities to accommodate all who are prepared to seek admission upon the basis of previously accepted standards. Everywhere throughout the United States Catholic Church colleges for both men and women are being enlarged and multiplied. Faculties are being strengthened by graduate and professional training. Participation is active and influential wherever church, regional, or national groups meet for the serious consideration of the problems of higher education. Close association with the educational activities and discussions of other agencies, both public and private, characterize the apparent attempt of Catholic higher education to meet the problems of increasing numbers by providing increased opportunities. In the face of the ever-growing army seeking higher education, Catholic educational agencies give no hint of adopting the policy of strategic withdrawal for the purpose of consolidating their position. They seem determined to meet the situation by expenditures of extraordinary energy and resources." (Blackface type mine.)

In view of this unbiased statement of a government report, it might be wise for Methodists and other Protestant churches to realize that, while they may take some pride in calling the public school a Protestant institution, it certainly does not provide for the religious education of our children. The Catholic schools do provide for religious education in terms of the religion they profess.

Furthermore, Protestants may well be reminded that such a program of hospitalization and education is taking a big mortgage on the future of this country. The way for Protestants to meet such a challenge is certainly not by boasting of our own superior faith, nor by complaining of the advancements of the Catholic church. Both of these attitudes may continue and grow while our own institutions wither and die. The relative places of these two types of religious faith for the future will be determined by the intelligent and sacrificial energy expended by the advocates of each.

Are Methodist people convinced of the inescapable responsibility for Christian education? Is it a matter of conviction with us?

If Mansfield College is to meet successfully the responsibility laid upon it for the future, it will be necessary for us to keep the following items in mind and provide them very rapidly:

Endowment has become a necessity. Few reputable schools attempt to get on without the provision. Endowment or its equivalent must be provided.

Faculty must be strengthened and enlarged. The girls coming from the homes of our country need and are worthy of the best possible training. By all means Mansfield College should have a Department of Bible and Religious Education. The head of such a department should not only have oversight of the teaching of these subjects, but should take care of the organized religious activities and life of the school. It is too late for church people to imagine that religion will take care of itself, and that it is sufficient for students and teachers to be good. We are willing to make investments in laboratories for scientific study, and even athletics; but how few have responded to the demand for scientific and thorough religious training!

Increased library and laboratory facilities must be provided. Some improvement has been made, but only a beginning.

Finally, there is an item coming within easy range of all Louisiana Methodists. It will go far toward making the school what it should be. It will do much to impress outsiders with the importance of the college. That item is increased patronage. Either Methodists will educate their own girls or be compelled to call upon State or other church schools to educate them. Surely, we should be unwilling to do either of the latter two, ask the State or some other church to provide for them. Let pastors and people keep Mansfield College before them as the place for the girls of our church. With the proper concern at this point, the problem of attendance would be solved instantly.

If we are to answer intelligently and constructively the questions being put to us to-day by our young people, if we are going to prepare them adequately to meet the issues of their generation, if they are to learn to live a life of service and spiritual reality in an age that is mechanical and materialistic, if our girls are to be taught to face effectively the increased opportunities and responsibilities of our times, and at the same time retain womanly grace and character, we must enlarge and improve our church schools.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH, ON PROHIBITION.

On July 16, Bishop Warren A. Candler gave to the secular press a statement containing quotations from the deliverances of bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, between the 17th day of August, 1865, and the 21st day of May, 1894. Concerning these deliverances, Bishop Candler says: "I see no reason to dissent from the position of my church on the subject of personal and party politics, as that position has been proclaimed authoritatively by its leaders from the beginning of its history as a Christian body. * * * It is in agreement with the words of our Lord when he witnessed his good confession before Pontius Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John 18:36).

On July 18 Bishop Collins Denny issued a statement in which he said: "To the summary of the official position of our church prepared by my colleague and friend, Bishop Candler, I give my hearty concurrence."

It is not our desire or purpose to discuss or to criticise any of the statements made by the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, between 1865 and 1894 on the position of the church on the subject of personal and party politics. Those bishops openly and courageously met in their own way the condition which confronted them in those days, but it is likewise true that bishops, ministers and laymen of our church in our days and generation have met with equal frankness and courage the great moral issues which have confronted them. Therefore, in view of the statements made by Bishops Candler and Denny and the interpretation which has been placed thereupon by the opponents of prohibition, it becomes absolutely necessary that the attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on the question of prohibition should be plainly set forth by quotations from Episcopal Addresses and from the official record of the General Conference of the church, which utterances of the highest and most representative body of the church must be accepted as the final authority.

First: (Extract Report Committee on Temperance adopted by General Conference Asheville, May 12, 1910.)

"Whereas, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has ever gone before the world as the unalterable foe of the liquor traffic, and is a prohibition church, which will never consider a compromise with this heinous sin; and, whereas, greater strides have been made in temperance in the home of Southern Methodism—in the South—than in any other part of our Union in recent years, to the furtherance of which our church has been one of the principal factors;

"Resolved, That we hereby appeal to the President and Congress of the United States to take immediate action and pass this bill (regulating interstate shipments of liquor) for the protection of the people from this great curse."

Second: (Extract Report Committee on Temperance adopted Oklahoma City, May 22, 1914.)

"Resolved, That we rejoice in every effort made to destroy this traffic, and that we pray the blessing of God on the efforts of his people in the various States to secure the passage of State-wide prohibitory laws. * * * That we reiterate our request that the Congress of the United States adopt a resolution giving the people of the United States the right to vote on the question of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States forbidding the manufacture for sale and the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes." (These appeals to the President and Congress distinctly inject the influence of the church into the settlement by Congress of this great moral social question.)

Third: (Extract from Episcopal Address, signed by all the bishops, read by Bishop Candler, General Conference, Oklahoma City, May, 1914.)

"The church comprehends within the scope of its purpose and plans the extermination of all vice and the propagation of all virtues, the healing of all ills and the promotion of every worthy interest of mankind. Voluntary associations which devote themselves to special reforms and particular schemes of relief constantly fall back upon the ministry and membership of the churches for their support. Without the church they can do nothing, it does not and cannot follow them. But they must and do depend up it. * * * In thus speaking no exorbitant claim is made for the church, no more is asserted than Jesus declared in the Sermon on the Mount concerning the position and the mission of his people in human society. It was he who said in his church: 'Ye are the salt of the earth, ye are the light of the world.'"

Fourth: (Extract from Report Committee on Temperance adopted, Atlanta, 1928.)

"Resolved, That we rejoice in the unparalleled nation-wide victories, which have been won in the warfare against the liquor traffic and the social evil—victories so great that there is hope that the irrepressible warfare to make our whole country safe from the creed and covetousness of the saloon and the redlight district will be won in the near future."

Fifth: (Extract from Episcopal Address 1922, Hot Springs, signed by all of the bishops.)

"The law (prohibition) is the expression of the made-up mind of the nation that whiskey, one of the supreme curses of the world thus far, shall cease its career of ruin in so far as our people are concerned. It is the cause of deep gratitude that the greatest of all the nations has led the way in this mighty and matchless reform. * * * "It is incumbent, therefore, upon every good citizen to work for the placing in power of men who are sincere friends of the law, and to assist in every proper way in the enforcement of the law."

Sixth: (Extract Report Committee on Temperance adopted May 19, 1922, Hot Springs.)

"We rejoice in the overthrow of this, the giant evil of our modern time, and especially rejoice that Methodism has from the beginning of the conflict led the vanguard of the conquering army. It is an acceptable tribute to our efficient activity that the liquor interests throughout the world denounce Methodism as one of the most potent factors in securing American prohibition. * * * "The vital issue before the people to-day is whether they will stand by those members of Congress who have voted to maintain the prohibition amendment, or whether the people will vote to defeat candidates for Congress who will attempt to repeal or to weaken the Volstead Act. The only certain place to determine that issue is in the primary and in the general election. The crisis should be promptly and vigorously met by the Christian citizenship of the nation."

Seventh: (Extract from Episcopal Address May, 1926, Memphis, read by Bishop Denny, signed by all the bishops.)

"The National Prohibition Law is the most remarkable social enactment by any great nation to promote the general welfare by the restriction of the activity of the individual. The full effect of such a law will not be secured immediately, or even in a decade; that the results already secured are exceedingly beneficial is evident to an impartial observer, and there is good reason to expect far greater benefits in the future. The industrial, social, educational, moral and religious forces of the nation, led by its Christian citizenship, overthrew the legalized liquor traffic, and secured National Prohibition. The same great forces must unitedly fight with equal vigor and persistence the outlawed criminal traffic and the would-be nullifiers of the law. * * * Adequate appropriation should be made by State and nation to provide a sufficient number of men with salaries commensurate with such important dangerous work. Prosecution of offenders should be speedy, penalties by judges and juries should be adequate, violators of the Prohibition Law, however prominent, should be branded as criminal. Above all there must be continued ever-increasing emphasis upon the educational process in the press, in the pulpit, and in the school, setting forth the evil of alcoholism and the destructive results of lawlessness upon the entire fabric of the national life."

Eighth: (Resolutions adopted by General Conference by unanimous rising vote, May 11, 1926, Memphis.)

"Resolved, That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, assembled in Memphis, Tenn., in quadrennial session, representing a Christian citizenship of more than two million, six hundred thousand, hereby respectfully and earnestly petition the Congress of the United States to reject all proposals to enact any legislation which has for its object the nullification or the weakening of the prohibition enforcement act, commonly known as the Volstead Law. We most positively insist that when men openly flaunt their determination to violate any law of our country the government must suppress anarchy and compel obedience to the laws absolutely regardless of cost."

Ninth: (Extract Report Committee on Temperance, unanimously adopted by General Conference, Memphis, May 20, 1926.)

"The pronouncement of the bishops on the National Prohibition Law should be read from every pulpit in the church. It is a clarion call which should ring throughout our border and stir all supporters of temperance and prohibition to action. * * * The campaign for nullification must be answered by a crusade for observance and enforcement. The laws must be administered by its friends. In our States—from constable to governor; and in the nation—from revenue agent to President—officials must be selected who believe in enforcement, not only because prohibition is law, but because it ought to be the law. Full power and authority must be exercised in co-operation with the general government. To the attainment of these ends we call upon our preachers and teachers to give voice to the social creed of our church, and upon all our people to assert their full influence as Christians and as patriotic citizens of our Republic."

These quotations from recent Episcopal Addresses and recent acts (1910-1926) of the General Conference, which is the highest authority of our church, and which is composed of an equal number of preachers and laymen, indicate the definite, positive attitude of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on the subject of prohibition. The abolition of the beverage liquor traffic is regarded as a great moral issue, and the entire membership of the church, both ministry and laity, are called upon to fight unitedly with vigor and persistence the outlawed criminal traffic and the would-be nullifiers of the law. We emphasize that in the Episcopal Address of 1922 it is declared that "It is incumbent upon every good citizen (ministers and laymen) to work for the placing in power of men who are sincere friends of the law." Also in the last recorded action of the General Conference (1926) it is declared, "That in our States—from constable to governor—and in the nation—from revenue agent to President—officials must be selected who believe in enforcement not only because prohibition is the law, but because it ought to be the law," and all our people (ministers as well as laymen) are called upon to exert their full influence as Christians and as patriotic citizens of our Republic."

It would be an unthinkable repudiation of our personal responsibility as Christian citizens, and a base betrayal of those who have a right to look to us for moral leadership to retire from the field at this critical juncture in the warfare with this age-long enemy of mankind. We notify the defenders and the advocates of the liquor traffic that the moral forces of the country will not be driven from the field by the cry that they are "bringing the church into politics" because they are opposing the election to the presidency of a man whose personal and official record both brand him as the outstanding enemy of National Prohibition, for which great reform we have ourselves not only as citizens, but also as Christian ministers, been working for many years.

The extracts quoted above show that in our present attitude and activity we are in full accord with the highest authority of our church.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

In a recent number of the Advocate I referred to "The Life and Letters of St. Paul," by David Smith, D.D., as a helpful book to the Sunday school student in studying the life and work of the great apostle. Now I am not so vain as to think that my commendation of a book will make people fall over each other in eagerness to read it; but some may read it at my suggestion, and I want to add that I by no means agree with the author in many things he says. For instance, he follows the common opinion that Paul's great sermon on Marr's Hill in Athens was a failure. I do not agree. Dr. Smith thinks that Paul so regarded it. I think not. I don't think Paul had any reference to it in his own mind when he wrote to the Corinthians that when he was with them he determined to know nothing among them but Jesus Christ, and him crucified. That was the burden of his message in Athens. Paul was adapting his manner of presenting the truth to his auditors. In Athens he had an audience of people who prided themselves on philosophy, and the apostle put his great message in a way that appealed to thinking men and women. In doing so, he gave the world one of the finest compositions to be found in all literature, pagan or Christian, a model of surpassing beauty and eloquence. In Corinth he spoke to people of all sorts, chiefly, perhaps, trades-people, who neither understood nor cared for such lofty reasoning as the apostle employed in Athens. His whole epistle to the Corinthians shows that he had to explain to them the elementary principles of morality, and preach an ethical gospel. Besides this, in Corinth he had to deal with the Jews who denied his gospel. And he got in mighty deep water in Corinth, too. I expect after hearing him in some of those glorious flights of sacred eloquence, some of the good people who heard him, as they went home, said: "He was too deep for me." I wish I could have been near enough to have answered the objection by reminding them of the Master's words to his disciples when they were fishing in shallow water: "Launch out into the deep." They did so and caught so many fish that it took them all to pull in the seine! One of our chief troubles is that we are piddling with minnows in shallow water, when we ought to go out where it is deep.

But judged by its immediate results, Paul's sermon on the Areopagus, before the intellectual Athenians, was anything but a failure. "Howbeit, certain men clave unto him, and believed; among the which was Dionysius, the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them." If I had preached a sermon that converted a judge of the supreme court, and a prominent society woman, and "others with them," I would consider my sermon a success. Some evangelists would regard it as a "howling success"—however, such evangelists would never be invited to preach in the place where Paul held forth. Dionysius was no minnow, nor was Damaris. Both of them were prominent people, of a prominence that justified Luke in naming them personally. No, his sermon in Athens was not a failure.

By the way, Dr. Smith changes the language of the Authorized Version, the Bible people as old as I am prefer to all other versions, and re-translates, "made of one blood all nations of men;" he puts it, "made of one stuff all nations," and so forth. He gives an alternative rendering in a note—"made of one common material." My knowledge of Greek is like a lady arrayed in negligee, shy of the public; but as far as it goes, it seems to me to favor the Authorized rendering of "one blood." Yet I would like to get a dependable rendering that would let me out of thinking that the blood in my veins is the same as that of the stupid Bushman and almond-eyed Oriental.

So when you read Dr. Smith on Paul, don't take what he says without thinking it out for yourself. Paul stumped Peter, and we may expect to find some things hard to understand. I think Paul tangled himself up on the Second Coming of Christ. I recently heard a sermon on that subject, and am more muddled than ever. Apart from the fact that Jesus will come again, I hesitate to say what I believe about the subject. When a man gets to be as old as the almanac says I am, he is not as confident about a great many things as he is when he is just out of his teens. We must remember when studying Paul that he had a tremendous problem to handle in adjusting a new order of things to an old order which it superceded. He was a Jew, and remained a Jew to the end; and he never entirely extricated himself from the old system, and while he released the Gentiles from all the customs of the Jews, he continued to observe many of its rites himself. He shaved his head, for instance, and "purified" himself when he went to the temple; and these compromises got him in a sight of trouble.

Paul was in many tight places, but I doubt if he was ever in a tighter place than we are just now in politics. The devil has driven us into a corner, where we either have to vote for a "wet," or a Republican, or not vote at all. I don't intend to advise anybody how to act; and I fear the preachers will make more votes for the man they oppose than they will take from him. It is true that it is hard to separate morals and politics; and they ought not to be separated; but in the present situation each voter will have to decide for himself. I have been trying to find whether Paul took any hand in politics in his day; and I feel quite sure that if they had brought a petition to Jesus to get him to sign it, asking the authorities at Rome to remove Pilate, Jesus would have replied, "My kingdom is not of this world," and avoided the snare.

THE MINISTER SEEN FROM THE PEW.

By George S. Hawley, President Bridgeport Gas Light Company.

The minister's lot is hard enough without adding criticisms to his burdens. Think of having from one hundred to one thousand bosses, each with a different idea of what the minister should and should not do, and how he should and should not do it! And what a task it must be to preach and act and dress like Fifth Avenue with Main Street facilities and salary!

I am assuming the possession of all of the essentials, those spiritual qualities, without which no minister can be truly effective, certain natural gifts, adequate training, a warm and pleasing personality (you remember that some one called preaching "truth through personality"), and the practice of constant study and preparation. There is space only to speak of some of the less essential but important matters which have to do with the minister and his congregation.

People go to church from various motives, and the purpose of the service is to see that each class receives the greatest possible benefit. Remembering that men are affected in different ways, it would be wise to have a well-ordered service, each part fitting into every other part, and cumulative in its effect.

The minister has some theme around which everything should center. Suppose the one chosen is "Worship." Sunday morning arrives, and the service begins with the organ playing Handle's beautiful "Largo." That worshipful piece may carry the message to some hearts without a word being spoken. Walter Damrosch has been giving some concerts with his New York Symphony Orchestra over the radio and making appropriate comments before each number. A while ago he said this: "Last week I gave what I called the mystery number, without comment or announcement, and I asked you of the radio audience to write me what emotions were stirred as you listened. I have received many hundreds of letters, and every one of you said the same thing—that it meant peace, tranquility, rest, quiet, evening; and that is exactly what Shumann intended to convey when he wrote his beautiful 'Evening Song.'" "It would be a pity," said he, "if we simply were entertained by these weekly concerts and did not receive something deeper and better."

So with the church service. It should be not entertainment, but something deeper and better.

Values in the Ritual.

The ritual is a beautiful part of the service, and I wish that there might be more of it. We can with profit study the services of other churches, and John Wesley's suggestions as to what they should be.

And how helpful the reading of the Scriptures may be! Very few can read them beautifully, perhaps one man in one hundred; but every man can read them naturally and unostentatiously, and bring out the interpretation which he desires to emphasize.

Long Prayers.

Prayer is most important. It is in an unfortunate place. It should be as near the sermon as possible. As a rule I think it is too long. May I give two reasons? During the prayer the latecomers are arriving. They soon become restless, and so do the ushers, and finally those in the congregation. I have seen fully half of the people uneasy during the latter part of the prayer because of the people waiting outside and the few who had come inside. The other reason is that the minister is in a comfortable position, while the people are in awkward positions, with the head against the wooden railing in front, or crouched over on one side or the other, and before long physical discomfort makes it difficult to listen. Would it not be well to pray to the theme of the service and then stop, leaving out some of the more conventional objects of petition?

Notices ought not to be given from the pulpit, but I suppose that it is practically impossible to avoid it. Why not put them near the beginning, say after the opening anthem? And what a fine thing it would be if the outside ten-minute speakers could be placed at the very opening, right after the organ number, rather than in the middle of the service, where they so often mar the impression already created, and make it difficult for the minister to effectively launch his sermon.

Oh, for a Natural Voice in the Pulpit!

I wonder what would happen if on next Sunday morning every minister should carry into the pulpit the same charm of manner and voice which characterizes him in his personal contact with his people? What a delight it would be, and what an effect it would have on his message! But it seems impossible in many cases. He is charming in conversation, his voice registers his feelings, surprise and delight and regret; but once let him ascend the steps of the platform, and he draws down his larynx, pulls down his face, becomes solemn and sorrowful in his books and ponderous in his manner. Why is it? And I refer to all public speakers, not alone ministers.

A man, not a minister, after speaking to an audience for some time, suddenly stopped and said, "There is a man asleep over there; you next to him wake him up."

"Wake him up yourself," said he, "you put him to sleep." If he did, I know how: by the monotony of his voice. It makes no difference whether he talks in a loud, high tone, or in a quiet, low tone; the effect is the same. We have all had the pleasure of reclining in the orchard in the good old summer time, where we enjoyed the fragrance of the apple blossoms and listened to the hum of the bees—and how drowsy we soon felt! The same effect is produced when a speaker dins on one note; the hearers feel drowsy and soon lose interest.

I believe that you and I, without saying a word, but by the use of the voice alone, could depict joy, sorrow, anger, all of the emotions; but I defy any one to tell whether the average speaker is registering sorrow or joy or some other feeling.

Henry Ward Beecher, said: "What a speaker most needs is to strengthen his ordinary conversational voice without giving it a hard quality; that is, without destroying its flexibility and power of adaptation to every mood."

When you are speaking, imagine yourself in conversation with your friends, being careful to enunciate clearly, increasing the volume of the voice but slightly, without forcing it.

Slovenly Speaking.

I would like to say a word about enunciation, and I suggest clear speaking for a different reason from that usually given. Slovenly speaking puts an added burden upon the hearer. It makes him listen and think not only in the present, but the past and future. I know that this is true. I have listened to many thousands of arguments and speeches, and the careless speaker is the most difficult to follow.

A speaker throws out a sentence in a careless way. The hearer does not catch anything except the last word, which is the key word. Then he thinks to himself: "Oh, yes, now I know what he said." That is, he has heard the key word, he thinks back and recalls the rhythm of the sentence, and then puts it together and makes his guess; and while he is doing this he is also trying to listen to what the speaker is continuing to say; but it cannot be done by the average listener, and he soon gives up in despair.

The minister should give his message a chance. It should be clothed in good language, not flowery, but short, simple words, clearly spoken, with a voice that does not irritate, and in a manner that does not repel. Otherwise a serious handicap is put upon the message.

What is a Sermon?

As to the kind of a sermon, what shall I say? It seems fashionable to say, "Preach the gospel and nothing else." Of course, that is the duty and privilege of the minister, and I agree with it; but I do not agree with the ordinary interpretation given to that phrase. Is it not so that when one says "preach the gospel" one means a modified funeral sermon, an amplified prayer meeting evangelical talk, a glorified old-fashioned Sunday school lesson? I agree with that definition so far as certain occasions are concerned, which each minister must select for himself, but I say in addition that it is not only the right but the duty of the minister to make use of every proper, safe vehicle which will carry him to his destination, which is the hearts of his people.

Lindbergh crossed the Atlantic Ocean. What an opportunity to preach on aviation and its fascinating history! What made aviation possible? The faith of two men. People laughed at them, spoke slightingly of their mental equipment, but on they went with unwavering faith. They started with a feeble thing, flying a few feet and falling; again and again they fell, but each time they flew further, until now man has practically conquered the air. Then suppose the minister had turned to his people and said, "Brethren, that is the story of the development of Christian character; undying faith, unceasing works, always striving to reach higher, arising after each fall, until finally as on wings of eagles he soars above the difficulties that so easily entangle. Is not that a gospel sermon in essence?

When the greatest Example of all time was asked, "Who is my neighbor?" He could have said, "Why, Elisha was neighbor to the woman whose boy he restored, and Abraham was neighbor to his nephew Lot when he gave him the beautiful plains and he took the barren hills, therefore a man's neighbor is any one in need and whom he can help." No, he gave a graphic newspaper account of a highway robbery, and all he said at the conclusion was, "Which of the three was neighbor to the man who fell among thieves?"

He could have described the character of his Father in theological terms, but instead he gave the life history of a young libertine, and then portrayed the devotion of his loving father, who watched and waited and finally welcomed him home.

Here is something which I think of great importance. Quite often the minister reaches his climax before he expects it. At twenty minutes he feels that magnetic something which tells him that he has reached the hearts of his people; and yet because he has prepared more he goes on and finishes what he has prepared. I have heard many sermons spoiled in this way. I have seen scores of cases in court lost because of failure to stop arguing when the jury had been won. The people do not know that you have prepared more, and they do not care. Why not stop when the climax is reached, say a prayer of not over fifty words, twenty-five would be better, and dismiss with the benediction? The people will not chide you because you have finished ten minutes ahead of time, and they will go away with your message written on their hearts.

And that brings me to my last suggestion—to close the morning service with a twenty-five-word prayer and the benediction; no hymn. The hymn is selected ahead of time, and it may or may not fit. Whether it does or not, if you have impressed your people, most of them prefer to remain quiet. They do not want to try to sing four, five, six, or seven verses of a hymn, or even one verse, except perhaps on occasions where the theme is joyous, or where deep enthusiasm which seeks expression has been aroused. And incidentally I may say that usually it is so late that most people are thinking not of the hymn, but of the clock, or Sunday school, or dinner.

Have I time to say a word about the minister? I did not choose this topic. It was given to me. I do not believe in criticisms except on rare occasions. I do not believe very much in suggestions unless they are requested. I should much prefer to commend the minister rather than suggest to him. He is probably more highly educated and cultured than most or all of his congregation. He loves the good things in life the same as any other man, but he must deny himself. He is anxious to give his family the luxuries and advantages of life, higher education and travel; yet how often must he forego them. He is the giver of cheer and comfort and strength to others; but what layman ever thinks of cheering and comforting him? He is maligned and scoffed at and wickedly underpaid, yet he goes on his way doing his duty as he sees it. He is a man, more than a man; I say that he is a hero of real life (and some day the world will realize it), for he chooses to live his life of self-denial in order that he may do his Master's work. But the layman envies him, for his vocation and avocation are the same. He is doing constantly the things which the layman can do only occasionally, and wishes that he might do more often. He remains, in all circumstances and conditions, where he can minister to others and follow the paths which the Master has trod. He is God's minister, giving his life for others that all may know Christ as their Lord, and men on earth as brothers.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE SOUL THAT CANNOT SAVE IS LOST.

By W. P. Kretschmar.

The eternal struggle to "get on" in the world has gone on since the beginning of time.

History has been replete with its spenders and savers.

Much has been written on the subject of saving money and all too little on the subject of the economy of time.

"Time is Money," and to waste one is to squander the other.

It is almost a waste of words to preach savings to one who cannot make ends meet. It is, however, always good doctrine to preach and practice the frugality of time.

That man who uses his head, who fully capitalizes his hours, is usually wise enough to bank some of his earnings to provide for his dependents, keep him in old age or tide him over through the lean years that always follow.

Carnegie, the great Scotchman, who made millions and saved much of it, said a boy had to ask himself but one question if he would know whether or not he would succeed, and that was, "Can I save money?"

Carnegie, however, was not only a saver of money; he was also an economizer of time. He wasted not his years; he used his head and he kept at it.

If one wastes time, one will never have any money to save.

If one cannot save the days, there will be no dollars to put into savings. And they who have not formed the habit of profitably spending their time are financially whipped.

The lives of millions of successful men and women testify that those who keep thinking, plugging and saving, attain prosperity.

If this community and this State ever permanently prosper, it will be by increasing the number of its citizens who have the courage to save time, the will to earn more money and the character to bank the difference.

The Soul that cannot Save is Financially Lost.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AND PROTESTANT "PREJUDICE."

By Charles E. Jefferson.

(The distingulshed minister of Broadway Tabernacle, New York, who in his long career has shown himself of a broad-minded and truly catholic spirit, published the following article in his parish paper for June.

It is reprinted here with no desire to make trouble, but rather to present the truth as being of far more signlficance than the false and foolish stuff that sometimes appears in Protestant papers about the Roman Catholic Church.

This paper has no fear concerning the fantastic plans, plots, and conspiracies often ascribed to the Pope and his advisers. The stories which are circulated about them arise either from ignorance or from motives that cannot bear the light.

But what Dr. Jefferson has written is neither ignorant nor mercenary. It is a plain statement of fact, with the proofs easily within reach of any interested person.—Editor of the Northwestern.)

Why are Protestants so prejudiced and so bitter against Roman Catholics? The question is not a fair one because it smuggles into the mind a false assumption. It assumes that all Protestants are prejudiced and bitter. This is not the case.

The question should be put in this form: "Why are so many Protestants prejudiced against Roman Catholics, and why are some of them so bitter?" The answer is that there are various reasons, five of the most important of which are here given:

1. The Roman Catholic hierarchy maintains an insolent attitude toward the Protestant Church. The Roman Church officially turns her back on us. She gives us the cold shoulder. She refuses to recognize us. She will have nothing to do with us.

She denies that we are a true church at all. We have no place whatever in the real Church of Christ. Our ministers are not successors of the apostles. They have no right to officiate at the Lord's Supper. Our sacraments are not valid.

There is only one true Church of Christ in the world, and the Roman Catholic Church is it. Many Popes have said this. The present Pope said it again only the other day.

Such conduct awakens resentment. In some it stirs up bitterness. To Protestants it seems an odious form of bigotry. So long as the Roman Catholic Church maintains this attitude, she is debarred from saying anything against the bigotry of Protestants.

2. The Roman Catholic Church officially refuses to fellowship with Protestants in any religious council or conference. She will not allow her bishops and priests to sit down with Protestant bishops and pastors to talk over the urgent problems with which the Church of Christ in our day has to deal.

Only the other day she declined to send even one delegate to meet in Lausanne with the representatives of the other branches of the Christian church throughout the world. It was the greatest Christian conference held in the last four hundred years, but the Roman Catholic Church alone refused to have anything to do with it.

Such intolerance awakens resentment. It renders some hearts bitter.

3. The Roman Catholic Church refuses in every community throughout the United States to join with the Protestants in any form of distinctly religious work or worship.

All union prayer meetings are ruled out, and so are all union evangelistic campaigns, and so are all union Thanksgiving services, and so are all union Lenten observances. No priest dares to permit his people to unite with Protestants in public prayer.

Such snobbishness awakens resentment. It does not work toward good feeling. The surprising thing is not that there is so much anti-Catholic feeling among Protestants, but that there is so little.

4. The Roman Catholic hierarchy is the persistent and malignant enemy of the public school system. Roman Catholic bishops and priests and editors and theologians have, during the last fifty years, poured out on our public schools a flood of slander and abuse.

Now the public school system is dear to the native American heart. It is counted one of the corner stones of our greatness. We are proud of it. We prize it. When Roman Catholic priests year after year use disparaging and insulting language concerning one of our most revered institutions, it is not to be wondered at that the Protestant American heart protests. To read a volume filled with the utterances of prominent Roman Catholics on our public schools is sufficient to set the coldest Protestant heart ablaze.

This attitude of the priesthood is all the more galling because of the persistent policy of the Roman Catholic Church to shove into our public schools the largest number of Roman Catholic teachers possible. This is one of the sickening inconsistencies of Rome. She calls our schools godless and damnable and vile, and yet assiduously trains thousands of Roman Catholic girls to become teachers in these same ungodly schools.

There could be no better way to reduce Protestant prejudice against Romanism than for the Pope to call a halt in this everlsting denunciation of our public schools. Catholics obey when orders come from the top, and the fact that this attack on our schools goes steadily on is conclusive proof that the Vatican is willing to have the public schools in the United States incessantly traduced.

There are few things more wonderful in the American people than their inexhaustible patience in the presence of this pitiless storm of Catholic vituperation against our public schools.

5. Multitudes of Protestants are afraid of the Roman Catholic Church because of what the Popes have said in regard to the relations of church and State. The Pope is called the "Vicar of Christ." He alone is supposed to speak for Christ. What he says is binding on all the faithful.

We know what the Popes have said. Their encyclicals are public property. These have been reprinted again and again. Their contents are well known to all Protestant scholars. They make serious reading for every one who believes in the fundamental principles on which our republic is founded.

A recent volume by Charles C. Marshall, entield, "The Roman Catholic Church in the Modern State," published by Dodd, Mead & Co., has brought the most important of the papal utterances within the reach of the ordinary reader. This book is not likley to reduce the Protestant prejudice against the Roman Catholic Church.

When we listen to the Pope we listen to the Roman Catholic Church. He speaks for the entire church. He speaks with authority. He is supreme. The opinions of a Roman Catholic layman in regard to the doctrine or government of his church count for nothing. He has absolutely nothing to do with shaping the policy of his church. The policy is determined entirely by clergymen. The programs are made in Rome. All the Roman Catholic laymen of the United States are a mere cipher when it comes to deciding what shall be believed and what shall be done.

It is because all these highest matters are held tight in the fist of a coterie of Spanish and Italian ecclesiastics that many American Protestants are not at all quiet in their mind in regard to the future.

All these things should be borne in mind by our Roman Catholic brethren when they find themselves the objects of Protestant suspicion and ill-will.

There are tens of thousands of Roman Catholics who have never read a papal encyclical and who know nothing of the theories of the Roman Catholic theologians. They have in their hearts nothing of the bigotry and snobbishness for which the hierarchy stands. One of them, a priest, recently has written a series of articles for the Atlantic Monthly which both Catholics and Protestants should read.

Many Catholics are steadfast friends of the public schools, and cannot be cajoled even by threats of damnation into sending their children to the parochial school.

There are millions of Roman Catholics under our flag who love their country as deeply, and who are as loyal to it in thought and feeling as any of the descendants of the Protestant founders of New England. It must often puzzle such Catholics to understand why so many Protestants are afraid of them, and look down on the Roman Catholic religion as a menace to our republic. It is only fair that these Catholics should be offered an explanation.

Protestants are not senseless creatures who set themselves without provocation against their fellow-citizens. They are not a gang of fanatics and bigots hostile to all who differ from them in religious faith and practice.

But they are human beings and they have self-respect, and they rightly protest against the official attitude of the Roman Catholic hierarchy. They are also justifiably fearful of the power of a close corporation of astute ecclesiastics who are dominated in their thinking by a foreigner who is held in the grip of the traditions of the mediaval world.

There are multitudes of Protestants who have only kindly feelings for their Roman Catholic brethren, and who lament deeply the tragedy of a divided Christendom. There is a greater measure of generous feeling among the Protestants of the United States toward those outside their fold than in any other equally large body of religious people to be found on the face of the earth.

The contrast between the treatment of Protestants in Roman Catholic countries and that of Roman Catholics in Protestant countries is astonishing. Thousands of Protestants deprecate all bitter feeling and all violent language; they repudiate all unfounded rumors and all slanderous gossip; and they despise all rivalries and trickeries of every sort.

These Protestants do their utmost to discourage all such movements as the K. K. K., and refuse to read venomous sheets filled with cheap and lying anti-Catholic propaganda. They do what they can to keep the atmosphere calm and the heart sweet; but their work is most difficult because of the mischief created by the operation of the forces mentioned above.

When Catholics claim that Protestants do not know them, they should remember that this is largely the fault of the Roman Catholic policy. Roman Catholics when obedient to their superiors studiously hold aloof from their Protestant brethren. They will not co-operate with them in work for Christ. They follow the policy of segregation. Catholics are not allowed to worship with Protestants. Even their children must be educated apart from other children, thus deepening the chasm and laying the foundation for still more distressing misunderstandings and alienations.

If the Roman Catholic hierarchy were only a little less bigoted and intolerant and snobbish, and a little more friendly and sociable and co-operative, there would come into our political and social and religious life an invigorating and cleansing spirit which would make many things new.

Both sides have sinned, grievously and often. The time has come for repentance.—The Northwestern Christian Advocate, Aug. 2, 1928.

Many students in the Methodist school at Huchow, China, elected to take a course in Comparative Religion during the spring term. This is one sign of a marked change of attitude on the part of the Chinese of that section, for during the fall term there were no courses in religion even offered in the school. To-day in Huchow the most cordial relations exist between the Chinese and the missionaries, although it is little more than a year ago since the missionaries were forced to become refugees.

The Home Circle.

WHAT ARE YOU HERE FOR?

If you've never made another have a happier time in life,
If you've never helped a brother through his struggle and his strife;
If you've never been a comfort to the weary and the worn,
Will you tell us what you're here for in this lovely land of morn!

If you've never made the pathway of some neighbor glow with sun,
If you've never brought a buhbie to some fellow heart with fun;
If you've never cheered a toiler that you tried to help along,
Will you tell us what you're here for in this lovely land of song!

If you've never made a comrade feel the world a sweeter place
Because you lived within it and had served it with your grace;
If you've never heard a woman or a little child proclaim
A blessing on your bounty—you're a poor hand at the game!

—Folger McKinsey, in Exchange.

THE ACCOMMODATING GIRL.

Have you noticed how friends flock to a girl who is accommodating—the girl who is always willing to help her mates, and the girl who never wastes time in dodging, but who says, "Oh, I will do that?"

This reminds me of what Grandma Henderson said of two grocers. She said: "Mr. Salter has a great big store, with everything fixed up fine, but he has no accommodation. Now, the store of old Silas Thorpe needs painting and his stock is small, but he is so accommodating. He says to me, 'Now, Grandma, I am out of your brand of tea, but I'll get it for you;' and then he sends clear to the city for a single pound of tea for a dried-up old woman like me."

Julia Whitney is one girl who is certainly swift to help, share, accommodate. Listen to her as she exclaims eagerly: "Oh, girls, Miss Cooper has just taught me that new Venetian stitch, and it makes the most beautiful work! Come up to the house to-night and I will teach it to you." Did not every girl in school have a big red apple when her Uncle Jason sent her a bushel from his big farm in Maine? Yes, and I have been told that the boys of her acquaintance fared equally well. As one boy said, "A red apple from a true-blue girl."

Blocks and blocks out of her way Julia traveled to do a small errand for crippled Mrs. Harper, who must sit in her wheeled chair all day. Julia said to her mother: "I would run my feet off for that dear, patient Mrs. Harper, who always smiles and says, 'Thank you, my dear.'"

What a contrast to Julia we find in Carrie Adams! It is no wonder that she lacks friends, for she does nothing to keep them. She has fine clothing and a beautiful face—not a single wart on her hands or freckle on her face—and still she lacks friends. Jack Scott said of Carrie, "She would make a splendid female Robinson Crusoe on a desert island." No wonder she gets lonesome, thinking of self all the time. At school, when her chum exclaimed, "There, I must have left my pencil at home!" this selfish girl said to herself, "Well, I don't want Edna to use my freshly sharpened pencil." The upshot of the matter was that she hid the pencil, and when Edna said, "May I borrow your pencil?" she replied, "Why, my pencil was right here on the desk, but I can't see it anywhere now!" She takes no pains to please or to help, then she grumbles loudly because she is not popular with her mates. As we think of the two girls we say, "Look on this picture, then on that."—George W. Tuttle, in Religious Telescope.

CULTIVATING THE HABIT OF KINDNESS.

By Ruth L. Frankel.

The game started when mother overheard Alice and Tommy discussing how fervently they disliked Johnny Randall.

"He's a bad boy," Tommy said. "He comes over to play with me and breaks my toys."

"Let's chase him home next time," volunteered Alice.

Right here mother stepped in. "Why, children," she said, "what makes you say such unkind things? You know Johnny is very fond of you both and that he loves to come over. And I'm sure you'd miss him if he stopped coming. He is a bit rough, but if you ask him to be more careful, I think he'd try to be more careful. He is a brave little fellow. You have both noticed it and told me about it. You cry sometimes when you hurt yourselves, but I've never seen Johnny whine or cry about anything. Have you? He's always smiling and always cheerful. I'm glad he comes to play with you, and I think it would be a fine thing, if you're talking about him, to think of all the nice things you can say of him and forget the bad ones. We all have faults, but it isn't kind to talk of them."

So it started. That was several years ago. Whenever Tommy and Alice talked about any one they thought of the nice things to say. "If you can't say something pleasant," mother counseled, "don't say anything."

The habit has grown. The two children really look for the pleasant side of every one, and it is a long time since they have said unfavorable things about anybody, old or young, thoughtlessly or as a pastime. And since they are looking for pleasant things in people they always find them, while every one remarks what sweet children they have grown to be. This does not mean, however, that the attitude of critical-mindedness so necessary for personal growth and right choice of associates has been neglected. Historical and fictitious characters have been discussed freely, but always with charity and an attempt to get more than one point of view. This helps them to see their neighbors and friends in their true characters and to say about them only those things which are worth saying.

Not long ago a new boy joined Tommy's class at school.

"Gee, he looks like a sis!" growled one of the children.

"Let's haze him a bit," suggested another.

"I think he looks all right," promptly offered Tommy. "I bet he's just a regular guy feeling terribly shy and lost here, and he's all dressed 'cause they've just moved here and his mother wants him to make a good impression. Let's be nice to him and see."

They followed Tommy's advice and found he was right. Charlie was a "regular fellow" and soon was a favorite. He was spared many unhappy moments owing to one mother's thoughtful method of training her children always to think the best of the other fellow.—Zion's Herald.

STORM CLOUD AND SUNSHINE.

By W. B. Alien.

"I'm afraid Little Storm Cloud is here this morning. I wish Little Sunshine would come back."

Polly Earle knew what her father meant, as she scrambled into her seat at the breakfast table. She was late, she had been cross while mamma was helping her dress, and her forehead was puckered in a scowl.

Besides, it was raining, and on this Saturday holiday she had expected to have a ride in her grandfather's big automobile.

The buckwheat cakes and syrup were nice, however, and the frown soon faded out. Then she forgot her troubles in helping with the more delicate china cups, which her mother entrusted to her. Best of all, the sun came out, and she had her ride.

In the afternoon Polly had planned to play dolls with a very special friend of hers, across the street; but as she was getting ready to go out, there was a ring at the door-bell, and two little cousins, younger than herself, appeared, to spend the afternoon. Polly did not like them very well, but there was no help for it—she must entertain her guests, and give up the doll party.

"O dear!" she said to herself. Then she remembered her father's remark at breakfast, and made up her mind to do her best.

It was not easy, but Polly kept at her task, and brought out her dolls and playthings for the little cousins, and before she knew it she was really having a good time herself.

With many good-bye kisses, and wearing the brightest of faces, the small cousins went at last, and Polly, with a long sigh of relief, put away her dolls. But although she was tired, her heart was light, because she had been trying to make others happy.

At supper Mr. Earle glanced across the table.

"Ah," said he, "my precious little Sunshine has come back."

"Yes," said her mother, smiling. "Polly, without knowing it, has been living out a part of her to-morrow's Golden Text. I will bless thee * * * and be thou a blessing."—The Sunbeam.

"PICKLED GRUDGES."

By Kate W. Hamilton.

When one is somewhat deaf, and also unwilling to admit the infirmity, odd complications are liable to arise. While the two girls chatted gayly in the window seat, Aunt Maria, in her chair by the fireside, occasionally raised her eyebrows and looked puzzled, but she said nothing until the visitor had departed. Then her long-delayed question came:

"Elizabeth, what is a pickled grudge?"

"Why, I'm sure I don't know, auntie. I never heard of such a thing. Oh"—with a sudden enlightening thought—"do you mean what we were talking about? That was peanut fudge."

Nevertheless, though Aunt Maria was evidently chagrined, and though the article she thought she had heard mentioned is not among the recipes given in any cookbook, it does exist and is served only too frequently by families and individuals. While human nature is what it is, and points of view differ so widely, misunderstandings will occur, and there will be hurts and grievances.

Really, forgiveness is not so hard a duty as we often imagine; it is more a habit, that can be cultivated, of letting little wrongs and unkindnesses drop out of our minds, and refusing to be troubled by them or turn them into grudges. Any feeling toward others but that of good will eats into the soul that cherishes it. No one can injure us without injuring himself more, and we in our turn cannot entertain bitterness and resentment without harming ourselves far more than the one whom we consider our enemy. If we would have our days sweet, our souls strong, our brains clear, we must put anger in all its forms out of our lives, and learn to be too generous to harbor animosity. No spirit can thrive on a diet of "pickled grudges."—Exchange.

Alice's church school teacher thought it would be a good idea to teach her class of ten-year-olds how to take notes. Providing each with paper and pencils she told them, in simple English, the story of the spies that Moses sent out on their forty days' trek to discover the possibilities of Canaan. Alice returned home to show her mother her first attempt at reporting. "But what is this?" said her mother. "Ten brought back only a bag of pork?" "That is what she said," persisted the child. On questioning the teachers, it was discovered that it was a pure case of assonance. The "bag of pork" was "a bad report."—Zion's Herald.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Editor was called out of the city on Monday of this week, and had to leave the work of writing this column in other hands.

Dr. R. H. Bennett, president of Lander College, is assisting Rev. J. K. Walker in a meeting at Ridge Springs, from August 5 to 12.

Dr. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District, has been assisting Rev. R. L. Clayton, our pastor at Patterson, La., in a meeting at Jeanerette.

It is reported that Dr. John J. Tigert, Commissioner of Education for the United States, has resigned to accept the presidency of the University of Florida.

Rev. Wm. Schuhle, our pastor at Kentwood, La., is visiting in North Carolina, and will attend the Laymen's meeting at Lake Junaluska, which will be held Aug. 19-26.

From the "Big Brother" of Greenville, Miss., we learn that Mrs. Ernest Barbay was called to New Orleans last week on account of the death of her brother, Mr. Lewis A. Talley.

We call special attention to the notice of the meeting of the executive committee of the Mississippi Conference Board of Church Extension—that it is to be at Hattiesburg, and not at Jackson, where it is usually held.

Rev. R. A. Bozeman is to assist Rev. L. N. Hoffpauir in a revival at Bunkie, beginning the 3rd Sunday in August. Mr. Lesley Spinks, of Shreveport, will lead the singing and Mrs. R. A. Bozeman will have charge of the children's services.

Rev. S. A. Seegers, our pastor at Slidell, La., called at the Advocate office on July 31. Brother Seegers is now at Lake Junaluska, and will attend the great laymen's meeting which is to be held there Aug. 19-26 under the auspices of the Board of Lay Activities.

A note from Mrs. P. H. Grice, dated at Hattiesburg, Miss., Aug. 7, says: "Rev. P. H. Grice, of Collins Methodist Church, was operated on at South Mississippi Infirmary on Sunday, Aug. 5, for acute appendicitis. He is doing very well, but still suffers a great deal."

Rev. John Rasmussen has been left in charge of the church at Delhi, La., by consent of all parties involved, and Rev. Byron Roberts, resident of Talluiah and graduate this year of Asbury College, has been appointed to Columbia charge. Bishop Candler has approved these appointments.

A uote received from Rev. T. B. Thrower states that "Mary Ann was born this morning (Aug. 6) at 1:05, weighing 8 pounds. Mother and daughter doing nicely." Blessings on the little lady. Brother Thrower is pastor of the Evansville and Dubbs Charge, North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. O. L. Jones, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, sends the following announcement for publication: "Rev. S. G. Jones, who has been connected with the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League since February of this year has resigned. I do not know his plans for the future."

The following paragraph is taken from the "Big Brother" of Greenville, Miss.: "Our pastor, Rev. J. E. Cunningham, had the misfortune of falling and receiving severe bruises while fishing down at 'The Dam' at lower part of Lake Washington. He is a game 'young fellow' and says he did not get hurt much. We hope he will be more fortunate next time when he chases fish over the dam."

The editor thanks Rev. and Mrs. Clarence Norman Guice, of Conway, Ark., for an invitation to the marriage and reception of their daughter Erma Tucker to Mr. William Curt Buthman, which is to take place on Thursday, the 23rd of August, 1928, at the home of the bride's parents in Conway, Ark. The Advocate extends best wishes to the young people for a long, useful and happy life.

Rev. Jas. M. Lewis, pastor of the Methodist Church at Rolling Fork, Miss., writes under date of Aug. 9: "Rev. C. F. Jones, our Conference evangelist, and his singer, Mr. S. E. Flowers, are closing out a very successful campaign here with me at Rolling Fork. They have been with me for two weeks and I have never had more enthusiastic and better helpers than they. They go from here to Midway in Yazoo County and will hold a circuit-wide revival on the Benton charge next week. Our church is progressing nicely here."

Rev. J. L. Neill, pastor of Crawford Street Church, Vicksburg, Miss., writes under date of August 7: "We buried 'Mother' Howe, as she was affectionately known throughout Vicksburg, at 5 p.m. yesterday. Crawford Street Church was crowded and the flowers were banked high about the altar and casket. It was a loving tribute from Jew and Gentile, Roman Catholic and Protestant. Her husband had been in the glory land 48 years. She was 98 years, 5 months and 20 days old, but could read without glasses and her physical and mental alertness was better than many of us at 60."

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, the genial presiding elder of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference, writes under date of Aug. 6: "We've had and are having great revivals in this district. All pastors are becoming evangelists—their own and their neighboring pastors' evangelists. They are getting down to what we used to have and lost awhile, the very clear, positive evangelistic note in their preaching. They are helping each other and having fine success. . . . Brother Goudelock at Shaw had Evangelist Butts of Memphis in a three weeks' siege and a great meeting. In all he has reaped a wonderful ingathering, a hundred and more joining his two churches. . . . The work goes on and prospers in the old Greenville district. . . . Our New Orleans Advocate is not patronized as it should be, and this is our shame as a Methodist constituency, that the roster of subscribers is not ten times larger. It will be better directly."

The Seashore Camp Meeting came to a close last Sunday evening in a blaze of glory, the large tabernacle being inadequate to accommodate the crowd that came to hear Rev. Luther Bridgers preach and Siguor Mario Cappelli sing. Rev. J. L. Sells, presiding elder of the Seashore District, had charge of the meeting, and was ably assisted in its conduct by Rev. W. M. Sullivan, pastor of Main Street Church, Biloxi. Opening on the evening of August 2, two services a day were held—at 11 a.m. and 7:45 p.m. On the closing Sunday there was an afternoon service also. All of the preaching was done by the Rev. Luther Bridgers, general evangelist, of Gainesville, Ga. His sermons were forceful and convincing, and were well received by those in attendance. At the start the singing was led by Rev. W. M. Sullivan and Rev. H. L. Daniels, but on Aug. 6 the noted Italian-American tenor, Signor Mario Cappelli, came and captured the large congregations with his solo singing, which was of a high order. Some of the preachers attending the camp meeting were Rev. W. W. Moore, of Seventh Avenue, Meridian; Rev. C. W. Wesley, of Purvis, Miss.; Rev. W. W. Murray, of Coalville, Miss.; Rev. W. R. Harvell, of Hammond, La.; Rev. H. L. Daniels, of Wesley Memorial, Biloxi, Miss.; Rev. Randolph Saucier, pastor at Mississippi City; Rev. Victor G. Clifford, of Gulfport; Rev. W. G. Forsythe and Rev. J. L. Jordan, of Biloxi; Rev. W. L. Duren, of Atlanta, Ga.; Rev. W. L. Linfield, of Ocean Springs, and Rev. H. T. Carley.

A NOTE OF THANKS.

Dear Brother Carley: Mrs. White and I take this opportunity to thank the preachers in the Mississippi Conference who clubbed together to give us the much appreciated fifty dollars in gold. Not knowing their names (it was collected by Brother Gray), this is the only way we have to thank them. Also, we thank the Class of '89 for their splendid gift in gold, brought to us by Brother Barney Lewis, one of our class. It is just like them to remember a comrade of thirty-nine years in the way. Our golden anniversary was a great success.

HAZLEHURSTS' NEW CHURCH TO OPEN SEPTEMBER 23.

Dear Brother Carley: Please say in the Advocate that the people of Hazlehurst, Miss., will open the beautiful new Methodist church to the public on September 23rd, with Bishop Warren A. Candler, D.D., preaching at the 10:30 a.m. and 7:45 p.m. hours.

All former pastors of the church are hereby cordially invited to be present on that occasion as our guests. All who plan to come will please notify me some days ahead of time. Brother Reuben Millsaps, who is making his home at this time in Louisiana, is the oldest living member of the church here and will be specially invited to be on hand.

We want you to be with us as the representative of our church paper.

CHAS. W. CRISLER.

FROM REV. CLAUDE K. SMITH.

Dear Dr. Carley: Something of unusual interest happened in my church on July 5, which I dare say has ever happened in any of our Methodist churches in the State of Louisiana since the beginning of her history. I had the unusual pleasure of receiving into my church Dr. Irvin Ward Stieneman, a regularly ordained Jewish Rabbi, who was ordained into the Jewish Rabbinical priesthood in the city of Jerusalem.

Dr. Stieneman is making application to our church for license to preach and most likely will apply for membership in the Annual Conference this fall. He speaks, reads and writes several languages and in my judgment will be a very valuable man in our ministry.

Yours in the Master's service,

CLAUDE K. SMITH.

REV. J. WILSON BROWN—AN APPRECIATION.

Rev. J. Wilson Brown, son of Rev. Thomas W. Brown, of the Mississippi Conference, was born in Bayou Sara, La., in the early part of 1858. His early childhood and boyhood were spent in the ante-bellum home of his father near Woodville, Miss. The fact that few parsonages and small salaries were the lot of the itinerant preacher of that day made it necessary that most of the married preachers have their own home, if they continued in the active work. The home in which young Wilson and Paul and seven others were reared was evidently one in which proper religious and moral influences prevailed. Two sons out of this home were given to the ministry, and the daughters of whom I have known were all exemplary and refined Christian characters. Brother Brown was converted when still a small boy, and early gave himself to the work of the ministry. I do not have at hand complete data as to his fields of labor. He was my pastor when I applied for membership at Blackwater church at eight years of age. He was then serving the East Baton Rouge circuit, now the Baker circuit on the Baton Rouge District. His were the first sermons that ever impressed me; I remember that his father was assisting him in our meeting at Blackwater, and fainted in the pulpit, when he stepped up into his pulpit and took up the sermon and went on with it to the end. Some other circuits that he served were Covington, La.; Wesley Chapel, Natchez, and Washington and Percy's Creek, Miss. After he was superannuated about 1902, he supplied Gilbert, La., and later on the Springfield circuit, Louisiana.

Brother Brown seemed to have a genius for spirituality. His fort was more a knowledge of God and his life in the soul than a towering intellect, but be was well versed in the Methodist theology that pertains to the spiritual life. To hear him pray was to feel the presence of God. To talk to him in ordinary conversation was to obtain a new view into some spiritual truth. He said he supposed that he was peculiar in trusting God for special, even minute providences.

Brother Brown's ambition was to be useful. His last move of which I know was to get into position to help a needy country Sunday school where he had served forty years before as pastor. And his ministry was a veritable benediction to old Blackwater church. He was affectionately known on our circuit as "Little Brown" from the time he served it until he returned as a superannuate to render his last service.

As his end approached he wrote to his only living sister, Mrs. J. Kellog, at Boyle, Miss.: "I seem to know more who have crossed over than are on this side of Jordan." Near his seventieth birthbe wrote again: "I must be brushing the dew on Jordan's banks; eternity grips me more and more." "I have made no note of all the past. Doubtless I shall be ready to exclaim, 'Lord, when did I,' etc."

There was a gap of forty years from my early childhood when he was my pastor, until 1924, when he was within the bounds of my work on the Batou Rouge District, during which I saw him only once. I cannot therefore give any adequate account of his work. And I have little data. I heard him preach in 1926 at Bluff Creek Camp meeting, on the text "Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand in the evil day." I have heard few persons that surpassed for spiritual power his treatment of "the evil days" in that text. He was talking out of his heart, and it reached the heart of many who heard.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. S. H. Brown, of Baton Rouge; his two children, and his sister, Mrs. J. H. Kellog, of Boyle, Miss.

On Saturday, July 7, 1928, be passed to his reward from the Baton Rouge General Sanitarium, and was buried on Sunday, July 8, in the Magnolia cemetery, Baton Rouge, La.

Protection Against Old Age

REV. S. D. HOWARD—A TRIBUTE.

By Elzar C. Cargill.

It is not a difficult matter to write of a friend whose life has long borne every indication of the reality of the Christian religion. One only had to be associated with this faithful man of God to know that his devotion was profound, his faith was unshaken, his love was abounding. His ideals in the gospel ministry were high and sacred. God called him to preach, and during all these years he remained faithful to the trust committed to him. He uot only prepared his sermons well, but in the hour of delivery those of us who sat under his ministry knew that he was conscious of the presence and power of the blessed Holy Spirit.

Few men enjoyed preaching more than he did. His prayer life so abounded in holy fellowship with his Lord, he heard and felt the wooings of the Spirit. The testimony of hundreds of people who knew him testify to his earnestness and loyalty to a cause worthy of the best activity of one's life.

We were life-long friends, that is from the early years of his ministry until God called him home. His last message during a revival meeting was on the subject of prevailing prayer. What a beautiful climax to a life of faith and prayer! His devotion to his good wife and children, to his church, and to his vast number of friends, will linger with us as long as we live.

Brother Howard was born in Palmetto County, Georgia, Sept. 3, 1865, and passed to his heavenly reward in Columbia, La., July 25. He was happily married to Miss Katie Worry, Jan. 20, 1887. To this union were born six children, four of whom survive him: Miss Clara Howard, of Columbia; Mrs. W. L. Trenchard, of Queency, Fla.; Finis Howard, of Winnsboro, and Harney, of Columbia. His faithful wife and children are comforted in the fact of knowing they were kind and thoughtful to him, and their home was a home of love and devotion to each other and to God.

For twenty-four years he has been an active pastor of the Louisiana Conference. He was loved and appreciated by his brethren in the ministry, and by his congregations whom he served.

I shall miss his letters, and his prayers for me. In his early ministry he was a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, and also was an evangelist for a number of years. In my study to-day my mind goes to his good family, and I shall ever have a deep concern for their welfare and happiness.

His last resting place at Winnsboro, La., will be a sacred spot to many who loved him. Farewell, dear friend, for a little while. We will see you beyond the shadow of death. May God cheer and comfort his good wife and the children.

PROGRESS OF MISSION WORK IN NEW ORLEANS.

On April 1, I was appointed in charge of our mission work in New Orleans. Since then, we have organized two splendid Sunday schools, one at Lakeview and the other on Galliер Street. We organized a church near the Industrial Canal on July 1. We are getting very gratifying results. Our church at Reserve, where we have services every Sunday morning, is also getting along splendidly.

We sincerely appreciate the efficient leadership of our presiding elder, the help and advice of our missionary secretary, the assistance of our faithful pastors, and the co-operation of our loyal Methodists in this great forward missionary enterprise in the city of New Orleans.

A. J. MARTIN, City Missionary.

AN EDUCATION FROM A NICKEL.

A young girl in Mississippi asked her brother to give her the money to go to college. He told her that he could not afford it, and, tossing her a nickel, added, "Unless you can go on that."

The lucky girl took the five-cent piece and bought some calico, from which she made a bonnet that she sold for twenty-five cents. It should be added that this happened some years ago. With this money she bought some more calico, and made more bonnets. After she had made several dollars in this way, she determined to raise potatoes. She did all the work in the field except the plowing. The venture was a success, and she had enough money to start to school. She did not stop working, however, and it is not surprising that a girl of such determination was able to borrow enough money to supplement what she made.

She graduated with honor from the State College for Women, attended a medical school, still earning her expenses, got her degree, and is now a successful practicing physician in a large town in the South, and it all began with a nickel.—Selected.

UNION MEETING AT HICO.

Beginning July 5, there was held a two weeks' union revival at Hico.

Great interest was manifested by both Baptists and Methodists. Plans and preparations were begun months preceding the meeting for true worship and comfort. The day services were held in the auditorium, and night services were held under God's glittering mantle.

The pastors of the two churches, Rev. Mr. Brackman, of Haynesville, La., and Rev. Mr. Waitman, of Dubach, La., alternately delivered the messages. These two were great, self-sacrificing leaders. God, through these leaders, overcame the laggards in the town and all other barriers, and a great victory was the result, with twenty-two accepting Christ. "Each sermon was one of thoughtfulness, earnestness, and evident love. There was information, illustration, and power. Every sermon was seasoned with spice, salted with prayer, and served hot with conviction. Under such preaching the mind glows, the heart melts, and the soul feels itself to be in the presence of God."

The letters spelling u-n-i-o-n were exercised in winning souls for Christ, prayer, Sunday school, songs and offering.

As a result of the revival a union prayer meeting will be held weekly. And it is the desire of the churches to be united as one again next summer. We covet the prayers of the Christian people of God's universe.

MENTIONING MELDER—IT CAN BE DONE.

The past eight months on the Melder charge have been full of activity. We started first by the publication of the Melder Messenger, which has been published monthly purely by faith, for the purpose of giving more general missionary news and local items of interest. It carried also "booster" articles for our building fund.

The district parsonage assessment of $18 was raised early in the year and sent in to the elder to help on needed repairs. The Cokesbury Training School at Hineston was a splendid success under Dr. A. S. Lutz and Rev. A. K. McLellan. Twelve received certificates.

The Melder charge parsonage now has a corrugated tin roof, a new 10x20 front porch, roof and steps, a new kitchen flue, and other minor improvements about the place. All of these improvements cost $210, which is paid except $14.

We have had three good revivals. The one at Forest Hill, held by the pastor, was well attended and much interest shown. The meeting at Fellowship church, held by Rev. W. A. Terry, of Jackson, Miss., was one of the best that the church has ever had. The attendance and interest were good from the beginning, and at some of the night services all of the people could not get into the church. Brother Terry did some fine preaching, and his work bore fruit. Twelve souls united with the church by vows, six of whom were baptized. The meeting at Melder, held by Rev. C. K. Smith, of Pineville, La., was of great spiritual uplift. Some of the services were held during showers, but the attendance throughout was splendid, especially the last three days. Two souls united with the church, one by letter and the other by vows.

When Annual Conference comes we feel that we shall be able to look with pride to our year's work.

CLAUDE H. MAYO, Pastor.

PROTESTANTISM IN BRAZIL.

The Protestant missionary forces in Brazil are attaining a standing in the national life of that country almost undreamed of ten years ago. The erudite faculty of philosophy of Rio de Janeiro, in connection with the exercises celebrating its fourth anniversary, was addressed by two Protestant ministers on the philosophy of religion. These were Professor Erasmo Braga, general secretary of the Protestant co-operative committee in Brazil, and Rev. Ephraim Rizzo, a local pastor.

Those of us accustomed to pursue the study of comparative religions in a sunny corner of some library with a book in our hands would be quite startled by the recent course in that subject in Rio de Janeiro, where the methods of North American platform evangelism were applied in a series of public meetings occupying an entire week. Each evening an authorized representative of one of the principal religions of Rio de Janeiro occupied the platform with an exposition of the doctrines of his cult. This unique experiment was initiated by the Spiritualists and participated in by representatives of the Mohammedans, Theosophists, Catholics, and Protestants. The Protestant representative was Professor Braga, and the Catholic speaker Dr. Ernesto Benevides, a prominent leader of the local hierarchy.

These meetings received considerable newspaper publicity in Rio de Janeiro, and afforded a wonderful opportunity for the presentation of the evangelical position to the people of that great city, which has been selected for the next World's Sunday School Convention in 1932.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF MISS PAULINE WYNN, SECRETARY OF METHODIST STUDENTS' LEAGUE, MISSISSIPPI STATE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN.

(Note: Inasmuch as our Conference helps to maintain this secretaryship a part of Miss Wynn's report should be enjoyed by our missionary women.—Mrs. L. W. Alford.)

Six hundred and four Methodist students have been enrolled at Mississippi State College for Women in the course of this session, 1927-28. The Student Secretary (Miss Wynn) has visited all of these students during the year, has addrssed 163 groups, attended several conferences of professional religious workers, has had conference with a large number of girls who who have called at her office to consult about their problems, has met with all committees of the Student League and its unit organizations, and has taught a course in the Standard Training School.

The meetings of the Methodist Student League have been held this session in the Central Methodist Church of Columbus, but during the last two months of school a movement was inaugurated to raise funds for erecting a Methodist building for the League. Two hundred and fifty dollars have been raised to date and the campaign for funds will be continued.

There are five departments of the League's activities:

1. Devotional.

One hundred and sixty-nine prayer meetings, thirty-five worship services for Sunday school departments, seventy Epworth League services, eleven special devotional services. An average of twenty-two students per week have participated in the leadership of these devotional programs.

2. Service and Extension.

Under this head are included: Ministry to the sick and those in grief; participation in Methodist church services and church activities in Columbus; missionary service—correspondence with young people in our foreign fields, collection of missionary books and curios for the library; Life Service, conferences for Life Service Volunteers; a "Find Your Place" campaign, for helping new students; and community service, such as helping with Christmas tree for the poor and giving a Christmas pageant.

3. Recreation.

Includes all social activities—such as Epworth League parties, hikes, camp suppers, etc.

4. Study and Training.

Mission study, Bible study, Sunday school classes, Standard Training School, and other features.

5. Publicity.

Making of posters and scrapbooks, and reports of college activities.

The outlook for next year is particularly promising, with plans well laid for the work.

ZONE MEETING AT LEARNED, MISS.

The women of the Methodist churches of zone No. 3, Jackson District, held their second meeting of the year 1928, June 28, at Learned, with Mrs. John Bush, chairman, presiding.

We met in the beautiful and spacious home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bush. Breezes sweeping through the living-room and lovely flowers everywhere added greatly to our comfort and pleasure.

The meeting was called to order at 2:30, all singing, "Come, Thou Almighty King." A beautiful Bible reading and talk from the ninth chapter by our leader, Mrs. John Bush. Then we were led in prayer by Brother Applewhite, of Bolton church. Mrs. Robert Bush, in her own engaging manner, gave us most cordial greetings.

Our only regret was that our most efficient secretary, Mrs. J. O. Ware, of Edwards, could not be present owing to illness of two members of her family. She was greatly missed.

Minutes of Clinton zone meeting were read by Mrs. J. W. Ratliff, of Edwards.

Mrs. Bush brought to our attention many expansive ideas for the Jubilee year. Among them were: The organization of Jubilee societies; better and fuller plans for old organizations, a systematic study of Jubilee bulletins; deepening the spiritual life, and working with instead of for the heathen nations ("Nationals").

We were reminded of the two great national movements in our own country: Law Enforcement and World Peace. We were adjured by our chairman to seek diligently for the cause of war and to study earnestly for the cure.

Mrs. John Gaddis, of Bolton, gave us an exceedingly interesting report of the district conference held at Pelahatchie. Mrs. Phillips presided at the conference, and 85 per cent of the auxiliaries were represented by 100 delegates.

Mrs. Robbins, of Edwards, talked most instructively on "Organizing Children of the Church."

By request Miss Mary Henry and Mrs. J. L. Tatum, of Edwards, gave a surprising account of the many achievements and future plans of the Edwards auxiliary.

Round table discussion by Mrs. Applewhite, of Bolton; Mrs. Epperson, of Raymond; Mrs. Moss, of Oakley, and others, was greatly enjoyed.

All present decided to send a love offering to Miss Urania Pyron, our missionary who is to sail July 20 for Poland.

While a delicious luncheon was being served, we were charmed by a beautiful musical program, rendered by Mrs. Kreidineer, Misses Blocksum and Purvis.

After many expressions of gratitude for a most heneficial and enjoyable afternoon, we bade our hostess adieu. Our next meeting is to be at Reeves' Chapel, in October.

MRS. JOHN BUSH, Chairman.
MRS. JAMES W. RATLIFF,
Secretary Pro Tem.

"JUBILEE" SOCIETY AT HARMON, LA.

Our auxiliary is a "Jubilee Society," having been organized during this, the Jubilee year of 1928. We are a small band, living in an oil field town, but doing good work in every way.

Mrs. H. B. Wren, our District Secretary, was our special guest the second Monday in July. She gave us an inspirational talk on various phases of the work.

The following program was rendered: Devotional, Mrs. L. B. Moffette; roll call, answered by Scripture verses; Lord's Prayer, in unison; talk, "Why Missionary Education?" Mrs. A. A. Cohb; solo, Miss Annie Lee Ratliff; story, "Shine," Mrs. L. A. Hutchins; piano selection, Miss Inez Snead; talk, "Shifts of Emphasis," Mrs. W. C. McDonald; piano selection, Miss Evelyn Moffette; reading, Miss Marguerite Moffette; talk, Mrs. H. B. Wren.

During a delightful social hour delicious refreshments were served. Every one expressed great pleasure in the gathering.

MRS. W. C. McDONALD,
Superintendent of Publicity.

The meeting was presided over by the efficient and earnest District Secretary, Mrs. Frank Deceli. Representatives from most of the auxiliaries were present and gave encouraging reports.

The opening devotional service was conducted by Dr. B. F. Jones, a former presiding elder of the district.

The following named visitors were introduced by Mrs. Deceli: Dr. B. F. Jones, Dr. C. W. Crisler, Dr. George S. Winfield, Rev. N. S. Lotus, Rev. H. B. Perritt, Mr. Frank Deceli, and Rev. T. M. Ainsworth.

Mrs. Deceli has effected a good organization and the zone chairmen were responsible for the excellent program presented.

Mrs. Herlong spoke of the Jubilee Book Shelf, strongly advising that every auxiliary secure one set.

Mrs. Matthews, of Bude, gave a splendid review of "Spiritual Adventuring," written by Bertha Conde. It gave every one an earnest desire to read the book. Mrs. Deceli, in a few words, gave the book superlative endorsement.

Mrs. McGehee, of Bude, spoke of the inspiration the auxiliary found in Mrs. Bessie W. Lipscomb's page in the Voice, "Spiritual Cultivation."

Mrs. V. M. Roby, of Tylertown, made a fine talk on the joy of Jubilee membership, an appreciitive study of fifty years of missionary history.

Mrs. Ainsworth, of Osyka, presented the Jubilee standard for children and

NERVOUS HEADACHE

Kentuckian Tells How Taking Black-Draught Relieved His Pains and How Well He Feels Now.

Waynesburg, Ky.—How a few doses of Thedford's Black-Draught brought relief to a man who had been suffering from frequent spells of severe headache, is told below in the statement of Mr. Charles F. Todd, of Estesburg, near this place.

"I was suffering with nervous headaches. About once a week I would have these headaches, and have to quit work, and go to bed for about twenty-four hours. I would have pains in my neck, and right behind my right ear.

"A merchant at Estesburg saw me one day when I was suffering, and told me to try taking Black-Draught, which I did.

"I took a package home that night, and took a few doses. It relieved me. From that time on, I would take Black-Draught as soon as I felt like I was going to have one of those headaches—and they wouldn't come on.

"Every few weeks, I take three or four doses of Black-Draught, and I feel so well, and do my work, and don't lose any more time with headache.

"I haven't had a headache in six months."

Thedford's BLACK-DRAUGHT for Constipation Indigestion, Biliousness

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Several of our dependable schools are planning to observe Sunday School Day this month; others are determined to observe the day in September; possibly a few will be forced to wait until October. The school that puzzles us is the one that observes the day and holds the offering. No amount of writing, no kind of pleading seems to move the parties in authority. We can only pray the Lord to be merciful toward them and wait their own good time.

Let some good man write a card saying he is going to have his school observe Childhood and Youth Week. Read the Workers' Council, the Magazine, the Elementary Teacher, and other periodicals for information. You remember the song, "Take Time to be Holy?" All time used for the work of the kingdom is the interpretation of the song. Holiness is doing the will of the Lord in all things at all times. A holy heart must be expressed by holy conduct; the conduct is the root of the matter.

By the latter part of this month the scattered forces will be returning to the base of operations. There is no way to make up for lost time, but we can use the time we have left to the best advantage. It will require an unusual amount of earnest praying to organize ourselves and concentrate the whole of ourselves upon the task given us.

When a church is so taken up with the ordinary events of the day it does not have time to stop and tarry a time in prayer and study for the better preparation of the work, that church is in a bad way. One cannot help but ask, what good came out of the past efforts toward this end? Human nature is a puzzle to the wisest. The bottom of it all is nothing less than sin. Never forget it, "the wages of sin is death." No creed, no theology, no psychology can change this immutable, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap." The harvest may be delayed, but reaping time must come.

Last Sunday was spent at Wade's school house, near Drew. The denominations use a large school building for their Sunday school and preaching services. The Methodists and Baptists are working together harmoniously when they are not disturbed by some over-zealous and misguided outsider. This school enrolled near 600 boys and girls last term. These people are tenants on the large plantations, but these boys and girls are ready to respond to religious teaching. It is no small problem to care for them as they come and go, but our preachers and Sunday school workers are trying to give these young people some instruction.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

It was the pleasure and profit of the Conference Superintendent to teach a class at the Sarepta church, Hermanville charge, Vicksburg District. These good people were very much interested in the work and did a fine piece of work. This Sunday school has a wonderful opportunity, and it is hoped that they will enter into it. It is situated in between places, and there are quite a number of people who live adjacent to the church who could, and we trust will, attend this Sunday school.

The reports from the various workers in the Cokesbury schools are gratifying. Many of them are entering into the life of the communities in a way that will tell for years to come. The work being done is of a high order, and it is commendable that the people respond so graciously. It is hard to say at this time just what the final count will be, but we are hoping that we will have held seventy-five schools and have at least 600 credits when it is all over. This we feel is the best use of our money we could possibly make.

I am hopeful that next year we can double this without any effort on our part whatsoever. We are going to have workers who will understand better how to go about it, and we feel sure they will be eager to do the work.

The most distressful state of affairs faces us. Our income from the Dual Extension money is way below all expectations. We are not able to report from all sources what we have been having to spend at home. This means that the Board will be more hard pressed for money. We launched a program fully expecting the Sunday schools to maintain at least their contributions of last year; and to find them falling below by half is distressing. I trust all who read these lines will become interested and will join in prayer that the spirit of missions fail not and that we have the privilege and opportunity of making progress in this great and needy work. There are those who have held their offerings, and possibly this will account for some of this deficit, but not all of it. It is entirely too large a slump to be explained satisfactorily.

Our church cannot afford to allow so fine a start to do a big thing in a big way for the cause of religious education for a whole world to fail.

Our offerings for Sunday School Day have been gratifying. We are hoping that the increase here will aid us materially. Mr. Hull is doing a great work. Aid him to reach those places never reached before and to go where there are no schools and give him a chance to reach the people there.

How much can $16,000 do? It depends how it is used and who uses it. If you wish to see a wise expenditure of this amount of money, go to McComb City and ask to look upon Pearl River Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This building grows upon one. When you realize what they have done with their money you cannot help but wonder how it could be done. The plans are good. There is adequate provision for full departmental work. There is provision for social and recreational activities. Electric fans were installed. A fine heating plant was installed. The church fits the lot, space for parking cars is available and can be utilized and will be.

A feature about the building that I admire personally is that the hall space and stairway space is cut to the smallest minimum—there are not large, spacious halls, but there are large, airy, spacious departmental rooms. Possibly one of the stairways cannot be used by the exceedingly fat members, but they can find another way up.

Plans are already on foot for beautifying the lot. Much of the money has been raised for the payment of the church. The rest of the money will be paid beyond doubt. This is a forward step for Methodism in McComb. It is a forward movement for the kingdom of God. The Mississippi Conference owes a vote of thanks to Rev. J. F. Campbell for his work here, and ought to give it. We also owe a debt of gratitude to these kindly people for following the leadership of their pastor in this effort and standing by in the consummation of his hopes and dreams. I was glad to see this building, glad to go over it and enjoy it. Any congregation desiring to build for 300 or 400 members will do well to see this building.

I want to call attention here to the great need of the Dual Extension cause for an enlarged offering from each Sunday school this coming month. The month of May the offering was a failure because of the day school closings, which practically took three-fourths of our offering in that the Sunday school attendance was so small, and many did not have Sunday school at all. This next month, June, we hit rain, and here again in July several of our best contributors have sent in offerings with apologies that the offering was small on account of the rains and poor attendance. Others have other reasons for small offerings.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

We are not complaining, but we launched a great program and we are exceedingly anxious that our cause flourish and bear full fruitage and that we falter not in going forward. If we can get large offerings in September and October, we can pull through. Will you not bear this in your heart and ask God to open the way for these offerings to come?

Now as to Sunday School Day, we are running behind last year in this matter. The laymen in the various districts, members of the Sunday School Board, have been very active and their activity has borne fruit. If our offerings come in as they have for the past year, we will miss our goal of $3,500 Sunday School Day offering by at least $750. This will mean an offering less than we have received in a great while. We are hoping that our fears are unfounded and that the rains are merely delaying the offerings, nad not anything else.

Yours in Him,
JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. J. F. Simmons, of Little Rock, Field Secretary for the Conference Missionary Board, writes: "I can be with you at Ruston in Standard Training School Sept. 9-14. I have recently been credited to teach 'Stewardship'—I am supposing that is what you want me to teach."

Dr. W. W. Drake, pastor at Ruston and chairman of our Sunday School Board, is on his vacation trip at Mount Sequoyah.

Sunday, Aug. 5, I visited Pollock Sunday school in the morning, and the Holloway Prairie community, beyond the Bohemian colony near Alexandria, in the afternoon. At Pollock we found renewed interest in the Sunday school, under the leadership of the new pastor, Brother Lemmons, a recent student who is serving as pastor of the Selma circuit.

At Holloway Prairie community, we found the church there was founded by Rev. J. F. Wynn, father of Dr. R. H. Wynn. The superintendent, Mr. C. L. Barron, is one of the faithful sons of Mr. T. C. Barron, who was associated with Brother Wynn in founding the church. In a conference with Mr. Barron over the problem of the church in the "open country," he thinks it is a problem of leadership. He has promised to co-operate with us in the Standard Training School at Alexandria, Sept. 2-7.

Wednesday and Thursday, Aug. 8 and 9, we made a trip to Houma, leaving Alexandria about noon. We arrived at Thibodaux by the way of Donaldsonville at 7 p. m., where the pastor at Houma, Rev. B. H. Andrews, met us. We immediately left for Lockport, where he was assisting Brother LaGrange in revival meeting. The attendance was good, with the young people and children in the majority. We noted with interest how clean and beautiful the church was kept.

After service we had a conference at the parsonage in the interest of the Standard Training School to be held at Houma, Aug. 20-24. Miss Ella Hooper and Miss Lois Hammett took part in the conference group. We returned to Houma and spent the night at the Wesley House, leaving early the next morning in company with the pastor to Donaldsonville. The local leaders at Houma have everything in readiness and are looking forward with great interest to the Standard Training School.

It is generally understood by Louisiana Methodism that the Houma Standard Training School in many respects is one of the finest in our Conference, but it has a very small attendance. This year they have among the faculty Dean and Mrs. R. E. Smith, of Shreveport, and Prof. D. B. Raulins, of Mansfield. The faculty and students will be entertained in the dormitory at the Wesley House School. There will be no registration fee, etc., but a charge of $5 for board during the session, beginning Monday night and closing Friday night.

I reached Donaldsonville about 8:30 a. m., and while there called to see our Sunday school superintendent, Judge C. T. Wortham, who I found was a college mate of Bishop Beauchamp and Dr. Siedd. He is a noted author in jurisprudence, and heartily approves the new interest in the Leadership Training in our church. While in Donaldsonville we visited the parsonage and found the pastor, Rev. J. P.

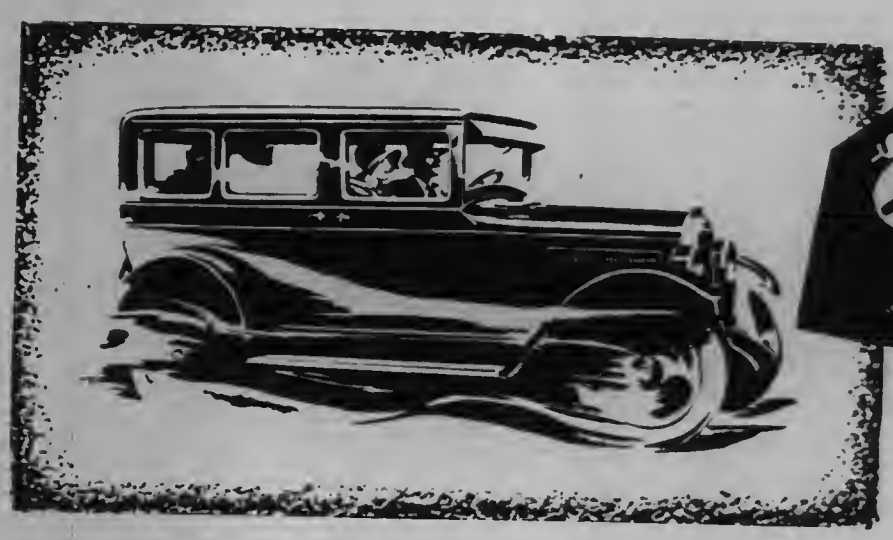
The 2 GREATEST SEDAN VALUES



WORLD'S LOWEST PRICED SEDANS

Notable for Quality and Performance

IN definite dollar-for-dollar value there are no 4-door enclosed cars on the market comparable to the Whippet Four and Whippet Six Sedans.

This is true not only because these smart Sedans are the lowest priced in the world, but because they represent the most advanced ideas in automotive engineering, both mechanically and artistically.

The perfected Whippet Four offers such desirable features as full force-feed lubrication, silent timing chain, extra leg room and powerful 4-wheel brakes. The new Whippet Six, in addition, provides a 7-bearing crankshaft, invar-strut pistons and other advantages.

Such notable values are possible only because of the skill and experience gained in the production of more than 2,000,000 motor cars.

VOLUNTEER LEAGUE WORK IN MINDEN DISTRICT.

The following report comes from W. L. McDuff, Monroe District Secretary, who has been working in the southern part of Minden District in three-night institutes since the 26th of July:

"The first night at Ferriday we enjoyed a watermelon picnic up on Lake St. John, given by the Young People's class. Our institute was not carried out in full on account of the absence of so many Leaguers from town. However, the work of departments, council and business meetings, and Hi and Junior work were thoroughly discussed and outlined to the president, vice president, secretary and department superintendents. Under the leadership of Mrs. W. A. Hall, a most enthusiastic Leaguer, I am sure that Ferriday will be represented at Mansfield next year, with a high per cent toward the Standard. The pastor, Brother Fox, is vitally interested in the spiritual life of the young people.

"I met with the young people of Jonesville during Sunday school. This crowd will make a splendid Hi League, and desire to organize, but think best to wait until school opens, as a good many of the young people are out of town. They can easily carry on both a Junior Society and a Hi League, I feel sure. Also, at Jena, I found the young folks willing to organize, but wishing to wait until fall, the same condition existing there as in Jonesville. Jena should be able to carry on all three Leagues. Rev. H. W. Cudd, the pastor at Jena and Jonesville, was away in a revival, but I talked with Miss Marie Wade and Mrs. Cudd.

"At Standard we had a fine institute, not so large in attendance, but with some mighty fine young people. Miss Ada Woods is president; I remember, too, Mr. Vernon Bethea, a very active Leaguer, and his father, an honorary member. Brother Holladay, who is on his first work as pastor there, is certainly a splendid worker with the young folks, and I feel sure that they will have representation at Assembly, and will also prove the value of three-night institutes by registering 100 per cent for their League.

"I am writing from Winnfield, and though the first night was not very largely attended, more have promised to be there to-night. Georgia Stubbs, an Assembly delegate, came over from Rochelle. Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Harris are helping in a revival at Arcadia. Brother Weir was out of town because of his mother's illness. Willie Verne Hall, a most capable League president, has promised to attend Mount Sequoyah with me, which will be splendid for Winnfield League.

"I am striving to emphasize the raising the percentages on the Standard of Efficiency, as well as to urge the chapters to begin now planning to send a delegation to Assembly next year."

At the time of this writing Mr. McDuff is in Colfax; I know that he is putting over the work there as splendidly as in the other places. From Colfax he goes home to Chase, La., to be there a few days before leaving for Mount Sequoyah on the 14th. On behalf of the Minden District I feel deeply indebted to him for the fine way in which he has helped us, in bringing the methods and ways of a truly efficient League before the smaller chapters. I want to thank heartily him for this service rendered in our district.

MARY SEARLES,
Minden District Secreetary.

There's peace in the household guarded by Castoria. Peaceful sleep for Baby. Uninterrupted rest for Mother. For a few drops of pure Castoria will quiet any fretful infant. Or put the little one back to sleep when there's an upset during the night.

Parents, don't try to do without good old Castoria! It isn't fair to the baby, and it makes things hard for you. You can't give Baby medicine meant for grown-ups—or shouldn't! Castoria is the solution. It is always safe. It always does the work. And although it acts as swiftly as an opiate or a narcotic, it contains neither. Castoria is purely vegetable. Give it whenever there's constipation, colic, diarrhea.

No less than five million modern mothers have come to depend on Castoria, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Get yours today; don't wait for some night when it's needed, and the drugstore is closed!

young people. Mrs. Lampton, of Tylertown, "Cultivation and Organization of Jubilee Auxiliaries," and "Keeping the Records." Mrs. Carruth read a very excellent paper, written by Mrs. Norton, on "The Golden Year."

Dr. Winfield made a very earnest talk about Whitworth College and his desire to preserve and carry forward the fine Christian ideals and traditions of former years. He spoke of the only reason for the church school—the development of ideals and Christian character.

Dr. Crisler made an eloquent address on the subject of "Women and Christian Citizenship." As always, Dr. Crisler was emphatic in his statements.

The closing address was given by Mrs. Alford, our Conference president. It was truly inspirational. She referred in glowing terms to our debt to the pioneers in missionary work, and urged that we prove worthy of our heritage.

An interesting feature of the afternoon was a few words from Mrs. B. F. Jones, who was present at the organization meeting of the Mississippi Conference Society, which was effected in the home of her father, the late Dr. W. E. M. Linfield, in Hazlehurst. She joined the Society then, though a young girl, and has been an active member ever since. Mrs. Jones has been a leader in every forward movement, and her friends hope for many more years of association with her in the work so near her heart.

The day was surely a feast of good things. The picnic dinner under the shade of the handsome old trees, that have sheltered generations of Methodist gatherings, was not merely a physical gratification, but added joy in the association with those of like purpose and aims.

In many hearts the words of the message from our former District Secretary, Mrs. R. E. Bennett, seemed a most appropriate closing thought,

"Go, labor on; spend and be spent,
Thy joy to do the Father's will."

HUSBAND DISTRIBUTES BOOKLETS

Wife Tries Compound

Every year the Pinkham Medicine Company distributes about 30,000,000 booklets from house to house. Mr. Ted Hinzman does this work in Lodi, California. His wife writes: "It was in these little books that I read about so many women being helped by the medicine. I thought I would give it a trial and I can truly say that it has done me good. My neighbors and friends ask me what I am doing to make me look so much better. I tell them that I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

ZONE MEETING AT SPRINGFIELD, LA.

The women of zone 6, of the Baton Rouge District, held their first quarterly meeting in Springfield, March 21, with their leader, Mrs. C. B. Johnson, presiding. An inspiring and instructive program was opened with Scripture reading by Mrs. E. W. Vinyard, of Ponchatoula. "Prayer" was the theme. Rev. W. R. Harvell, of Hammond, led in prayer. Mrs. Carter, of Ponchatoula, gave us a glimpse of "The High Lights of Nashville." Mrs. Yawn's address on "Looking Backward" gave us a concise and interesting account of the pioneer work of our women. "Looking Forward" was next presented by Mrs. Reynolds, who gave an inspirational talk on our "Forward Movements," urging organized prayer, work, and giving. Superintendent of Young People, Mrs. Yawn, of Hammond, told of the splendid work being done by their young people. Mrs. J. B. McGhee gave a talk on the children's work.

Four of the auxiliaries in the zone, Hammond, Ponchatoula, Natalbany, and Springfield, respouded to roll call with good attendance. Wesley Chapel was not represeuted. Forty-seven members and visitors were present. Hammond reported two delegates elected to the Conference in New Orleans; Ponchatoula, one; Springfield, one; Natalbany, one.

An offering of $5.25 was taken. Ponchatoula auxiliary extended an invitation for the June meeting, which was accepted.

A rising vote of thanks was tendered Springfield for their gracious hospitality.

After a song, we were dismissed with prayer by Mrs. J. B. McGehee. Refreshments were served by the Springfield auxiliary.

MRS. W. R. KEMP, Secretray.

ZONE MEETING AT LAKE CHARLES, LA.

The quarterly meeting of zone No. 1, of the Lake Charles District, which now comprises Lake Charles, Sulphur, Vinton and Edgerly, was held at Lake Charles, Tuesday, July 19, with Mrs. S. C. Carroll presiding.

Preceding the program of the afternoon, a delicious luncheon was served, during which time the Misses Price and Statham sang "Give Me Thy Heart." The missionary hymn, "O, Zion, Haste," opened the meeting. Mrs. L. B. Blair led the devotional. A vocal solo was beautifully rendered by Mrs. Williams, of Vinton.

Next in order was the election of a recording secretary. Mrs. J. N. Wetherill, of Vinton, was unanimously elected.

A reading given by Miss Eloise McIlwain, of Pennsylvania, who is a visitor in Vinton, was thoroughly enjoyed.

We considered it a special privilege to have with us Rev. J. O. Kim, Conference Superintendent of Sunday School Work in Korea. Brother Kim spoke on "What Christ Means to Our Korean Women," emphasizing the wonderful uplift and advantages that Christianity has brought to the women of his country. They now have well organized Missionary Societies, and it was interesting to learn that missionary dues were often paid not with money but with a certain quantity of rice. A rising vote of thanks was given to Brother Kim.

Miss Ethelyn Crawford's violin solo was appreciated.

The president of the Gleaners, Miss Ruth Buck, spoke on the "Jubilee."

The inspirational talk by Mrs. L. L. Harris, of Lake Charles, on "Religious Problems," left us with much to think about.

Mrs. R. S. Walton, District Secretary, led the round table discussion, urging each auxiliary to make a very special effort to be placed on the Honor Roll this year. She also requested that each society attend to the distribution of the Jubilee mite boxes.

It was a great pleasure to listen to Miss Pauline Wynn tell of her interesting work among the students of the Mississippi State College.

Closing prayer led by Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr.

Total attendance about seventy-five, with five ministers present.

An invitation was extended and accepted for the next zone meeting to be held at Sulphur, La.

MRS. ROBERT ANDERSON.

ZONE MEETING AT LOUISE, MISS.

On Thursday afternoon, June 26, at 2 o'clock, the zone meeting of the Silver City, Holly Bluff and Louise Missionary Societies met at Louise, Miss. Rev. F. B. Ormnod, pastor of the Silver City charge, led the devotionals, calling upon Rev. I. H. Sells to lead in prayer. Mrs. James, of Silver City, zone chairman, took charge of the meeting until the necessary business was completed. Mrs. B. J. Z. Kern was elected secretary to fill the unexpired term of Mrs. J. B. Barrack, resigned.

The Holly Bluff Society having charge of the program, Mrs. T. H. Phillips, president, took the chair, and an interesting program was beautifully rendered.

A round table discussion of the Jubilee goals followed. The closing hymn was followed by special prayer offered by Brother Ormond in behalf of Mrs. Partee, one of the members of the Silver City Society, who was seriously ill. (She has since passed away.) The benediction was pronounced by Brother Sells.

The meeting adjourned to meet in Silver City Oct. 26, 1928. Following the adjournment, we repaired to the social hall of the Louise church, where the ladies of the local society served a delicious plate lunch, to the delight of all present.

Bonnecarrere, helping in a camp meeting at Bluff Creek. Brother Bonnecarrere has an interesting family of eight children, three boys and five girls.

En route from Donaldsonville to Alexandria, we stopped at White Castle and Plaquemine, two places, as well as Donaldsonville, we served as pastor over twenty-five years ago. While in White Castle we visited the parsonage, now being rented out, as the pastor lives in Plaquemine. The old parsonage at White Castle is sacred to me beyond measure, due to the fact that in one of the upper rooms I held the hand of my father as he was called to go down into the valley and shadow of death.

While at White Castle I called on several of the leading citizens, one of whom was Dr. Owen, a graduate of the class of '76 of Centenary College. His Alma Mater conferred on him in 1926 the degree of LL.D.

We were in Plaquemine only a short time and called at the parsonage and found the pastor's family at home, but the pastor was out on a trip with his presiding elder. We served as pastor here for three years. We reached home about 7 p. m. after two very busy days.

Rev. Claude H. Mayo, pastor at Melder, is off on his vacation, and we appreciate the invitation to preach for his congregation at Melder this coming Sunday.

About seventeen kilometers (ten miles) from Warsaw, Poland, is located the Methodist orphanage high school at Klarysew under the direction of Director W. Droplowski. Here 120 students are enrolled, about half of whom are paying students. Three or four of the boys who were taken into the Klarysew orphanage a few years ago have finished the work there and have entered the Bible school, where they will be trained for religious work among their own peaopie. The work at Klarysew, originally an orphanage, has developed into a first class high school, up to the standard in every way.

Old remedy relieves cramps peculiar to women

Women themselves discovered this new and helpful use for an old product. They tell us that the cramps experienced by many girls may be relieved through the use of Chamberlain's Colic Remedy. For 57 years, this remedy has been a household remedy for quick relief of intestinal disorders. Probably many women have already discovered this remedy's ability to relieve the periodical cramps peculiar to women —especially after catching cold.

If you are one of those who suffer from these cramps, get a bottle of this proven remedy at once. It insures you against the usual agony, discomfort and loss of poise. If you feel an attack approaching, just take a few drops in sweetened water and secure immediate relief.

Simple? . . . Yes, but effective and safe.

All druggists know Chamberlain's Colic Remedy and its reliability. You need have no hesitancy in asking for it. If you wish to try it, we'll send you a trial size bottle free. Send for it today. Have it ready. Chamberlain Laboratories. 1071 Sixth Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 75.—No. 34. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Whole No. 3715.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE HOME STRETCH.

The announcements by the presiding elders of their fourth round of quarterly conferences remind us that the Conference year is rapidly drawing to a close. The North Mississippi Conference will meet at Pontotoc on Oct. 31; the Mississippi Conference will meet at Philadelphia on Nov. 7, and the Louisiana Conference will meet at Lake Charles on Nov. 21. We have not far to go.

The fourth quarterly conference is especially important in our economy because it is at that time that the stewards, the Sunday school superintendents, and the lay leaders for the ensuing year are elected. It is very easy to see that the success of the work for another year depends very largely upon the wisdom shown in the nomination and election of these officials. If a preacher ever needs to give careful thought and earnest prayer to his work, it is in connection with these important items.

But the election of these officials has to do largely with next year; what of the present year and the report that is to be carried to the Annual Conference? No matter what has or has not been accomplished thus far, there is still time to change a bad report into a good one, and to make a good report better. Wonders can be wrought in a few weeks. Amendment cannot be made altogether for wasted time; but earnest diligence from now till the time to go to Conference can make a good year out of what otherwise would have been a bad one. May it be so!

GOING AFTER THE CHILDREN.

We have received a communication from the "American Association for the Advancement of Atheism, Inc.," announcing the organization of the "Junior Atheist League." We quote from the announcement: "The philosophy of Atheism is to be planted in the mind of youth. In response to many requests for increased activity among young people, the Junior Atheist League is established. Godless children shall have an opportunity to emancipate their companions from unreasonable religion. The League will remove boys and girls from the evil influence of the clergy. It will encourage them to protest against Bible reading and religious worship in public schools and agitate against religious instruction during school hours. Children shall be told the truth about the Bible and Christianity. The magical, animistic, and phallic, or sexual, origins of religion will be explained in simple language. * * * Dispelling the illusion of immortality, the League will free sons and daughters from the fear of hell and the hope of heaven. * * * Picnics and outings, clean and healthful good times, will take the place of stultifying Sunday schools. * * * All anti-clericals are urged to solicit memberships and form locals, especially in schools. Miss * * * national secretary, a sixteen-year-old Atheist of exceptional executive ability, is waiting to hear from young Atheists and their parents. Let the 'social and cultural features begin at once." The communication states that the "Junior Atheist League" is for boys and girls from seven to seventeen.

We have called attention to this communication and quoted from it in order that Christian fathers and mothers may know what is going on, and in order to warn them that the enemies of the souls of their children are laying snares for them almost before they are out of their cradles. The one sure defense against the diabolical machinations of these destroyers of hope is to give our children Christian training. in the home, in the Sunday school, and in the church. Christian homes—they can save the children.

RENUNCIATION OF WAR.

Monday, Aug. 2, is the day appointed for the signing by the nations of the Multilateral Treaty for the Renunciation of War. In connection with that momentous event, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is urging that Sunday, Aug. 26, be observed as a day of thanksgiving and prayer. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, president of the Federal Council, says: "The signing of the Multilateral treaty by fifteen nations promises to be so epoch-making in the moral and spiritual life of mankind as to call for the widest and most grateful recognition by all the religious forces of the world. In our own country the churches have an even deeper interest in the event than in other lands because of the far-seeing initiative and superb leadership taken by the American Secretary of State in negotiating this unique treaty." It is announced that the churches of Great Britain have been planning extensive observance of this Sunday as a day of thanksgiving. The Archbishops of Canterbury and of York have sent a special letter to all Anglican clergymen saying that the occasion "is a great one in the contemporary history of the world." It is also announced that the Presbyterian, the Methodist, and the Anglican leaders in Ireland have issued a joint statement summoning their people to unite in prayer for God's blessing "upon this great undertaking." It is a great day in the history of the world when its great nations unite in the renunciation of war as a means of settling their disputes, and we ought to thank God for it.

"THE WORST THING THAT COULD HAPPEN."

We think nobody will deny that there is a tremendous moral question involved in the matter of prohibition. It is sufficient proof of this simply to point to the fact that for many years—long before there was even the expressed hope that the United States might become constitutionally dry—practically all the churches and other moral agencies were united in the fight against liquor.

But it is not probable that we should have national prohibition yet if the moral issue were the only one involved. It probably would come after awhile purely as a moral issue, for such issues have a way of finally winning a place in the code of laws. It is the economic value of prohibition that, added to the moral value, brought about the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. Mr. Henry Ford, who is regarded above all things as an industrial expert, is reported to have said last week: "The worst thing that could happen to this country would be a step backward in our fight against liquor. * * * Such a step would be a calamity. * * * As for present enforcement conditions we manage to get along well enough at Detroit, though we are next door to Canada. Personally, I would turn out the army and navy to stop bootelegging. But if the law were changed, we would have to shut up our plants. Everything in the United States is keyed up to a new pace which started with prohibition. The speed at which we operate our motor cars, run our intricate machinery and generally live would be impossible with liquor."

THE JOYS OF A PREACHER.

Perhaps we have not heard too much of the hardships of the preacher—but it is pretty certain that we do not hear enough of the joys that are his. Yet the joys are greater than the hardships. If it were not so, the life would become unbearable. It is poor business to forget all about the beauty of a rose for thinking of the thorns that are on the bush. The preacher who has ministered faithfully in spiritual things to his people has a glow in his heart that is warmer than any chilling blasts that may blow from without; and when some happy soul tells him—even if only one does so—that he has brought peace and joy where there was unhappiness and sorrow, his hardships are easily forgotten. It is a great thing to be called of God to the ministry.

HOT WEATHER.

We have heard a good deal of complaint about the hot weather during the past week. People have mopped their brows, sighed and said, "Isn't it terrible!" Perhaps we have not been as sympathetic with the sufferers as we should have been, for we like hot weather so much better than we do cold that we are estopped from complaint. However, we are of the opinion that the discomforts of both hot and cold weather are more in the state of mind than in the temperature. If we take the weather calmly and quietly, not fuming and fussing about it and getting ourselves "all het up," the chances are that we shall survive the day in fairly comfortable way. So it is with many things that harrass, vex and disturb us. Keep calm, keep sweet, love everybody, and do right—and a reasonable amount of happiness will follow.

POETICAL THOUGHTS.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

What If It Were To-Day?

Jesus is coming to earth again,
What if it were to-day?
Coming in power and love to reign,
What if it were to-day?
Coming to claim his chosen Bride,
All the redeemed and purified,
Over this whole earth scattered wide,
What if it were to-day?

Satan's dominion will then be o'er,
O that it were to-day.
Sorrow and sighing shall be no more,
O that it were to-day.
Then shall the dead in Christ arise,
Caught up to meet him in the skies,
When shall these glories meet our eyes?
What if it were to-day?

Faithful and true would he find us here
If he should come to-day?
Watching in gladness and not in fear,
If he should come to-day?
Signs of his coming multiply,
Morning light breaks in eastern sky,
Watch, for the time is drawing nigh,
What if it were to-day?

—Mrs. C. H. Morris.

We read in the gospels that whenever the news came that Jesus was coming to a certain place, the people would gather from every direction. Of course some went to see and hear him from curiosity; but for the most part they went to be healed of sin and sickness, or to hear his wonderful words. I wonder if we had a message to-day saying Jesus was coming to walk among us, what we would do? Would we be glad or would we be afraid? It seems to me that so great have been our opportunities and our privileges, so far above those to whom he ministered while on earth, we would be almost ashamed to greet him. Certain it is that most of us would feel we had to make a great deal of prepartion. We would have to clean house as it were. There are many things that professing Christians are doing to-day that they declare no harm, that they say are simply things any broad-minded person would do, that we would not like to be found doing if Jesus walked in and looked at us. There may not be any real harm in bridge, but I believe the cards would be swept under the table if he came; if it should be the Sabbath day, I think we would not be so careless about keeping it holy; if men were on their way to play golf or to see a ball game wouldn't they be apt to turn in the direction of some place where the gospel was being preached? Where would we find Jesus? And where would he find us if he came to-day? Wouldn't he have a right to look for us in the churches or Sunday schools or in some path of duty, some road that led to a hospital or to the home of a sick friend or at some institution where we might bring cheer? If we were not in these places, wouldn't we want the mountains and hills to screen us from his all-searching eye? O that we might watch for him in joy and gladness and eager expectancy, instead of in trembling and fear! He is not here in person to-day, but he sees into our hearts and thoughts, and it behooves us to be ready to greet him, to make straight our paths and to cleanse our hearts from all sin and to abstain from even the appearance of evil. Our Saviour would not expect to look for us in the broad thoroughfares of the world, he would not want to find us so much like the worldly-minded that he could not at once see which of us were his followers. He has told us to come out from among them and be separate; and so the paths of the church and the world should lie far apart. We are to woo and win the sinner but not to be as one of them. Let it be our prayer that when our Lord comes he will find us ready, with our lamps trimmed and burning.

THE POSITION OF THE CHURCH UNCHANGED.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

Early in July a number of letters, most of them from preachers, but some from devout laymen, were written to me expressing anxiety for the welfare of the church if it should be involved in party politics.

In response to the letters of those godly men, I made a statement which began thus: "In view of the many letters inquiring my position on pending matters political, and asking advice upon the same, the following statement is made."

I then proceeded to state what I conceived had been, and is, the position of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, concerning its non-political character, as related to the subject of personal and party politics, and as that position has been declared authoritatively by its wisest leaders from the beginning of its history as a Christian body. I said nothing about prohibition, or political parties, for I was dealing with the non-political character of the Christian church and its ministry, and not with any other matter whatsoever.

From my youth up I have been a total abstainer and a prohibitionist, as is well known; but I have always refused to take any part in any movements which involved the cause of prohibition, or entangled the church in personal or party politics. That was, and is, and ever will be, my position, believing as I do that it is the historic and scriptural position of my church from which I dare not depart, even if I had any disposition to depart from it.

In support of that position, I quoted deliverances of the bishops, approved by the General Conferences from 1865 to 1894.

The first quotation was from an address of the bishops, made on Aug. 17, 1865, about ninety days after the fall of the Southern Confederacy, when our church and all the people of the South were confronted by social upheavals and political conditions far worse than any they have seen since; and worse than will ever again arise, let us hope and pray.

The quotation from the address of the bishops, Aug. 17, 1865, was as follows:

"Know your high calling. Preach Christ and him crucified. Do not preach politics. You have no commission to preach politics. The divinity of the church is never more strikingly displayed than when it holds on its ever straightforward way in the midst of worldly commotions."

The second quotation was from the address of the bishops to the General Conference of 1866. When adverting to the trials through which the church had passed during the war between the States, they said:

"We do not attempt in this brief address to enter into a detailed account of the general state of the work. We thank God that we have so safely passed through a most painful and fiery ordeal; that the church has preserved under his blessing her integrity; that she has in no wise become complicated with political affairs; but keeping in view her own high mission, has been satisfied to perform her legitimate duties."

As showing how the newly elected bishops, who were chosen by the General Conference of 1866, agreed with their older colleagues and with the General Conference, an admirable quotation was taken from a deliverance made on his own motion and responsibility by one of them, namely, by that saintly and eloquent bishop, E. M. Marvin.

The last quotation was from the Episcopal Address to the General Conference which met in Memphis, May, 1894, which is the last official deliverance made to, or by, any General Conference on the subject of the non-political nature of the church and its ministry. The paragrsph quoted was as follows:

"It is not amiss to repeat what has often been declared—that our church is strictly a religious and in no wise a political body. Our sole business is to preach and serve the kingdom of God. There are many questions, economical, social and part ethical, of burning interest in this day, which our pulpit and churches may be tempted to substitute for the simple gospel. Men claiming to be advanced thinkers and wide-awake philanthropists may sneer at us as unpractical dreamers and devotees of shadows and abstractions, because we give ourselves wholly to things spiritual and eternal. But Christ is the Rock, and only those who build on him build safely. The more closely we keep ourselves to the one work of testifying to all men repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, the better shall we promote the highest good of our country and race. As a church we are not related by affiliation or antagonism to any political party. As a citizen every man should carry his judgment and conscience into politics and all other spheres of life."

That address, in which it was thus said that the non-political character of the church has been "often declared," was written by Bishop John C. Granbery, and signed by all the bishops, including Bishop C. B. Galloway and Bishop A. G. Haygood, both of whom had been, and were at that time, ardent advocates of prohibition, and both of whom always opposed the entanglement of the cause of prohibition and the church with personal and party politics.

Since 1894 no official deliverance has been made on the subject of the non-political character of the church and its ministry, unless it be the Episcopal Address of 1914, which I was appointed to write; which the bishops approved; and of which the General Conference, by an unprecedented action, ordered 500,000 copies printed. The theme of that address was "The Church of God," and in the course of it the purely spiritual nature of the church was declared; and the declaration was supported by an extract from a powerful utterance of that holy and learned bishop of the Church of England, Bishop Brooks Foss Westcott, which extract was incorporated in the declaration that I made as follows:

"But while it is proper to recognize the manifold ministries which appertain to the church in human society, too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the church's supreme function as the witness to the world of the heavenly life which is in her risen and exalted Lord. The chief element in her mission, as in her being, is spirituality, and she fulfills her spiritual office by her life even more than by her labors. It has been truly said: 'The church has committed to her a higher task than even that of converting the world. She has to do that by which alone the world can be converted. She has to declare Christ as he declared the Father. She is "sent" of Christ as he was "sent" of the Father. And just as our Lord himself said, 'He that hath seen me hath seen the Father,' so when the church at any time reviews her manifestations of herself, she ought to be able to say, "He that hath seen me hath seen my Lord."'

"The spirituality of the church, revealing her risen Lord, is the most fundamental element of her existence, and to this all her other gifts and efforts must minister."

In all that address there is nothing which modifies or contradicts the foregoing paragraph or conflicts with the historic position of the church.

On the contrary, the same truth is asserted and emphasized throughout the entire address, as is evident from the following passage, taken from a preceding paragraph of the address:

"The whole intellectual, moral, and spiritual life of mankind is dependent upon the ministrations of Christ's church, and even the material prosperity of men cannot extend far beyond the limits of its quickening and inspiring influences. It holds forth the only reliable hope of human progress, and it assures the fulfillment of the hope which it inspires by offering the only means adequate for its realization. The Christianity which it proclaims and propagates must be the supreme factor in any true and lasting civilization. Neither inventions, nor industries, nor commerce, nor culture, nor social reformations, nor political renovations, nor all combined, can assure the healthful and permanent progress of mankind in the absence of the Christian religion. It has been said most truly that 'the progress of civilization depends upon the extent of the domains reclaimed under the moral law,' and the area reclaimed under the moral law is never wider than that which is marked by the spiritual conquests of the church of God. Whatever moral excellencies may be discovered in exceptlouai personalities among heathen people or found in some unregenerate men in Christian lands, the fact remains that the renewal of mankind in righteousness and true holiness is absolutely dependent upon the propagation of that gospel which alone is the power of God unto slavation, and the effectual proclamation of which is committed exclusively to Christ's church. In thus speaking, no exorbitant claim is made for the church; no more is asserted when Jesus Christ declared in the Sermon on the Mount concerning the position and mission of his people in human society. It was he who said to his church, 'ye are the sait of the earth,' and 'ye are the light of the world.' In keeping with his teaching, the inspired apostle to the Gentlies described the church of the living God as 'the pillar and ground of the truth.'"

Of course, I assert now, as then and always, my unqualified acceptance of the teaching of our blessed Lord that his church is "the light of the world," and "the salt of the earth." The salvation of the world is dependent upon this saving salt; and I would not have this purifying element to lose it savor by any injection of an ingredient party politics into it.

Since the General Conference of 1894, which reasserted the non-political nature of the church, no subsequent General Conference has taken any action which by any reasonable and fair interpretation can be construed as authorizing the ministry to bring party politics into their pastoral and pulpit ministrations. Perhaps the strongest deliverance was expressed by the General Conference of 1926 in these words with reference to the national prohibition law:

"The law must be administered by its friends. In our States, from constable to governor, and in the nation, from revenue agent to president, officials must be selected who believe in enforcement, not only because prohibition is the law, but because it ought to be the law."

Sureiy no sane man, in a sober moment, would claim that the words imply that any and every preacher should carry into his pulpit the matter of prohibition in every election of civil officers, "from constable to governor," and "from revenue agent to President." If the language is thus construed, then the preachers will have no time to preach the gospel, and their political activities will divide churches, forestall revivals of religion, hurt the cause of prohibition, and make wounds which years cannot heal.

The deliverances of the General Conference on prohibition must be interpreted in the light of the object proposed by them; and that object was not to reverse the position of the church on the subject of the non-political nature of itself and its ministry, which position I have done no more than restate. If any such purpose had been plainly avowed by those who offered resolutions, reports, etc., on the subject of prohibition, I make bold to say any such proposal would have been amended or rejected. The position proclaimed by all the bishops from Joshua Soule to O. P. Fitzgerald, and re-asserted by the Episcopal Address to the General Conference of 1894, has not been repudiated by any subsequent General Conference. Who will dare say it has been?

The position of the church on the non-political office of its ministry is unchanged, and I pray God it may never be changed.

Some individuals have departed from it, and, thereby, some churches have been divided and the cause of Christ hindered. It was the fear that the church might be thus seriously damaged, that moved a number of consecrated men to write me. To avert, as far as I could, the peril that they apprehended, my statement of July 16 was made, and given to all the church papers whose editors I believed would publish it, and then given three days later to three secular papers, edited by my friends, two of whom are Methodist officials and staunch prohibitionists.

My statement was timed by the letters of the godly men who wrote me, and it contained not so much as one sharp or personal word. My purpose in making it was, not to irritate any one, but to tranquilize, as far as I might be able, the ministry and membership of our beloved church, and to prevent the politicalization of the great Christian body to the service of which I have given the undivided efforts and energies of my life. I simply restated the historic and Scriptural position of my church, and re-uttered the principles that were declared by Bishops Soule, Andrew, Paine Pierce, Marvin, McTyeire, Wightman, and other holy men among us, the latchets of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose.

I close this article with the same paragraph with which I closed my restatement dated July 16. I have no disposition to criticise others. This is no time for inflamatory utterances. In unruffled calmness and brotherly kindness, I stand by the principle proclaimed by our adorable Saviour when he declared before Pontius Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world" (John xviii:36).

I repeat, therefore, what I said on July 16:

"Offering no criticism of others, I propose to abide unfalteringly by this principle, discharging conscientiously my duties as a citizen and fulfilling with fidelity my commission as a minister of Jesus Christ. On that I stand, I cannot do otherwise. May my Lord help me to serve my generation by the will of God; finish my course with joy and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus to testify the gospel of the grace of God; fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life."

WARREN A. CANDLER.

Atlanta, Ga., Aug. 8, 1928.

OPENING OF NEW CHURCH AT LAKE CHARLES, LA.

(The following account of the opening service of the new Broad Street Methodist Church, Lake Charles, La., on Sunday, Aug. 12 is taken from the Lake Charles American-Press of Aug. 13. The Americna-Press gave as complete account of all the features connected with this signal event as could be desired or expected—we extend congratuations.—Editor.)

An assembly of practically 1,030 persons gathered Sunday morning for the first worship service held in the new Broad Street Methodist Church. The crowd packed the balcony and filled the last chairs placed down the aisles and extending back to the doors. Visitors from the various congregations of the city were present, as well as many from neighboring towns, including entire congregations from some out-of-town churches.

Tall baskets of flowers, gifts of greetings from churches, business firms, and individuals surrounded the altar.

Seated within the chancel rail were Dr. R. H. Wynn, pastor of the church; Dr. A. F. Watkins, pastor of Central Methodist Church, of Meridian, Miss., who delivered the morning message; Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., presiding elder of the Lake Charles District, and Dr. N. E. Joyner, of Shreveport, former pastor of Broad Street Church, both of whom led in prayer, and Rev. J. B. Williams, former presiding elder of the district, now of Coushatta, who pronounced the benediction.

Dr. Wynn presided at the service. Telegrams, letters and telephone messages of congratulations and best wishes were read from the following: M. Uhry, of Lake Charles; J. T. Barret, Beaumont; S. W. Foster, Beaumont; Dr. W. W. Holmes, Shreveport; Wm. Schule, Kentwood; Don Dulaney, Bossier City; Rev. W. E. Hogan, Nashville, treasurer General Board of Education; Dr. F. S. Parker, of Nashville, general secretary of the Epworth League; Bishop W. A. Candler, of Atlanta; Dr. J. F. Foster, of New Iberia; Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District; Rev. J. M. Culbreth, Nashville, Religious Education secretary; Hon. T. W. Holloman, of Alexandria; Rev. D. B. Raulins, president of Mansfield College; W. A. McKennon, superintendent of the First Methodist Sunday school of Shreveport; Dr. Frank L. Wells, pastor of Baton Rouge First Methodist Church; Rev. T. F. King, of Lake Arthur; Rev. George Fox, Ferriday; Rev S. L. Riggs, of Cedar Grove; Dr. John L. Scales, of Shreveport; Bishop Hoyt M. Dobbs of Birmingham; Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Hamilton, of Lake Charles. Messages had been received either Friday or Sunday from practically every church in the city, and from the Salvation Army.

It was announced that the congregation of the First Baptist Church would worship with the Broad Street congregation on Wednesday night of this week.

Dr. Watkins, in expressing his joy in the successful accomplishment of the Broad Street congregation, stated that he knew the little, old church was very dear to many present, because of its intimate connection with their lives during the past years. From this new building, he declared, with the religious educational unit for an efficient workshop, there should come a service ten times greater than could ever have been given with the old facilities.

Choosing for the text of his sermon the fourteenth verse of the forty-eighth Psalm, "for this God is our God forever and ever," Dr. Watkins explained that all of the psalms of the sons of Korah are marked by a great similarity of sentiment and thought. They are all joyous, all show a belief in delivery by the intervention of Providence, all show a recognition of the divine purpose of God, all recognize the unity of God, his infinite goodness and wisdom, his transcendency. All are marked by strong patrotism, the kind of patriotism that becomes internationalism, a nation being guided by the Golden Rule, and its practice in its dealings with other nations.

It is the attitude expressed in this psalm which should be the attitude of the congregation of the Broad Street Church, the speaker said. The building should be looked upon, not with sectarian pride for the beauty of its architecture, but it should be considered as a place where God dwells, a place to meet him, a place to come to worship him. Don't come to hear a sermon preached, he entreated; come to take part in the service, to commune with him.

A special anthem by the choir and a solo by Mrs. Ed Brooks, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Ora Reams, formed the special music for the day.

Gifts of floral offerings were received from Trinity Baptist church, Mr. and Mrs. R. Krause, Mrs. J. A. Stockwell, and Miss Tina Reiser, the American-Press, Mrs. F. H. Gray, and George Duflot.

An attempt was made to have every person who attended this first service in the new church to register.

A "WHITE" GOLDEN WEDDING.

On Wednesday evening, Aug. 8, there gathered at the Lake Methodist Church a host of friends, and the children and granchildren of Rev. and Mrs. M. L. White, to do them honor on the occasion of their golden wedding anniversary.

As the honored couple started up the aisle, Miss Loper, of Lake, began playing the wedding march from Lohengrin. The "bride and groom" were seated on the platform in two large chairs, which were decorated with dainty bows of gold ribbon. The platform had been arranged to have a home-like aspect, with rugs, tall baskets of vari-colored zinnias, and floor lamps casting a golden glow over all. The altar railing was banked with ferns and flowers, with lighted candles, at intervals, among them.

Mr. F. C. Harrison, representing the Lake charge, made a few well-chosen introductory remarks, after which he introduced Mr. A. G. Gainey, of Jackson, Miss., a well-loved friend of the White family, who acted as master of ceremonies..

After prayer by Dr. Rolfe Hunt, Mr. Lee Gainey, of Jackson, sang "Love's Old Sweet Song" and "When You and I Were Young, Maggie."

Rev. V. G. Clifford, a son-in-law, fellcitated the happy couple in behalf of the sons and daughters-in-law. Mr. G. H. Dobson, of Lake, gave a lovely reading of his own composition. Miss Nan Smythe, also of Lake, read "Jo Anderson, My Jo, John," from Robert Burns.

Rev. B. W. Lewis, representing the class of 1889 of the Mississippi Conference, of which class he and Brother White are members, brought felicitations from the class, and presented to the couple a gold coin, in the name of the class.

Mrs. F. C. Harrison read a poem, "Fifty Years," which was inspired by the occasion, and written by Mrs. White, the bride of fifty years. Mr. Floyd Loper, of Lake, after a few words of praise, spoke of their love for the bride and groom, and presented them with one hundred and twenty dollars in gold, from the people of Lake. Rev. H. A. Gatlin presented, with complimentary remarks, a gift of fifty dollars in gold from a group of fellow-Methodist preachers in the Mississippi Conference.

Mr. Gainey presented the opportunity to others to speak, and Dr. Rolfe Hunt and Rev. L. E. Alford gave additional words of tribute.

Mr. Gainey read telegrams which had come during the day, and a few of the many letters received, after which he read the beautiful tribute which came from the son in California who couldn't be present at the celebration.

Mr. Gainey also announced to the couple that their seven children were presenting them with a Ford car.

Brother White, being given an opportunity to speak, thanked the people of Lake, and all others who had contributed to their happiness that day.

The women of Lake served a salad and an ice course to one hundred and ninety people at the close of the program.

Following is the tribute from Holland Otis White, which will appeal to most of the sons and daughters of Methodist preachers:

Meditations of a Son Upon the Eve of His Parents' Golden Wedding Anniversary.

(Holland Otis White.)

It came upon me without warning. The papers carry notices of an occasional celebration of this sort, and there seems to be universal interest in the arrival of a married couple at the fiftieth anniversary of the glad event. But this particular anniversary, which concerns me more than anybody else's, did nevertheless creep upon me as aforesaid.

Dismissing the matter of my enforced absence as quickly as possible, because I prefer not to dwell upon my sorrow at not being with you, I will simply state that I am at the very moment these words are being read sharing with you the joy of the occasion. Mine, too, is the pride of belonging to a household dedicated from its creation fifty years ago to-day to the finer and nobler things of life. Plain living and high thinking have been the watchwords all the way. The words, "One hundred per cent Americans," might well have been coined for the purpose of describing this couple, whose early life differs but little in its hardships from that of the immortal patriots of early days.

Of set purpose I am setting down on paper in quite random fashion these meditations, for the occasion seems to call for less of studied oration than affectionate reminiscences, less of biographical exactitude than just plain old-fashioned family chat. You see, I used to know the subjects of these remarks quite well. I lived under their roof a good many years. I wonder if I ever told them how I prize those years. I will tell them now. I think no family ever had a happier time together. No children ever enjoyed life more. None ever had more good things to eat. We ate fruits and vegetables, both raw and cooked, before ever the dietitians discovered their great vitamin content. Wagons filled with freshly butchered beef covered with leaves passed our home regularly, and we generally got the best steak they had. This steak, prepared according to a secret formula known only by my mother, and cooked according to another formula equally potent and successful, never failed to gratify the senses of smell and of taste, and to this day I doubt if any of us children can remember any steak to equal it.

The pearcher's buggy used to haul many kinds of freight, human and otherwise, but what we children used to prize most was the large food supply that came in every time father returned from his weekly trips. Roasting ears, dozens of them, juicy and tender potatoes by the sack, watermelons—everything the farmer raised for food went on our table. We bought flour by the barrel then, and the biscuit made from it tasted as biscuit never tasted at any hotel or eating place before or since. With home-made butter inserted in the proper place between the crusts, and country-made cane molasses poured from a jug, it is no wonder that one of us boys is recorded never to have failed, three times a day over a period of several years, to say when asked what he would take, "biscuit and molasses."

On the numberless occasions when I went with father on his rounds, I think I had better not attempt to tell of the good times I had. It simply cannot be told, there are no words for it. First, the apple orchard, then the library, then the supper table, then the fireplace in winter or the front porch in summer, there to listen to the wise men talk. And finally to bed, to wake up in the morning to look up at the strange ceiling, with the thrill children feel at being in some other home than their own.

Enough of the pleasures of childhood. But we children do owe to our parents those pleasures, too. I find many children who are not having such pleasures—any pleasures at all comparable to those we had. Our parents were not afraid to play with us. We had lots of fun together. Maybe that sort of a start in life plays as big a part in the making of useful, successful children as the other things we stress so much. Our first toast to our parents, then, shall be: To father and mother, who gave us a healthful and happy childhood.

Preachers are noted for seeing that their children get an education. The pages of "Who's Who" reveal certain statistics as to preachers' sons which are highly gratifying to preachers and their sons. We are grateful for the start we got, but I am prepared to take a broader view and I make the assertion that my father, for every child of his own he has started on the road to educational achievement, has stimulated hundreds of other people's children to follow the same course, and in many cases has shown the way. I have not the figures, but there must be not fewer than twenty-five active ministers of the gospel who became such through my father's influence. The number may be nearer fifty. All this in addition to his other strenuous duties. I do not wish father to blush as he listens to these things I am telling to his guests. I am glad he has lived long enough to hear me say them and I am glad I have so far got the better of our Anglo-Saxon habit of never letting people know how much we like them to be able to say these things. Whatever we children do in life must be very largely attributed to the educational start given us by our parents. In everything I have said or shall say, my dear mother comes in for fully one-half the credit and thanks. Hers was the greater task of waging the defensive warfare at home, without the stimulation of the crowd to uphold her. She is an exceeding modest woman, and nothing will make her admit that she ever did anything greatly worth while. Her friends can do her no greater service, I believe, than to reveal to her her own great and good qualities. Her children take this opportunity to tell her publicly that she is not unlike the great mothers of history in her courageous support of her husband in his trials, and her patience and wisdom with the children at home during his absence. Our second toast, then, is: To our father and mother, who introduced us to the world of learning, and thus made possible whatever success we have attained.

Last of all but most important, my parents dedicated themselves to the work of the Christian ministry, the most exacting, yet the most inspiring work possible on this earth. As to the successful manner in which they have practiced their profession, the records of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, furnish legal evidence, but on the hearts of our tens of thousands of happy, useful Christian men and women and children, scattered all over Mississippi and elsewhere, are written in sweet and affectionate memories that other evidence dear to them and dearer to the preacher and his wife than all else except the approval and benediction of the God they serve. In the exercise of their duties in this noble profession of the ministry (again I must join husband and wife, who share equally in the work) this couple whom you are honoring to-day have experienced all the vicissitudes that the pioneers went through, save only the pesky red man himself. Never actually beaten with stripes, as Paul was, yet threatened more than once, father reminds me of the first itinerants who ever came into that territory now called Mississippi. They rode on horseback through forests and swamps, through swollen rivers, in danger of their lives constantly, and some of them paid with their lives for their daring. Father has lived to see this glad day, but only in that respect does he differ from them, for all this and more he has suffered. A biography would disclose the things I would love to mention, but there is not time. The parsonages he painted, additions built to them, barns built, grape arbors restored, fences built, ground tended, all a part of his mission. Work without stint or limit. I believe he even built one church with his own hands. Then the greater work: thousands of faithful members added to the church. A marvelous record. You may get the figures from him. The central headquarters of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, ought to have them totaled up. Never a lazy bone, never an idle hour. The same with mother. Always busy with her quick movements here and there.

Well, this tribute is but a poor thing. But they, the living, loving, beloved objects of this tribute are with you now; they sit there, feeling in their innermost souls the joy of great service, the reward of godly living, the solace after trials. They ask little of any man: just love and kindness and prayers. We, their children in the flesh, desire to join hands with you, some of whom are their children in the Spirit, and with all other such, wherever they may be, in order to form one great compact body of their friends, and I call upon this bodyguard, as I will term it, to comfort this brave, good man and this sweet, good women, who loves good letters and good books and good poetry (and writes some herself); visit them, tell them that there's plenty more for them to do; never let them for a moment get the idea that they are old. Grant their joints may be a little stiff at times; father may not be able to hunt as fast and as far as he used to, mother maybe can't run a footrace, but people aren't getting old nowadays, tell them.

From this distance, it looks to me as if father and mother are in a little paradise already, made up of their friends of twenty, thirty, forty years' standing. On every side of them is one of father's old circuits. No wonder he is getting younger in spirit daily. Keep it so. If he only had a chauffeur when he gets tired driving, I think he would be the luckiest man alive.

So, I'm done. Imagine all I have not told you. If you feel like it, and there is time before dinner, suppose some of you get up and add to this imperfect tribute something from your own hearts. My direct message to father and mother is this: Be from this moment absolutely assured that your children are conscious of your great worth to the world; they are not behind the rest of the world in acclaiming your achievements; we vie with all men and women in honoring you to whom honor is due. Your children, in unison with your guests, and with your friends everywhere, wish to give you as our final toast: To father and mother, parents of the Wesley type, true, devoted, wonderful and wise parents, many more years of happy living, mingling with plain folks, whom you, after the manner of Christ, love so much. Nothing your children can do shall he lacking. Joy be to this day!

A GUEST.

SOME REMINISCENCES OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Brother Carley: I got a letter from Brother Jaco requesting me to write up the organization of the North Mississippi Conference. I hardly know how to begin; but I will begin by saying that J. J. Brooks, Hiram R. Colwell, B. H. Bounde, H. C. Morehead, Ira R. Hicks, and myself joined the Memphis Conference in November, 1869, and were cut off in North Mississippi in its organization in 1870. That fall Thomas Cameron became one of our class, coming to us from the Alabama Conference. I remember one morning Dr. Fitzgerald came to the door of the Conference, having been on the train all night, and called for the pastor, who asked him to go in and meet the Conference. "No," he said, "I have not had my breakfast nor washed my face nor combed my head;" but the pastor said, "I will give you your home when you go in and meet the brethren." In he went and had the house in a roar of laughter telling his night's experience and how hungry he was.

The man I remember most forcibly was Rev. J. H. Brooks, who licensed me to preach, and who stood by me during my sixteen years in that Conference. My next elder was Phillip Tuggle, for whom my oldest son is named, and who got me in a strait at the district stewards' meeting when Brother Fant wanted the stewards to add more of the elder's salary to my work, stating I was a single man. My steward said I was soon to get married, and Brother Tuggle said I had not told him. My steward said I told him I had told my elder. Young as I was and timid, I could not sit still and be made to tell a falsehood; so I rose and told them I had talked with Brother Brooks and that my appointment was made by Brother Brooks in view of that fact.

My next elder was Rev. J. P. Stone. These brethren were true as steel to God, the church, and their brethren.

My next elder was T. Y. Ramsey. I had been sent to a work with eleven local preachers and five exhorters. The bulk of them organized to rule the preacher or starve him out, and as the bishop read me to that work, Brother Stone said, "Roll up your sleeves and wade into that difficulty, and I will stand by you." But he was not the elder any more, and I had to fight it alone. I conquered and came out victorious, leaving the work in good fix.

From there I was sent seventy-five miles to a work where there was no home to rent nor place to board, and I had to buy a farm with a school house on it and make a home out of that. R. G. Porter was my elder. My next was T. W. Dye; then J. M. Boon; then T. W. Dye again; then Sam Thames; last of all was Rev. C. N. Terry, that grand old man with whom I spent some time in his room in Memphis three years ago.

Having given a list of my elders, I will mention some other men. William Shepard was one of my first associates, the smartest of them all; but he had a bad record in the Northern Methodist Church, and it came out on him after he had filled our best stations. When I heard of it, I sat down and cried like a child; yet I had no protection for him. G. W. Bachman I knew when he began preaching. John Boswell I heard preach in 1858. Oh yes, we had a dancer—Dancer was once elder. Dr. Cameron was a fine character. Brother Hampton got away with Bishop Kavanaugh at Columbus, with the bronze lions When the bishop was wondering at the art of man, Brother Hampton said, "That is not all that is strange about these lions." "What is that?" said the bishop. Hampton said, "Bishop, when they hear the clock strike they turn and listen. The Bishop walked on, wondering, and finally turned and said, "Hampton, explain that to me," and Hampton, with a hearty laugh, said, "Bishop, they never hear the clock strike."

I must not forget J. W. Posten, T. C. Weir, Brother Harris, both my closest friends; and Brother Lowery was a prominent figure.

I must not forget my old friends, J. B. Streater and F. A. Howell, who are the only charter lay delegates of 1870 now living. Brother Hamilton was a great character also, and others I might recall, but I am just writing offhand. I will soon be eighty-two years old, but my love for my old Conference has never failed. I was treated badly, which caused me to leave there, not through malice, but in self-protection. The rank and file of the Conference were my friends. I hope to meet those older brethren who did me wrong in heaven, and I know they will do me right there.

I have been reading the Advocate for over fifty yaers, and must continue it while I can read.

Yours in Christ,

S. W. MILLER.

A VEXATIOUS PROBLEM SOLVED.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

It will be remembered by those in attendance that at our Sunday School Conference in Alexandria last spring one of the livest open-floor discussions that we had was on the "keeping of the Sunday school children to church"—and the adults as well. The point of interest to us in that discussion was not any suggestion as to the solution of this ever-present problem to so many pastors, but to wonder if the pastors and leaders had really gotten to a place of the acceptance of the problem's solution, which we intended to give them before the discussion closed, but were hindered by the discussion's sudden close, if they seemed really to wish for its solution; for, for many years this has been no problem to us—that is, if no outside opposition is brought to bear in our conduct of our morning service. It will be remembered in the various discussions at Alexandria that some took the position that if children went to Sunday school, they would finally get to coming to church, too, and so the home-going habit is not so serious, and some seemed to be satisfied if they did not attend preaching at all, since Sunday school was a part of the church; one suggested that the big adult Bible class be done away with, since often men and women, just as children, would go home from these classes and leave the pastor to preach to empty benches, feeling that they had "done their religion" in the Bible class attendance. But for the most part both pastors and worthy Sunday school superintendents realized that there had crept into our morning church service a vexatious and distracting problem that was clamoring for solution.

For years we have been following an hour and a half program for combined worship, preaching, and teaching service of about thirty minutes each. The preferable way to carry out this program is for the pastor to conduct the worship service, using the regular service of the church and then to preach his sermon, taking about the usual time —one hour; then the superintendent takes charge and has a thirty minutes study period, record making, and distribution of literature, and any special feature that belongs to the Sunday school for that day. In this way both parents and children worship together, attend preaching together, and in the same session study the Bible together. And a principal advantage is that the pastor not only gets to lead all of his congregation in worship and to preach to them, but gets them while they are unwearied by an hour of previous service, and without the vexations of mind that often come to him in trying to hold the congregation that seems to be home-bound. In the rural churches where preaching is held only once a month, and there is no going home after Sunday school, it might be best to have the Sunday school superintendent conduct his usual devotional program, which is usually very brief, and then for the pastor so to abbreviate the preaching worship service as to make the whole program come within the hour and a half limit—from 10:30 to 12 in the morning, or from 2:30 to 4 in an afternoon service. But in the village or larger churches, to start with the regular worship program at 10, concluding at 11:30, and getting home for dinner at 12, is preferable.

In our experience of years this program has every advantage and no disadvantage, unless it be that some worshipers prefer to leave church with the sermon rather than the studied lesson fresh in their minds. We have found only three objectors to this service—parents who claim that children should not be subjected to the trying ordeal of hearing their pastors preach, though they may be church members with the vows of church membership on them; the goody-goody type of child-defender psychologist, who takes the position that there should be two separate services, with a benediction after Sunday school, so that the child may be free to choose whether or not he will stay for the further preaching service, and not be "forced to stay" without having an opportunity to go home; and an occasional Sunday school superintendent who feels that after being chosen superintendent he should have a full hour—and more—for various improvised programs, at whatever cost to the pastor's sermon. But this program provides all that people go to church for—worship, preaching and teaching—in an hour and a half, before tired or hungry. For the side line evident virtues that all pastors who have tried it have themselves learned, we refer the reader to an article in the Aug. 10 issue of the Nashville Christian Advocate, by Rev. Ernest T. Raney, of Slater, Mo.

NEWS NOTES FROM THE LAKE CHARLES DISTRICT.

Last Sunday was a great day for our people at Lake Charles. It was the occasion of the opening of the splendid church that has just been completed. Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Meridian, Miss., preached at both hours. His messages were on a high plane and greatly appreciated by the people. In the morning there were more than a thousand people present by actual count. At the evening service there was a splendid congregation again.

Dr. Wynn and his people have accomplished a great achievement. The church is very beautiful and constructed of the best of materials. The workmanship that has gone into the building has been the best. The church attracts the attention of all passers-by.

The building has been opened for several different occasions since the evening of Wednesday, Aug. 1, when Brother A. M. Mayo had a full attendance of his fifty and more Sunday school workers.

Dr. Wynn is a station preacher who has built two churches during the year. He has gathered into the church some people in a community a few miles out of Lake Charles, who also built a neat little frame building. He preached in this church for the first time on the evening of the fourth Sunday in July. Services are to be conducted there by Dr. Wynn, or myself, on each Thursday evening.

It is worthy of note also that Brother R. S. Walton and his people have built two splendid parsonages during the year, one at Vinton, and also one at Sulphur. The work is going along well on that charge We have had a number of meetings in the district during the year and the work as a whole seems to be moving forward well

IN THE RHODODENDRON COUNTRY.

By William C. Allen.

Come with me for a few minutes and listen to a simple story from oversea.

Let us visit a town on the southern coast of England which has no old castles, no ruins, no cathedrals, no grotesque gargoyles, no hoary traditions. It is an up-to-date community of about one hundred thousand people. It is seldom visited by Americans. It is one of the most beautiful cities in England.

Bournemouth—the city of which I speak—is a residential and tourist resort. It is near the Isle of Wight. It claims the warmest climate in a land where the fickle weather chills the average American to the center of his being. Like Atlantic City, Bournemouth is a creation of the past few decades. Both are cosmopolitan. It exhibits much wealth, but few evidences of poverty. In both cities there are facilities for an infinite variety of popular entertainments. Here our comparison ceases.

Along the water front, behind the beach, rises the rugged cliff, a picturesque wall of rock and earth. Clinging to it are multi-colored shrubs, grasses and flowers. There is a handsome pier extending far out to sea. When a really warm day intrudes itself upon our chill-enjoying British neighbors, they go down to the beach—like the rest of us—and frolic in the sands. Behind the cliff-rim extends the town with its winding tree-lined roadways, hawthorn hedges, stretches of woodland, close-cropped sward. There are miles of bewilderingly gay bloom, small mountains of crimson, pink and white rhododendrons. This marvelous gardening makes an exquisite setting for the sharp-gabled stucco or brick houses one sees at every turn.

In the business center of Bournemouth are delightful gardens surrounded by big stores, hotels, cafes; acres devoted to the enjoyment of the public. Through these grounds meanders a purling stream in the midst of green and mossy banks, intriguing footpaths, lovely flower beds and rock gardens. There are spreading trees and semi-tropical palms. In this park tourists rest and children play.

A unique feature of Bournemouth is the ravines, or depressions, that wander through it to the sea. These are called "chines." In numerous instances they have been converted into public gardens; others remain in their primeval condition. Frequently they are only a few hundred feet in width, and are encircled by smooth streets and charming private grounds. In the bottom, almost unseen, will meander a streamlet, bordered by young bracken and sheltered by overhanging foliage. Ivy clings to the trees. Oaks, sturdy and filled with forest pride, tell the story of the Creator's way, whilst his more modest handiwork lends fairness to the view. Austrian pines with rugged bark and tall yellow candles, Scotch pines with smoother bark and small oval cones, lift their forms toward heaven. Holly, with its glistening leaves, is already preparing for the next Christmastide. Birds—I do not know their names—whistle overhead. Sunlight in fantastic motion—when the days are clear—filters through the forest roof. You noiselessly tread soft pathways of resilient pine needles which yield like a carpet beneath your feet. You can imagine yourself far from the haunts of men, save for the nearby hum of motor cars. You catch glimpses of the Elizabethan gables of pleasant homes around you. The very air seems impregnated with an emerald tint as it absorbs the color of the sylvan scene. Stately stretches of wild mauve-colored, or lavender, rhododendrons flare their bloom in a setting of rich browns and vivid greens. All this is right in the midst of urban life.

The country behind Bournemouth is abundant in historical associations. One day in exploring these we drove to Stonehenge, that mysterious ruin of mighty rocks connected with prehistoric days. Whilst dodging insistent raindrops a skylark leaped from the high grass near us and, with strangely fluttering wings and spiral movement, vertically ascended into the sky. He sang with blithesome note as if rapturously bidding defiance to all things below. Finally—a speck above us—he disappeared from view and the joyful music ceased. Then, out of the gray sky as if thrown by an unseen hand, he fell toward earth, recovered himself and singing flew away.

Around Bournemouth are very ancient abbeys, priories, castles built in the rough old Norman days. Long rows of huge earth-built Roman camps and Saxon fortifications tell of the turbulent long ago. Winchester and Salisbury, proud cities of the past with splendid cathedrals, are not far distant. Great houses of the wealthy, set in luxuriant parks, meet the eyes. There are quaint villages in the midst of buttercup-flecked meadows and fruitful fields. Other old towns romantically nestle close to the restless sea. There are crooked streets and queer little shops galore. There are simple homes with thick thatched roofs, where the overhanging straw is cut away from around small windows of leaded diamond panes. There are moss-covered stone roofs on cottages and farm houses, crowning ivy-bedecked stone walls. There is the New Forest—where King William Rufus hunted and was killed almost nine hundred years ago—its wild verdure not much changed in the intervening centuries. Spaces of timber, looking from the distance like solid masses of dark-green, enchant the observer. The higher hedgerows, the deeper recesses of the woodland, reveal their finest beauty in the miles of rhododendrons, whose rose-like flowers dance beneath the fitful skies in the sweet country air.

In a few weeks the great regiments of rhododendron blossoms disappear. Their brave little comrades—the modest bluebells—pass away. Then come the golden harvest and the purple heath. One glory succeeds another glory—thus has it ever been with the delightful things of God.

England, 1928.

RESOLUTION PASSED BY EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF GENERAL HOSPITAL BOARD, MAY 23, 1928.

Inasmuch as citizens of Alexandria, La., have made overtures to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, seeking to secure a Methodist Hospital in that city, and making certain tentative offers to this effect; and,

Inasmuch as this Executive Committee is informed by Rev. Claude K. Smith that the Committee on Location of a Hospital, appointed by the 1927 session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, has unanimously endorsed this proposition; and,

Inasmuch as Rev. Claude K. Smith has letters from each and every member of the Louisiana Conference Hospital Board, with the exception of Rev. L. W. Cain, of Baton Rouge District, endorsing the proposition to build a hospital in Alexandria, provided no debt is incurred on the same in the name of the Annual Conference; and,

Whereas, we are informed by Rev. Claude K. Smith that the majority of the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference have likewise endorsed the proposition;

Therefore, be it resolved, That this General Hospital Board authorizes the use of the Golden Cross Society in promoting said movement, in case the Annual Conference shall undertake to build a hospital in Alexandria;

Resolved, second, That we appoint Rev. Claude K. Smith to represent the General Hospital Board in bringing the movement into shape to present it to the Annual Conference for final action under the law of our church; Rev. Claude K. Smith is hereby authorized to receive donations, or devises in land, money, or notes, or subscriptions, given for this enterprise, as the agent in this matter for the General Hospital Board, until the Annual Conference shall take the enterprise out of the hands of the General Hospital Board. It is understood that said donations or devises are conditioned on the final acceptance of this proposition by the Louisiana Annual Conference. Should said Annual Conference fail to accept the proposcition made by the citizens of Alexandria, it is understood that these donations may be claimed by the donors of the same, and if so claimed shall be returned to said donors.

THE SUPER-MAN, THE AVERAGE MAN, AND EDUCATION.

By Rev. J. Tillery Lewis.

One of the greatest assets of the character of Thomas Jefferson was his belief and trust in the individual man. The whole policy of the political life of that great American was attuned by his belief in the average man. He had confidence in the virtue, the ability, the integrity and in the truth of the masses.

It was not thus with that other great American, Alexander Hamilton. Hamilton was a believer in super-men as the only ones who had sufficient judgment, integrity and ability to run the affairs of government. Alexander Hamilton distrusted the masses as being altogether unfit to have a voice in governmental affairs.

We still have these two types of men with us. We have them in politics, in education, in religion and in art.

In the educational world, the thought is growing that a college, to attain unto its highest efficiency in the matter of turning out a highly finished product, must have the privilege of selecting her students. This tendency is drifting from the Jeffersonian conception of men and turning to the Hamiltonian conception of humanity. Those colleges that are attempting this method of selecting their students will tell you that they desire to educate the leaders of to-morrow. But, pray tell me, how it is that any man, or set of men, can look over a body of high school students and tell who among them will be the leaders of to-morrow?

Thomas Jefferson had three sentences put on his tomb: "Author of the Declaration of Independence. Author of Statutes of Religious Liberty in Virginia. Father of the University of Virginia."

Jefferson believed in putting the possibility of an education within the reach of all. He believed in educating the masses and preparing them for their duties as citizens of a great nation.

The founder of our great Millsaps College at Jackson, Miss., believed in educating the poor boys of the State and founded that institution for that purpose. Major Millsaps came from one of the average homes of our land, but grew into a super-man in finance through education, training and observation. He believed in the average man, and demonstrated that belief through the founding of a college for poor boys in Mississippi. More than a score of poor boys found a sympathetic hearing from him during his lifetime when they appealed for financial help to finish their education. I doubt not but that the number of poor worthy boys that he helped in their struggle for an education mounts up into the hundreds.

We are in a new day. The cost of an education at this time is several times over what it was when this humble scribe went through Millsaps. A poor boy has even a harder time to obtain an education to-day than had he when I went through college. It was hard enough then, but it is harder now. A greater number of boys and girls come from homes of affluence to-day than did they in my days in college. The very nature and condition of the times we are now living in have a Hamiltonian cast that makes it harder every way for poor boys and girls. Therefore our educators cannot afford to lose sight of the needs of the poor boys and girls, even though applicants overwhelm them from the homes of affluence of our land. In the end, the poor boy and girl of to-day who is struggling to make something worthwhile of himself and herself through educating and training of their minds, will likely be worth more to the college, to the church and to the State than will be those who come from the homes of what we are pleased to call super-men.

I am trusting and praying that the day will never come when a poor boy who desires an education will not be able to obtain that education at Millsaps College.

The Home Circle.

BERRY SONG.

By Mary Carolyn Davies.

Dewberries, blue berries—
These are a few berries
That we're all fond of, I know!
Snowberries, squawberries,
Raspberries, strawberries,
In forest or garden-bed grow!

If you are nimble,
You will find thimble-
Berries, red velvet each one!
And if your luck'll
Hold, there'll be huckle-
Berries for pie when you're done!

Pick up your berry pail,
Currant and cherry pail,
Each little maiden and man!
Never refuse berries,
Logan or gooseberries;
Bring them to mother to can!

So! You did, merrily,
Your duty berrily;
Now that it's winter instead,
Here is the prize you won;
Since you were wise, you won!
See! You have jam on your bread!

ELIZABETH'S BLUE HAT.

By Minerva Hunter.

"W-o-o, W-o-o," came the boat whistle far down the river. "Mother is coming!" Elizabeth called to her two small brothers and the three raced down to the wharf to see the boat.

"How I wish I could go somewhere," Elizabeth mused. "I have been so lonesome here all winter and spring without my sister Sophia. I wish I had been old enough to go away to school. I wonder what Sophia's school is like."

The big boat drew nearer and nearer and they could see the people on board. Elizabeth was first to spy her mother and waved to her. Elizabeth's father came from his store and a number of other people gathered on the wharf, for the weekly coming the boat was a great event in the neighborhood.

"George," Elizabeth's mother said as soon as the boat landed, "I met Cousin Blanche Greer in Johnsonville and she is going over to Daleville to see her sister graduate. She offered to take Elizabeth if we could get her ready by the time this boat comes back. I asked the captain and he says he will be up the river about an hour and a half and will stop for Elizabeth if we decide to let her go. Don't you think the trip will be fine for her? Sophia will be so glad to see her, too."

"If you do not mind rushing to get her ready, I think it would be fine for both girls," the father said.

"I do not mind rushing," Elizabeth's mother laughed.

The next hour and a half were the busiest Elizabeth had ever known. Bathing, shampooing, sewing on buttons, packing, kept the whole family moving.

"I bought you a beautiful hat," her mother told her. "It is still down at the wharf. Do not forget to get it when you are ready to get on the boat. It matches your new blue dress exactly."

Just then, as the last strap on the suit case was being fastened, the boat's whistle blew and all ran down to the wharf to see Elizabeth off.

As Elizabeth stepped upon the gangplank she remembered the new hat. "Where is my hat, mother," she asked and her mother took a striped band box from a heap of parcels on the wharf and handed it to her.

When the boat rounded the bend in the river and Elizabeth could no longer wave to those left behind, she decided to look at the new hat, but just then the captain called her to come to lunch.

She had barely finished eating her ice cream when the boat stopped to load calves. Elizabeth knew a good deal about calves, for she had two of her own at home. At the next stop hogs were loaded and still farther down the river great barrels, called hogsheads, filled with tobacco were brought on board.

Before Elizabeth realized it, it was time for another meal, and then she sat on deck watching for the first glimpse of the lights at Johnsonville.

It was late when the boat landed at Johnsonville, and Cousin Blanche met her and took her home. Early the next morning they went by train to Daleville.

How glad Sophia and Elizabeth were to see each other! They talked and talked as Sophia showed her the wonderful buildings and the great green campus of the school.

At last Sophia said, "Mother sent me the dearest pink hat last week! She wrote me in her letter that she had bought you one very much like it, except yours is blue."

"Oh," exclaimed Elizabeth, "I have not looked at my hat. Let's go to your room now and see both of them."

Away they went to Sophia's room, and while Elizabeth struggled with the string on the hand box, Sophia brought out the most adorable pink hat that Elizabeth had ever seen.

"It is beautiful!" exclaimed Elizabeth. "That hat in blue is just the thing I should like to have. Blue is my color."

She began lifting the tissue paper from the band box and the dark spot in the box became darker and darker. "Sophia, come here and look!" Elizabeth said, with tragedy in her voice.

She and Sophia lifted the last piece of tissue paper together.

There in the box a quaint little bonnet of black straw trimmed in curling tips and black jet!

Sophia grabbed the band box top. "Mrs. George Dunn," she read. "That is mother's name all right."

"What else does it say?" Elizabeth asked.

"Wallaceville," Sophia read.

"This is great-aunt Harriet's bonnet," Elizabeth announced. "Maybe the boxes were alike and as mother and great-aunt Harriet have the same name the boxes were put off the boat at the wrong landings."

"How do you suppose she will look in that light blue hat of yours?" Sophia giggled.

"Every bit as well as I shall look in this old dimey black bonnet," said Elizabeth, trying hard not to show how disappointed she felt.

Just then a maid knocked on the door. "A lady to see you," she announced, "and she wants to know if you have seen anything of her bonnet."

"That sounds just like great-aunt Harriet," Sophia laughed. "We shall go right down," she added, and helped Elizabeth put the bonnet back into the box.

"I ordered that bonnet by mail," great-aunt Harriet told the girls after greetings were said, "for I wanted to come here to see two of my great-nieces get their diplomas. When the box came and I found the hat addressed to your mother I called her up right away. She said Elizabeth must have my bonnet, so I brought Elizabeth's blue hat along. Here it is," she added, and got the other hand box from the corner of the room. "The exchange makes everything right."

Great-aunt Harriet tied her beloved bonnet up in its box and left. Sophia and Elizabeth hastened back to Sophia's room to try on their new hats and to rejoice that the blue one arrived in time for the graduation exercises.—The Presbyterian.

WHEN "UNCLE" GEORGE JOINED.

"There ought to be peace atween you an' me. We won't either of us live long. An' we can't face judgment as we aire. So I'm comin'. I've jest joined at Bethel."

All who knew him were able to judge how hard it was for "Uncle" George to dictate this verbal message to the boy who was to carry it across the mountain to the man on Bending Fork—John Harrison Allen tells the story in the Congrgationalist.

There had been bad blood between the two for years, and the cause was trivial. They argued, over their crops, as to which had the best saddle mule, and it ended in a wrangle. They parted, each vowing that he would kill the other on sight if ever they met again. Then came an election in which the two espoused the cause of rival candidates for the circuit court bench, and the feud was irrevocable. Even the most ardent lovers of peace ceased to intercede.

Finally it settled down to this: there would be peace so long as both men remained each on his own side of the mountain. The only neutral ground was the tiny village five miles up the creek, where they had to go for grocery supplies and mail. Years passed.

There is preaching in the log "church house" on Janet's creek every fourth Sunday. Just a week before his seventy-second birthday "Uncle" George—for so all called him—left his seat abruptly at the morning service and stalked down the aisle during the singing of the last hymn. He was received into membership.

What a surprise it was to all! "Uncle" George was considered an "infidel" by all. "Aunt" Betty, his wife, had continued hoping.

"I took him fer better or fer worse, fer richer or fer poorer, in sickness or in health, till death do us part, an' I ain't goin' to let go o' him till he is dead or till I am," "Aunt" Betty had often remarked. "He's been a good man to me."

But even "Aunt" Betty was not "figurin' on George gettin' seccha dose o' religion." Hardly had the benediction been pronounced, when the mountaineer declared his purpose to cross the mountain forthwith and seek peace with his enemy. Friends expostulated.

"I hain't never been no 'infidel!'" protested "Uncle" George. "I have been staying out o' church because o' that fight. Now I'm going to make it right."

By way of compromise the man agreed to wait a half hour while a boy carried a verbal message of explanation across the mountain.

After thirty minutes had passed the mountaineer swung into the saddle. "If he hain't willin' to make peace, let him shoot. The trouble with most people is they want a religion that don't cost nothing."

Hands folded over the horn of his Texas saddle, "Uncle" George, back erect—he was thin and wiry and nimble in spite of his seven-two years— permitted his mule to pick its way up the steep trail. At any instant might come the crack of a rifle. To pick the old man out of the saddle from ambush would indeed be easy. But his face showed no emotion.

At last—and it seemed ages to those watching in the valley—the mule reached the top and started down the opposite side.

The tension ended abruptly. A man, rifle under arm, stepped from the bushes. The two grayheards eyed one another closely. "Uncle" George was the first to speak:

"I'm here. I jest joined Bethel. I reckon I'm more to blame than you. I allers was a perfec' fool when I was drinkin'."

The other's face beamed. He reached up his hand: "'Pears to me I otter be shamed. I been a church member fer years, but I never figured on makin' peace acause o' that."

On the creek below was a log home, smoke curling from the chimney of the lean-to-kitchen. In the front yard stood a woman, stooped and gray, screening her eyes with her hand, her intent gaze on the trail. Her face wreathed with smiles when she saw the two coming side by side, her husband leading "Uncle" George's mule.

At the woman's feet a flock of chickens clustered, looking for food. She stooped and caught a chicken. A deft motion and twist and the chicken flopped on the earth.

"Who-e-ee! Who-e-ee!" It was the mountan call. Her voice was joyous, vibrant. "Hurry,' you all. We'll have friend chicken." She stooped and caught up another fowl. "An' we'll send ter fetch Betty. We'll have 'er here by the time dinner's ready. Hurry, you all!"—Michigan Advocate.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We thank Rev. R. V. Fulton, our efficient pastor at Clay, La., for three subscriptions recently sent in.

The work of the church at Montrose, Miss., where Rev. D. E. Vickers is pastor, is moving along well in all departments.

Rev. R. P. Neblett, our pastor at Kosciusko, Miss., is enjoying a vacation "out in the Ozarks." He expects to be back about Sept. 1.

Mr. John A. Miller, of West Point, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "I have been reading the Advocate for thirty years, and would feel lost without it."

Dr. Paul W. Wipperman, new superintendent of the Touro Infirmary, the great Jewish institution of this city, is, with his wife, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Dr. Elmer T. Clark, of the General Board of Missions, spent Monday of this week in New Orleans. Dr. Clark is always busy about the great work in which he is engaged.

Next Sunday will be observed as "Ladies' Day" by the Big Brothers class, Greenville, Miss., when every member is expected to be present and have with him "his wife, mother, or sweetheart."

From the Southern Reporter, Sardis, Miss., of Aug. 17: "Rev. C. T. Floyd, who is conducting a meeting at Pleasant Grove this week, reports a splendid attendance and a high degree of interest in the services."

The British Wesleyan Conference, at its recent session in Liverpool, voted by exactly the requisite seventy-five per cent of its membership for union with the Primitive and the United Methodist bodies, which had previously voted in favor of union.

Announcement is made that Dr. Stanley High, for the past four years assistant secretary of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has become associate editor of the Christian Herald, of which Dr. Daniel A. Poling is editor-in-chief.

It will be good news to the many friends of Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Holmes, Shreveport, La., that Mrs. Holmes, after seven months of serious illness, several weeks of which she spent in the Shreveport Hospital and three months in the Baptist Hospital, New Orleans, is now on the road to complete recovery. She returned home from the Baptist Hospital about three weeks ago.

The Sunday school of the Broad Street Methodist Church, Lake Charles, La., had an attendance of more than 500 on the day of the opening of the new church. The educational division of the new building is thoroughly up-to-date, with ample provision for all departments of the work. This school is efficiently administered by Mr. A. M. Mayo as superintendent, with a staff of about eighty officers and teachers.

Rev. and Mrs. James L. Sells, Gulfport, Miss., announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Helen Grace, to Rev. D. W. Poole, of Choudrant, La., in the Long Beach Methodist Church, at 5 o'clock p. m., on Tuesday, Aug. 28. Friends of the family are invited to be present. The Advocate, in advance of the happy event, extends all good wishes to this fine young couple of trained Christian workers.

Rev. P. M. Caraway, pastor of Parker Memorial, this city, recently assisted Rev. E. C. Dufresne in a meeting at Gueydan, La., in which there were eighteen additions to the membership of the church—sixteen of them on profession of faith. The old Methodist Episcopal church building, in which services had been discontinued, has been bought by the Southern Methodists and added to their church, thus giving a good plant.

General Evangelist Mark Terrell, of Dallas, Tex., is holding a revival campaign at Shreveport, La., under the auspices of the Mangum Memorial Church, where Rev. R. M. Brown is pastor. The influence of this meeting is being felt practically throughout the city, and there have been many conversions, and quite a number of names of converts given for membership in the churches. Dr. Terrell begins a city-wide revival at Clarendon, Ark., Sept. 2.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, pastor of Central Church, Meridian, Miss., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Wednesday of last week. He was returning home from Lake Charles, La., where he had preached the opening sermon in the Broad Street Methodist Church on the preceding Sunday. He was greatly pleased with the new church, speaking especially of the great interest shown in its building by the city as indicated by the large congregations.

Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Duren, of Atlanta, Ga., where Dr. Duren is pastor of St. Mark Methodist Church, with their daughter, Mary—spent a few days on the Seashore Camp Ground last week, en route home after visiting friends and relatives in Mississippi. As part of his vacation, Dr. Duren assisted the pastor, Rev. C. H. Strait, in a meeting at Meadville. Mrs. Duren made a brief visit to friends in New Orleans, where Dr. Duren was pastor of Rayne Memorial for six years.

Mr. J. B. Holland, of Meridian, Miss., recently delivered his lecture, "God's Cinema," or "The Greatest Moving Picture," in the Methodist church in Montrose and Louin. Mr. Holland, in a clear and forceful manner, drew a picture of life from the cradle to the grave, which was not only interesting, but full of inspiration as well. The music and singing by the young ladies with him was great. Mr. Holland has been called upon to deliver this lecture nearly two hundred times, and he goes without charge.

Rev. W. H. Royal, pastor of the Natalbany charge, Louisiana Conference, gives the following good report of the work at Wesley Chapel: "We have near completion a new graded road leading from the highway to the church, and we are beautifying the grounds. They have paid their mission special in full; they have raised their quota of the Conference claims, and it has been sent in; they have all their superannuate pledge raised; the pastor and the presiding elder are paid up to Nov. 1; they have an interesting League, an active Woman's Missionary Society, and a splendid Sunday school; they helped their pastor in many ways in his siege of sickness and trouble." This is a fine report from an active, loyal church.

TWO NOTABLE RECORDS.

First Church, Corinth, Miss., has recently lost two of its oldest members, one in point of years and the other in membership in this church: Brother J. A. Price and Sister Mary P. Sanders. Mrs. Sanders died May 14, at the age of 77. She had been a member of First Church since she was 7 years of age and a member of the Sunday school since about 5 years of age. This made her a continuous, active member of the Sunday school for seventy-two years and a member of the church for seventy years.

Brother Price died Aug. 2, in his eighty-ninth year. He joined the Methodist church when 11 years of age, and was an active member up to the time of his last illness, making him an active member of the Methodist church for seventy-seven years. No church ever had two more loyal and faithful members than were found in Sister Sanders and Brother Price. Our loss is heaven's gain.

We have also had two very sad deaths among our young people recently. Raymond (Snub) Pollard, aged 16, died May 12, and Henry (Boots) Johnsey, aged 18, died July 16. Both died of pneumonia. Both of these young men were unusually promising and were active, loyal members of our church. God's servants die, but his work goes on. We still pray, "Thy will be done."

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

By Rev. W. A. Cooper, D.D.

A memorial of the Florida Annual Conference was before the last General Conference to the effect "That, if any representative elected to the General Conference ceases to be, for any reason whatever, a member of the Annual Conference which elected him in the interval of holding the General Conference, the alternate shall automatically take the seat in the General Conference in the order of their election." This memorial was adopted by the General Conference by an overwhelming majority. Later in the session its constituionality was called into question and a motion was made to refer it to the College of Bishops. The Conference refused to refer it and laid the motion on the table. The College of Bishops, however, took cognizance of it and declared it unconstitutional. In their "veto" the bishops did not express any objection to the measure, but thought it best to refer it to the Annual Conference for their ratification. On motion, the General Conference adhered to its former action by a four-fifths majority.

The only objection raised against the measure was that it struck at our connectionalism. As to how it struck at our connectionalism was not stated. It was merely the ipse dixit of a member of the Conference. The reply to that objection is that it not only does not strike at our connectionalism, but strengthens it. It was the idea of proportionate representation in the General Conference of 1808 that saved our church from disintegration. In that General Conference the Philadelphia and Baltimore Annual Conferences had sixty-three members out a total of 129, or nearly a majority of the whole body. The Conference appointed a committee to act on the memorials, requesting "equal representation of delegates from the Annual Conferences, and to form, in future, a delegated General Conference." This was adversely voted on because of the large number of members from the central Conferences. It nearly caused a stampede of members from the distant Conferences. It was Joshua Soule's ability and adroitness that saved the measure from ultimate defeat. It was be who presented to the Conference the paper which was adopted, the third item of which read:

"Each Annual Conference respectively shall have the right to send seven elders, members of their Conferences, as delegates to the General Conference."

The object of the memorial of the Florida Annual Conference is to interpret the law in harmony with what seems to be the desire of the fathers of the General Conference of 1808.

If a delegate elected to the General Conference does not represent his Annual Conference, whom does he represent? The travel-connection has no existence in fact except as the traveling preachers have membership in the Annual Conferences. Every traveling preacher has his membership in his Annual Conference and he is responsible to the Annual Conference of which he is a member for his life and administration. He is elected to the General Conference from an Annual Conference because he is a member of the body; and were he not a member of the body, he would not be elected. The Annual Conference is his constituency. He speaks for the rank and file of his Annual Conference. He is their voice in the General Conference. The United States is a connectionalism. It does not strike at our political connectionalism for congressmen to be elected to represent the people of their district.

Congressmen from Mississippi are not elected to represent the people of Pennsylvania. Americans believe that for the citizens of each Congressional district to be represented by one of their own citizens strengthens the connectionalism of these United States. So we believe that when the brethren of an Annual Conference are represented by one of their own members, our connectionalim is strengthened. The law says that an Annual Conference has the right to its ratio of representation.

"The General Conference shall be composed of one clerical delegate for every forty-eight members of each Annual Conference and an equal number of lay delegates."

This law is very specific, and if for any reason a delegate-elect ceases to be a member of the Annual Conference which elected him, and insists on holding his seat in the General Conference, that Annual Conference is robbed of its ratio of representation in the General Conference. A man cannot represent an Annual Conference of which he is not a member.

It is a well known fact that certain Annual Conferences have been left without any representation in the General Conference by their own members in spite of the second restrictive rule, which reads:

"No Conference shall be denied the privilege of two delegates, one clerical and one lay."

There were two clerical delegates elected by the North West Conference to represent them in the General Conference of 1922. One was transferred before the meeting of the General Conference. The other was transferred before the meeting of the called General Conference in Chattanooga, and the North West Conference was left without representation in that General Conference.

According to the Bishops' Decision, Paragraph 634 of the Discipline,

"The membership of a traveling preacher is . . . in the Annual Conference to which he belongs."

and in Paragraph 638, the Bishops say,

"The announcement that a preacher is transferred changes his membership, so that his rights and responsibilities in the Conference to which he goes begins from the date of his transfer."

What higher right and what greater responsibility can a man have in his church than to represent his Annual Conference in the General Conference? Yet under our present abusive interpretation of the law a delegate may sit with the delegation of an Annual Conference in which he has no rights and to which he is not responsible and be counted in the ratio of that Annual Conference. The Annual Conference is the basal body of American Episcopal Methodism, and as such it is the only place in our government where the rank and file of our preachers—the men who are doing the real work of the church, and many of them doing it on starvation wages—can have a voice in the policies of the church. They speak through their representatives in the General Conference, and only those whose membership is in the Annual Conference which elected them can represent them.

There were two men in a certain Annual Conference elected to represent their brethren in the General Conference, though at different times. One of them said concerning a memorial which had been adopted by the Annual Conference: "No, I shall not vote for it. I shall vote against it and speak against it." This raises the question as to whom do delegates represent in the General Conference. Whom did this brother think be represented, himself or his Conference? To the writer's way of thinking, it was a piece of pure arrogance born of a highly developed egotism. The other representative-elect, after a long and hard struggle over a memorial, which he had opposed and which was lost by two votes, said: "If that memorial had carried, I would have resigned my seat in the General Conference." There is no doubt as to whom this brother, now a bishop, thought he represented.

This change in the interpretation of our law will strengthen our connectionalism by recognizing the Annual Conference as the ultimate body in our Methodism. It will guarantee to each Annual Conference its full quota of representation, by members of its own body, in the General Conference. It will recognize the rank and file of our preachers and laymen by seating only those representatives whose membership is in the Annual Conference which elected them, and it will make our church a representative democracy according to American ideas. Every Annual Conference for its own protection ought to vote unanimously for this constitutional interpretation.

Protection Against Old Age

1878—GOLDEN JUBILEE—1928.

An Invitation.

Brother P. K. Abel has been a member of the Winnfield Methodist church for fifty consecutive years, having assumed our sacred obligations at the age of ten, on the first Sunday in September, 1878. On Monday night, Sept. 3, we will make a public acknowledgment of his faithfulness and conspicuous service to the local church and to our Conference.

Every one is invited, though there will be no invitations issued except in the columns of the press, and in a general way.

Former pastors who cannot greet Brother Abel in person on this occasion, will please write him a letter of appreciation of his loyalty. One feature of the meeting will be the "burning of the mortgage;" for our old church debt, that has been against our church so long, has been paid and the mortgage canceled.

The church has been freshly painted and the roof put in perfect condition. Come and let us make it a great time of rejoicing.

A RARE WAR STORY.

When General George E. Pickett, the greatest hero of Gettysburg, was marching through Pennsylvania, the "enemy country," to engage in that great pending conflict which was destined to be one of the decisive battles of the world, they passed a home where a Yankee maiden stood at the door waving a Union flag. As the Southern army drew near she yelled, "Rebels! Rebels! I dare any man to take this flag." General Pickett, who was first a Southern gentleman and then a Southern soldier, was afraid some of his soldiers, in the hot impulse of their Virginia blood, would accept the dare of this girl to try to take her flag. He turned his horse and raised his hand to stay these men, whose battle cry was, "We will follow you, Marse George." Then he gallantly saluted her flag. After that he waved his cap at the girl and all his men followed their leader. The girl caught the spirit of this Southern army who felt they were marching on to victory were really marching on to defeat in which four-fifths of them would die, dropped her flag, waved her hands to them and yelled, "I wish I had a rebel flag and I would wave it, too."—Exchange.

FORMING PLURALS.

We'll begin with box; the plural is boxes,
But the plural of ox should be oxen, not oxes.
One fowl is a goose, but two are called geese,
Yet the plural of mouse cannot be meese.
You may find a lone mouse, or a whole nest of mice,
But the plural of house is houses, not hice.
If the plural of man is always called men,
Why shouldn't the plural of pan be called pen?
The cow in the plural may be called cows, or kine.
But a bow, if repeated, is never called bine;
And the plural of vow is vows, never vine.
If the singular's this and the plural is these,
Should the plural of kiss ever be written keese?
Then one may be that, and the two would be those,
Yet hat in the plural would never be hose.
We speak of a brother and also of brethren,
But though we say mother, we never say methren.
Then the masculine pronouns are he, his and him.
But imagine the feminine, she, shis, and shim!

MRS. RUTH D. HOLLADAY.

MRS. RUTH D. (BUTLER) HOLLADAY was born in Simpson County, Miss., June 1, 1856; she was converted and joined the Methodist church at Crystal Springs, Miss., in 1878; she was married to Robert E. Holladay in 1872; with her husband she moved to Louisiana in 1879, settling in Natchitoches Parish; she died at the home of her daugbter, Mrs. S. H. Porter, Zwolle, La., June 7, 1928, and her body lies at rest in the cemetery at Zwolle. These bare facts simply indicate a life—they do not describe it. Mrs. Holladay was the mother of nine children, six sons and three daughters, all of whom reached maturity. One of her sons, Rev. T. J. Holladay, is a faithful and useful member of the Louisiana Conference. Sbe was all that a Christian woman could be as wife and mother—and her cbildren rise up and call her blessed. Her preacher son, writing of her, says: "When I told her I was called to the ministry, her first words were, 'I have prayed for it since the day you were born.' * * * I know I never went into the pulpit from that day till the day of her death but tbat sbe prayed for me." She was devoted to her family, true to her friends, and always loyal to her church and her Lord. The Christian graces found beautiful expression in her life. She was a "living epistle" of the beauty of holiness while sbe was among men; gone to her reward, her memory and influence abide as forces of righteousness. Earth is richer for her having lived in it, and the wealth bequeathed to it by her godly life will never be dissipated. She is survived by husband, three sons, and one daughter, who know where to find her and other loved ones gone before. Her earthly life made this a beautiful world for her loved ones and friends; her heavenly life makes even more beautiful for them "the land that is fairer than day." And they expect to meet her there. H. T. CARLEY.

MRS. FRANK M. HARDEE, affectionately known by so many as "Miss Clara," and the precious mother of ten children, quietly slipped away to heaven on the afternoon of July 28, 1928. The passing years always meant suffering for that frail body, but tbe brave spirit patiently clung to life that she daily might serve others. Finally, on May 8, mother was reduced to her bed, where she steadily grew worse. That complete unselfishness so characteristic of her demonstrated unusual devotion, while the Christian principles of a life hid with Christ in God were a constant influence to loved ones and friends. Our mother, of course to us, excelled all mothers, and in saying good-bye we could only find reconciliation by knowing that to remain here was to endure further pain. The flowers do not bloom so sweetly nor sun shine so brightly since our mother has gone. On every hand the reminiscences cause us to bow in tears, yet we know that "joy cometh in the morning." The last rites were said on the afternoon of the Sabbath, July 29. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Joshua Phillips, a lifelong friend, of Shubuta, the girihood home of mother, who was the daughter of Captain and Mrs. T. Jonathan Rudder. Assisting Brother Phillips were the pastor, Emmet Phillips, and Dr. Carter, of Newton. The tired body was laid to rest in McGowan's chapel cemetery beside our father, who was wafted suddenly from us several years ago. After all, the immortal spirit seems to breathe tbis prayer:

"Think of me as withdrawn into the dimness,
Yours still, you mine.
Remember all the best of our past moments and forget the rest,
And so to where I wait come gentiy on."

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, death has removed from us our chairman, W. R. McCROCKLIN, tbus depriving us of a wortby friend and leader of the church;

Therefore, be it resolved by the board of stewards of the First Methodist Church of Manefiid:

1. That we recognize with profound sorrow our very great loss.
2. That we acknowledge our debt of gratitude for his leadership and services to the church.
3. That we hereby convey to his family our heartfelt sympathy, and the assurance of our prayers; and.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our board of stewards, a copy sent to tbe family, and that copies be furnished to the Mansfield Enterprise and the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Frank Hunter, W. C. Cbildress, D. B. Raulins, Committee.

CONCERNING REVIVALS.

Dear Brethren: While some are telling us why we do not have the "old-time" revivals that we once had, and what we must do to have them again, please allow the circuit-rider-lad to remind you that we do have them yet. And I for one am old-fashioned enough to believe that the words, "By the fooiishness of preaching men are saved," are as true today as they ever were, and when we fail to have revivals it is because we fail to preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified in an acceptable manner.

In closing out our one-week revival at Liberty Chapel Saturday night, we found that twenty-one souls had been brought into the Kingdom during the week and every one asked that his name be placed on the roll of the Methodist Church of that place. And you ask how it was done? The only answer I can give is that our good brother, R. H. Bamburg, of the Trout-Goodpine work, under the leadership of the Spirit, brought to us such gospel messages with such power and force that men and women could not say no to the voice of God.

Although we have had a church at Liberty Chapel about one hundred years, yet many of the preachers in our Conference do not know where it is. I feel that you have a right to know, since some of your mission money is going to the support of this work. A. D. LEMONS, Pastor.

FROM CLAY, LA.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am sending a brief account of three of my meetings.

Beginning with Brother H. W. Cudd at Clay, July 9, we continued for nine days. There were 21 accessions, with fine interest and good congregations. Cudd is a fine pastor-evangelist.

Then, on tbe fourth Sunday in July, we moved on to Wesley. Rev. J. F. Dring came to us Monday and we continued until the following Sunday. We were rained completely out of three services and otherwise hindered by muddy roads; but we had a great meeting. Brother Dring did good preaching and staged the greatest come-back Saturday night I ever saw, when 12 joined the church, making 13 for this meeting.

We next went to Long Straw, on the first Sunday in August. The elder, Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, came to us for the evening hour and he did good evangelistic preaching, which was highly appreciated by large congregations. We had a good time together in the Lord's work. But the results were not so good as had been hoped for.

Now we are in our last meeting, which is at New Prospect. I made a good beginning yesterday, the second Sunday in August, and am looking for Brother J. W. Waltman to-day and am praying for a gracious meeting this time. May the Lord continue to bless His land.

Yours fraternally,
RALEIGH V. FULTON, P. C.

But Thee, but Thee, O sovereign Seer of time,
But Thee, O poets' Poet, wisdom's Tongue;
But Thee, O man's best Man, O love's best Love.
O perfect life in perfect labor writ,
O all men's Comrade, Servant, King, or Priest—
What if or yet, what mole, what plan, what lapse,
What least defect or shadow of defect,
What rumor, tattled by an enemy,
Of inference loose, what lack of grace
Even in torture's grasp, or sleep's, or death's—
Oh, what amiss may I forgive in Thee, Jesus, good Paragon, thou Crystal Christ?

JUBILEE MEETING, COLUMBUS, DISTRICT.

The Columbus District meeting of Adult Missionary Societies convened in Louisville, May 17-18. It would require too much space to mention each item of help and interest; suffice it to say that this was one of the most pleasant and profitable yearly meetings ever held. Some of those contributing to the richness of the two days' programs were, Miss Julia Wasson, on furlough from China; Mrs. W. M. McIntosh, a member since 1878; Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Conference Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. B. M. Howorth, Superintendent Mission and Bible Study; Miss Juanita Brown, Conference Superintendent Young People; Mrs. Susie Thomas, Conference Superintendent Supplies; the Rev. W. N. Duncan and Mrs. Duncan.

Nineteen societies answered roll call, each representative bringing a splendid report. The report for the district showed material gain along all lines of endeavor. One Jubilee society was reported, having been organized by Kosciusko, the banner society of the district.

Continuance of Jubilee projects was urged, placing special emphasis on spiritual life.

Louisville ladies measured up in every way to previous reports of their hospitality. The pastor in charge, the Rev. H. M. Ellis, and Mrs. Ellis, endeared themselves to every visitor.

Ackerman will be host to the conference next year.

A rally day for Children and Young People's Societies of Columbus District was held in the Starkville church on July 10. Representatives of seven Y. P. and seven Epworth Junior Societies were present. Miss Juanita Brown conducted the Y. P. program and stated that the societies had responded unusually well. Mrs. R. P. Neblett, Conf. Supt. of Children's Work, presented the morning program. In many ways the work of the children and youth of the church shows up better than the adult work. The number of organizations is small, but the children composing these are getting training from the most excellent leaders. A plea for more leaders should have been heard by the entire adult membership of the district.

The following societies were represented and served on the program:

Young People—Ackerman, Artesia, Columbus, First Church; Kosciusko, Shuquiak, Starkville, West Point.

Childrens' Societies—Ackerman, Artesia, Kosciusko, Shuquiak, Starkville, Weir, West Point.

MRS. L. H. ROBERTS,
District Secty.

ZONE MEET AT McCOMB, MISS.

Rain again interfered with the Methodist women Monday, but not enough to keep them from having a splendid meeting and a good representation from the churches close enough to brave the water.

Mrs. Mildred Swearengen presided in the absence of the president, Mrs. Guy Norton. Rev. C. C. Evans led the devotional, substituting for Rev. Mr. Cooley, who was detained. Rev. Mr. Campbell led in prayer.

Miss Dorothy Norton delivered the welcome address. The response was given by a representative of the Pearl River Avenue Church. Miss Norton welcomed Mrs. J. Frank Deceli, district secretary, of Glancy, Miss.

Mrs. Swearengen introduced Mrs. Deceli, who then took charge. Mrs. C. A. Butterworth was called on for an impromptu discussion of the need of attendance in every meeting of the missionary circle. Whoever named Mrs. Butterworth to lead this talk did well, for it was a subject that she very rapidly warmed to, and she gave some splendid suggestions and much inspiration. Mrs. Sam Coleman's paper centered around the great needs of the church to-day and of the women in the church. It was splendidly written and much enjoyed.

A quartette of ladies, furnished by Centenary, gave a beautiful number, "We've a Story to Tell."

Miss Mary Hayues, of Summit, gave a paper embodying the latest news from Scarritt and some talk of the progress made in this short time. Her paper was well written and gave us another peep into the great things that are taking place there.

The next meeting will be with Pearl River Avenue Church and the program will be furnished by Centenary Methodist Church.

Mrs. Guy Norton's absence was spoken of with regret and the secretary was instructed to write to Mrs. Norton and express our sympathy to her during her enforced idleness.

ZONE MEETING AT FAYETTE, MISS.

Zone No. 5, of the Vicksburg District, met in Fayette, May 31, 1928, with fifty-six registered.

The meeting opened with the singing of "Jesus Calls Us." Then Brother Anders of Washington conducted the devotional, reading a part of the 68th Psalm and making helpful comments. Mrs. Puffer gave words of welcome and Brother Anders responded.

Mrs. McKeown talked from the Jubilee Handbook on the vice president's work, helping women spiritually, gathering historical facts of the Auxiliary, and other points. She urged every woman to get a Jubilee Handbook and told us that to be a Standard Auxiliary we must have a Jubilee Book Shelf.

Mrs. Grey Geoghegan made a few remarks about the Conference in Meridian.

Discussion on the Jubilee Standards: First and second points were discussed by Mrs. McKeown. The third and fourth points by Mrs. Beauchamp, of Washington. Fifth and sixth by Mrs. Dennis, of Mizpah. Seventh and eighth by Mrs. Covington, of Natchez. Mrs. Kinnison, of Fayette, stressed some points which were helpful. Mrs. John Coffey, of Fayette, discussed the Financial Field of the Jubilee Year. Mrs. Fore, of Natchez, suggested we use the Jubilee Boxes, open them during the Week of Prayer, and get a gold coin for the amount contained in boxes, thus making it truly a Jubilee Offering.

We enjoyed a duet, "I Need Jesus," by Brother Osmond Lewis and his daughter.

The Young People's work was discussed by Mrs. Ford, of Lorman. Mrs. McKeown at this time told us of the Young Peoples' leaders who are to help us whenever called upon.

The plan of the Children's Work by Mrs. Fore was thoroughly explained by words and posters.

Mrs. Lewis, of Fayette, offered a prayer for the guidance of the young people.

Brother Cammack dismissed us for the noon hour, at which time a delicious lunch was served in the Annex.

The afternoon program began with our Jubilee song, "Forward through the Ages."

Brother Grice, of Lorman, conducted the devotional, reading the 4th chapter of the Epistle of Paul to the Philippians.

Rosa Marie Croxton and Frank Headley represented the Juniors, and gave a delightful little program.

Brother Lewis sang special selections, appropriate to the day.

The report of Council meeting given by Mrs. McKeown was a great and truly delightful report.

Mrs. Cammack delighted us with a talk on "The Missionary Voice."

Lorman invited the Zone Meeting No. 5 to meet with them at an early date.

MRS. W. R. EASTERLING,
Secretary.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Last Sunday, Aug. 12, we were in Oberlin, parish seat of Alien Parish. The pastor there is Rev. George D. Purcell, and the superintendent is Mr. H. C. Pitts. The congregation will move into their new building on Sunday, Aug. 26.

The Adult Bible class has for its teacher Mr. Joe Isles, who is one of the leading laymen in the community. We appreciate the hospitality shown us by Mr. and Mrs. Cranford whiie in their midst.

We have two Standard Training Schools booked for August, Houma and Amite schools. The faculties for these two schools have been secured. Miss Ella Hooper, Educational Director of the Houma School, writes: "We appreciate your untiring efforts in behalf of the school here. Miss Hammett is sending out a good many notices about the school, and a few cards have been filled out and books purchased."

Rev. O. L. Tucker, Educational Director, and Mrs. Roy Stewart, Enrollment Secretary of the Amite school, are hard at work on their school. The first class session of the Amite School is Monday night, Aug. 27, at 7:15 o'clock.

Five schools are booked for September: Alexandria and De Ridder, on Sept. 2-7; Winnfield and Ruston, on Sept. 9-14; and the North Caddo school at Hosston, Sept. 30-Oct. 5. All of these schools are six-day schools. Most of the instructors for these schools have been secured. The educational directors and local leaders are busy at work to make their school the best possible. Among the out-of-Conference instructors are: Dr. C. D. Bulla, Nashville, for the Alexandria School; Prof. P. J. Rutledge, of Hendrix College, Conway, Ark., for the Amite and De Ridder Schools; Rev. J. Frank Simmons, of Little Rock, for the Ruston School; Mrs. J. A. Bays, of Beaumont, for the De Ridder School; and Mrs. G. D. Guerrant, of Atlanta, Ga., for the Alexandria and Winnfield Schools. There are several other invitations pending.

Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District and Conference Superintendent of the Teacher Training, is just back from his vacation; most of which was spent on the Gulf at Biloxi. He and his family report a most helpful and pleasant vacation.

Our Conference Treasurer, Mr. A. M. Mayo, reports Sunday School Day offering up to Aug. 6 by districts as follows:

District	No. Schools	No. Reported	Amount
New Orleans ...	33	19	$358.50
Lake Charles ...	33	13	148.39
Ruston	47	11	144.10

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

What can I do to sharpen my wits, to have a deeper appreciation of my task as a teacher, to command the respect of the boys and girls I am to lead, to deepen and enrich my prayer-life? Read a book, a fresh, vital book, a book that bears upon my task. Teachers of chiidren four and five years of age should read "A Curriculum Study for Teachers and Beginners;" teachers of chiddren six, seven and eight years of age should read "A Curriculum study for Teachers of Primaries;" teachers of boys and girls nine, ten and eleven years of age, "A Curriculum Study for Teachers of Juniors." These books are compiled by Miss Mary Skinner, Superintendent of the Department of Elementary Work, General Sunday School Board. For a full description of these books read the June number of the Elementary Teacher. Ask your superintendent to order these books for you.

The Cokebury Record Books, six in number, the entire set for $1.75, should be ordered and studied by the superintendent and secretary of the school early in September. These books have been made to fit into our plans of work. They are different from anything we have used in the past. They will please pastor, superintendent, secretary-treasurer, and teachers. It is well known that every item we use in the Sunday school can be ordered of Lamar & Whitmore, Nashville, Tenn.

Sardis Sunday school pledged $500 to help endow the chair of Religious Education of Grenada College. The last dollar of this promise will be paid in a few days. That great and good man, Rev. John A. Randolph, deceased, was pastor when this pledge was made. He made a liberal contribution to the fund. Judge John W. Kyle, the able superintedent of the school, has kept this pledge in mind and has brought it to a successful close. The school honors itself and honors the memory of its former pastor.

The churches of the North Mississippi Conference depend upon Grenada College to supply trained leaders for every phase of church work. If we have a love for Methodism and a desire to see the kingdom of God extended, we must send our choice young women where they receive the Christian culture, the fine training that Grenada College can give. There are other excellent colleges, but Grenada College is dedicated to a specific purpose, that of Christian culture as interpreted and expressed by the Methodist church. From my standpoint it is better for Methodist girls than any other institution in the State. If any parent has doubts or fears, be fair, and make a careful investigation of what your own institution has to offer. These few words are written in the interest of the girls and of the kingdom, and not primarily in the interest of the institution.

Mr. E. M. Sharp, Extension Secretary for the Corinth District, reports that he taught a class at New Hope, on the Dumas circuit, recently. Thirty to forty attended the class sessions, sixteen received credit. Three persons from this church attended the Standard Training School held at Ripley the last week in June. The leaven was put into their hearts and they in turn spread the good news in this country church. The Sunday School Board has an ambition to help every church in the Conference. We who planned the work for the year believed that the churches of the Conference would endorse our efforts with a fair support. The support comes from three sources —the assessment on the Conference, the Dual Special, and Sunday School Day offerings. It is thought that we shall be forced to discontinue one or more workers because of a lack of support. One thing that is hard to understand is money has been paid by the church for Sunday School Day in a few places and no amount of urging can make the parties who hold it turn it loose. I am sure they do not read these notes, or they would heed our heart-cry for help. Is there a word that can describe such conduct? If any one knows the word, send it to me and I shall use it if it will help get the cash that belongs to the Board.

GOOD MEETING AT KEENER MEMORIAL.

We have just closed a ten days' meeting at Keener Memorial Church, Baton Rouge. The preaching was done by Brother Waiter Scott, of Shreveport. I attended the services every night except one, and in ail my life don't think I ever heard the gospel preached with more earnestness or plainness than he delivered it. Several joined the church, and I think there was a general waking up in the members of the church. For myself, I feel a greater determination to iive a more consecrated life while the good Lord permits me to live. I have been a member of the church since I was young, and have always loved to attend. I want the prayers of the Christian Advocate for my continuance until the end.

DEATH OF A PIONEER METHODIST.

(The following account of the death and funerai service of Mrs. Sarah Eliza Howe, a pioneer resident of Vicksburg and a lifelong Methodist, is taken from one of the Vicksburg papers.—Editor.)

Mrs. Sarah Eliza Howe, Vicksburg's oldest and one of its best beloved residents, was gently laid to rest yesterday afternoon, with many sorrowing friends attending the iast sad rites.

The services were held at the home, 1017 National Street, at 4:30 o'clock, and at the Crawford Street Methodist Church at 5 o'ciock, Rev. J. L. Neill, Rev. H. Walter Featherstun and Rev. J. T. Leggett officiating.

The following were here from out-of-town points: Francis Harmon, Hattiesburg; Edwin Cook, Hazlehurst; E. G. Peaie, Magnolia, and J. W. Harmon, Shreveport.

Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic
Invigorates, Purifies and Enriches the Blood. Restores Health and Energy and fortifies the system against Malaria and Chills. Pleasant to take 60c.

The following served as pallbearers: Thomas Aiiein, Jr., N. Vick Robbins, Phiiip Crutcher, W. G. Paxton, Robert Selby, Hasie Henderson, Peaie French, aud Newitt Vick, of Anguilla.

Mrs. Howe, with remarkabie mental and physical vigor for one of her advanced years, had been up and about on Saturday as usual and seemed in her usual health on retiring.

She was taken ill during the early hours of Sunday morning, and passed away shortly after noon, greatly beloved by ali who knew her.

Born Near Vicksburg.

Mrs. Howe was born at Clear Creek plantation, several miles outside of Vicksburg, on Feb. 16, 1830, the oldest child of Judge James Bland and Mrs. Martha Wyche Bland, both pioneer citizens of Vicksburg. Mrs. Bland, prior to her marriage to Judge Bland, was the widow of Foster Cook, the nephew of Mrs. Newitt Vick, and thus was truiy one of the first citizens.

Mrs. Howe was married in 1850 by Rev. John Lane, whom she called "Uncle Lane," to Professor Robert D. Howe, who died in 1880, leaving her a widow with one daughter, Mrs. Nolan B. Harmon, Sr., of this city.

For many years Mrs. Howe made her home with her son and daughter, Rev. and Mrs. N. B. Harmon, and in the various charges to which her son-in-law was given assignment or called both in Mississippi and far-away Texas.

Was Ardent Methodist.

She was an ardent Methodist, and joined the First Methodist Church in Vicksburg, which stood at the corner of Grove and Cherry Streets, and was finaily given to the colored slaves as a piace of worship when J. W. Vick gave the iot at the corner of Crawford and Cherry, on which the present Methodist edific stands.

Mrs. Howe was a charter member of the Vicksburg Missionary Society, and was prettiiy honored at the recent district meeting of the society held here. She was the third oldest member of the whole Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

She is survived by her daughter, Mrs. Harmon, and four grandsons, as follows: Rev. N. B. Harmon, Jr., Front Royal, Va.; Professor R. H. Harmon, Washington, D. C.; J. W. Harmon, Shreveport, La., and A. P. Harmon, Vicksburg, ali of whom have the sympathy of the entire community.

"It is a greater thing to make a saint out of a Pharisee than it is to make one out of a Publican."

And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also.—I John 4:21.

FROM OAK RIDGE, MISS.

A lively enthusiasm has been aroused in the Epworth League work at Oak Ridge, with indications that the interest will be permanent and a well organized and working League will be the result. For the past month an attendance contest has been engaged in by the League. In the usual manner the membership was divided into two groups, with efficient captains of each team. The interest was keen all the way through the contest, and the competition friendly and constructive. The upbuilding of the League and a substantial increase in attendance was kept uppermost as the goal, by each team, whether winner or loser. The losing team, however, was obligated to entertain the winners; which they did in a most gracious and unique manner. The form of entertainment was a "Grown-up Children's Party," which furnished loads of innocent fun. A beautiful spirit of comradeship was manifested.

On Sunday evening, Aug. 12, the Leaguers from Crawford Street, Vicksburg, brought the League a most inspirational program, which was greatly appreciated, as evidenced by a crowded house.

Oak Ridge has a fine lot of young people who are responsive and have a forward look and a desire for service. The Sunday school has just closed a Cokesbury Training course, conducted by Miss Hattie Ree Lewis, which was well attended, and ten credits were awarded. Among the number taking credit were several Leaguers, who have not only caught the spirit of service, but also the desire for preparation for efficient service for the Master and the church.

REPORTER.

A REAL REVIVAL AT PINE RIDGE, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: I would like for you to know about the wonderful revival we just closed at Pine Ridge. We had the largest attendance at each service that I have ever witnessed at any rural church. In the morning service we didn't have less than eighty present each time. At the evening hour we had the church filled to its capacity, and a large number on the outside.

The power of God was greatly demonstrated. We had old-time Methodist shouting and rejoicing. People that had been at enmity for a long time were reunited in love and fellowship toward one another. There could be seen much weeping, kissing, hugging; and praises were being given to the Lord.

Seventeen united with the church, fifteen by profession of faith, two by letter.

STANDARD FOR 50 YEARS
WINTERSMITH'S CHILL TONIC
For over 50 years it has been the household remedy for all forms of Malaria Chills and Fever Dengue
It is a Reliable, General Invigorating Tonic.

It was very fitting, after such a successful meeting, that the people of Pine Ridge community were prepared to invite the great throng of visitors and friends to remain for the noon meal, which was spread on the ground in the old-fashioned way, and was greatly enjoyed by every one. (The fellowship was wonderful.)

I can't tell you everything that took place at this great revival, but I feel sure that every person that attended this meeting in a worshipful manner was greatly uplifted. The pastor and his assistants, the Christian people of the church, had prayed definitely for the outpouring of God's Spirit, and he graciously granted our petitions. I believe the people that saw, heard, and felt will say with me that we had a real "Wesleyan Revival."

I will give Brother T. E. Nicholson, pastor of the Bucatunna charge, Mississippi Conference, credit in a large way for this wonderful success, as he was the servant that stood behiud the sacred desk, and preached Christ, and him crucified.

WATT H. ROYAL, P. C.

FROM THE FRENCH FIELD.

Hello! We are from Lockport. Who are they who have not heard about Lockport? If you are one, you surely belong to the minority. According to an allegory and prophecy of one of Lockport's sons, Lockport was given to the devil by God as a Christmas present. But in spite of that, Miss Hooper, our deaconess from Houma, had faith enough to believe that she could get some from the devil's hands, and win them for God. She, therefore, organized a small Sunday school here in Lockport, with just a few children and a car full of children from Houma. Miss Hooper has faith in a small beginning, and knows that even to-day God doesn't despise small things. Rev. C. J. Thibodaux worked among these people for two or three years. He really, to say the right thing, planted the seeds. Then for the last Annual Conference, the bishop and presiding elders saw fit to send me here. I say like Brother Picoue, "I was sent and I came." When I arrived here, I found no membership belonging to Lockport church, but with the advice of Brother Harper, I went to work trying to organize a membership. We now have a membership of thirteen members, and five Roman Catholic families pending.

We just closed a successful revival here in Lockport. I believe that it was a successful one, because the devil was alarmed and terrified over it. The fact that the devil is alarmed is a good proof that the Word of God did work. We had a full house almost every night, and a much larger crowd outside the church in the road. They were those who were afraid of the priest. We are valuable people here for the priest, because when he wants some money from his people, he uses us, saying to his people, "Look at those Protestants, they support their church because they like it." Then, when his people come to our church to see if it is true, he tells them: "Didn't I tell you not to go to that church, for our church is the oldest and only church. I will not give you absolution, neither will I bury you when you die." We are both instrumental and detrimental to him. We are, indeed, a peculiar people. Brother B. H. Andrews, pastor of Houma church, did the preaching. He did it wisely and effectively. Brother Andrews has been an inspiration and help to the French workers this year. We are glad to have him.

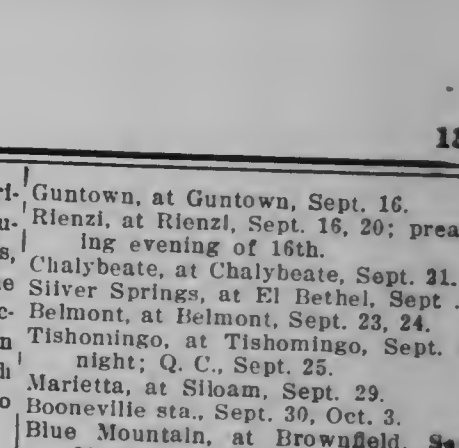
The revival is in full swing in the Rio de Janeiro district of Brazil, which takes in the Federal district and Nictheroy, the Federal capital of the State of Rio de Janeiro. There are about 1,200,000 people in the bounds of this district. Since the revival was started 161 persons have manifested a desire to become Christians.



In Five MILLION HOMES TONIGHT

There are times when all a mother's love can't soothe a fretful baby. No way of telling just what's wrong, yet something must be done. Castoria time! A few drops, and Baby has dropped off to sleep. Yet this marvelous means of quieting a restless infant is utterly harmless. There is not one ingredient but what all doctors know and approve, and would let you give your baby every day in the week. In fact Castoria is a purely vegetable product. Gas pains, constipation, even diarrhea can be dispelled in this same manner. Castoria is older than you are, but physicians still say "nothing better for babies." An old-fashioned remedy if you count its years, but parents are old-fashioned who still raise babies without its aid! And at least five million modern mothers keep it handy day and night, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Buy yours now; don't wait until you need it.

TERRIBLY ILL
Kentucky Lady's Health Was Very Bad. Had Severe Pains and Could Not Sleep.

Lexington, Ky.—Mrs. J. H. Nichols, who lives at 513 Elm Tree Lane, this city, says that Cardui has been of valuable assistance to her on two occasions, which she tells about below:

"Some few years ago, my health was bad. I had very severe pains in my sides. My nerves were in a terrible condition. I could not rest.

"The lower part of my body was very sore. I could hardly stoop over to lace my shoes. I would have to put my foot on a chair. I did not feel like eating, and did not sleep well at all at nights.

"A friend of mine recommended Cardui. I began taking it and saw quite an improvement in my condition. I kept it up until I felt strong and well."

About a year ago, Mrs. Nichols says, she found herself in a nervous, run-down condition. "I took Cardui again," she adds, "and it helped me wonderfully. It is a splendid tonic."

Thousands of women have written to tell how Cardui helped them to get rid of pain and suffering.

Cardui is a mild, medicinal tonic, made from purely vegetable ingredients. At all drug stores. NC-190

Take CARDUI 50 YEARS OF USE BY WOMEN

ONE GRAND DAY!

The last Sunday at old Shiloh camp meeting (Aug. 12) was one of the greatest in my twenty-four years of revival work.

Great crowds thronged the new tabernacle at the three preaching services, with the very best and reverential attention; two hundred and one attended the 5 o'clock group prayer meetings (85 children, 43 young people, 38 men, and 35 women); one man reclaimed from a life of backsliding at the men's prayer meeting; over thirty kneeling at the old-fashioned mourners' bench in the sawdust, at the last service, and some very bright conversions, with twenty accessions by profession of faith, and a grand religious hand-shaking after the benediction. Praise the Lord!

Brother Harmon L. Smith and wife, of Ellisville, did their part (Brother Smith was song leader and Mrs. Smith helped with the children and young people); Brother Tom King, the pastor, and his co-laborers of Shiloh church and community, did their part. Dr. Rolfe Hunt did his part the first two days of the meeting, and the Lord came down in the real old-fashioned way and did His part! The memories of the day will linger with me until a door opens in Heaven and my Father says, "Come up hither."

Also, the Ashury College Quartet, of Wilmore, Ky., surely did their part unusually well. This quartet, composed of four young men, has been touring the States, getting to every revival they could touch; and what a blessing they were to every meeting they attended! Deeply spiritual, sweet singers, efficient soul-winners, cultured and refined, and just about as lovable bunch as you'll find anywhere. They were with us three nights and two days.

With strengthened faith,

J. A. WELLS.

THE BLUFF CREEK CAMP MEETING.

The 38th annual Bluff Creek Camp Meeting came to a close, Sunday, August 21, at the afternoon service, which began at 3 o'clock and closed at about 5 o'clock. The method of procedure and conduct of the services were somewhat different from former years.

At the beginning of the meetings the crowds were small, and continued to grow as the meeting continued. Despite the fact that the roads to and from the camp grounds were nearly impassable at times, we have had the best meeting held in years.

The song services, conducted by Rev. A. M. Wynne, assisted by the Rev. J. P. Bonnecarrerere, were good from the beginning and continued to get better toward the close. With such competent leadership, the appropriate songs were selected for each subject and service. This method developed a wonderful spirit of worship, which resulted in singing with the understanding and in the spirit.

The preaching was conducted by Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, assisted by some of the pastors of this district and Rev. J. F. Eddings, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Clinton, La., all of which blended together to make the meeting the best that we have had in this section.

Perfect order was established; many claimed that great blessings were received; and many responses were made to live a more consecrated Christian life. There were no accessions, since nearly all were already members of some church.

The gate was free this year, and at the close of last Sunday's morning service, the congregation was given an opportunity of a free-will offering which, with the amount collected by a committee during the week, totaled $269. This amount paid all the expenses of the camp meeting, and took care of an indebtedness of $125, freeing the camp meeting of all debt, and left a balance in the treasury.

Many were rejoicing, not merely because of the offering, but because of the consciousness of the power and presence of the Holy Spirit.

Brother Cain proved himself a master in managing and conducting the services of the camp meeting—closing with great rejoicing for each other and all for the glory of God.

CHINESE MINISTRY OF INTERIOR DRAWS UP RULES OF CONDUCT FOR THE NATION.

The present Nationalist Government has in it an unusual number of Christian men. Many believe that the Christian movement in China has turned the corner and is facing a most hopeful future. The four most influential and important ministries are headed by Christian men.

You may be interested in the following twelve rules of conduct for the people, drawn up recently by the Ministry of the Interior and Instructing all provincial governments to proclaim them to the public:

"1. Wipe away all national humiliation.

"2. Set up and follow a high moral standard.

"3. Give up all superstitious beliefs.

"4. Use native products.

"5. Build and repair roads and highways.

"6. Plant more trees.

"7. Abstain from drinking, smoking, gambling and other evil habits.

"8. Be diligent and thrifty.

"9. Take physical exercises.

"10. Learn how to read and write.

"11. Abolish the custom of foot-binding.

"12. Cultivate habits of cleanliness and follow the rules of sanitation.

"The Provincial Commissioners of Civil Administration are instructed to devise ways to assist the people in carrying out the above plan of civic and social improvement."

A. R. KEPLER.

Missionaries from Africa declare that this is the time for a great evangelistic campaign in the Congo. Already commercial men are coming into the country, bringing in their wake materialism and all its attendant evils. Give them a few years start and it will be much more difficult to check them than it is to-day. To-day the natives are eager for the gospel. Give it to them before they are swept away by the great flood of materialistic ideas, the missionaries are pleading.

ENTIRE CITIZENSHIP OF LAKE CONGRATULATES REV. AND MRS. M. L. WHITE.

The entire citizenship of the splendid little city of Lake assembled in the Methodist church at 8 o'clock p.m., Wednesday, August 8, to do honor to Reverend Martin Luther White and his devoted, consecrated and accomplished wife, on the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. In addition to the citizenship of the town, a large number of friends from various sections of the State were present. Scores of others from remote sections, unable to be present in person, extended their greetings by letters, telegrams and gifts.

For more than forty years, the Rev. Martin Luther White has served in this State as an itinerant Methodist preacher. Wherever he has gone, the number of his friends has been limited only by the number of people whom he has known. It is doubtful if any living Mississippian knows more people in our State, and certainly no one has a wider circle of devoted friends.

During the entire program the bride and groom of this Golden Wedding occupied the seats of honor and sat as the incarnation of modesty, devotion, piety and beauty. One of the guests in a short impromptu speech paid a special tribute to their beauty of face and form, calling the attention of the youth present to the manner and method of achieving real beauty—real beauty being the ultimate flower of goodness of heart, kindness of deed, gentleness of word and purity of heart.

Great as has been the work of this noble man and his wife in the ministry of the Methodist church, it has not overshadowed the accomplishments of the Christian home. Seven children have been born to the Rev. and Mrs. Martin Luther White. They are: Mrs. Lillian Woodward, Mrs. Ethel Clifford, Mrs. Gordon Lipscomb, Miss Elizabeth, Otis, Preston, and Martin Luther, Jr. All the children were present on this happy occasion except Otis and Preston.

Special felicitations with gifts were presented in behalf of Brother White's ministerial class of 1889 and by his brethren of the Mississippi Conference.

Outstanding among the tributes to the character and work of this godly man and his wife were those made by Dr. Rolfe Hunt, of Brandon; Rev. H. A. Gatlin, presiding elder of the Newton District; Rev. L. E. Alford, Rev. B. W. Lewis, and Honorable Floyd Loper, of Lake.

The program as rendered was as follows:

A. G. Gainey, master of ceremonies.
Introductory—F. C. Harrison.
Prayer—Dr. Rolfe Hunt.
Song—Lee Gainey.
Felicitations—Rev. V. G. Clifford.
Reading—Mr. Dobson.
Song—Lee Gainey.
Reading—Miss Nan Smythe.
Felicitations from Class of 1889—Rev. B. W. Lewis.
"Fifty Years" (Written by Mrs. M. L. White)—Read by Mrs. F. C. Harrison.
"Meditations of a Son on the Eve of His Parents' Golden Wedding Anniversary" (Written by H. O. White)—Read by A. G. Gainey.

Mr. Floyd Loper had something to say.

Remarks—Rev. M. L. White.

At the conclusion of this program the guests gathered around the happy family to shake hands with Brother and Sister White and their lovely sons and daughters. The greetings were more cordial and touching than mere words can portray. At the conclusion of the formal reception, delightful refreshments were served by the ladies of the church and community.—Newton Record.

It is just ten weeks until the Annual Conference. There is much to be done before we are ready to make our report for the year. Every pastor in the district is urged to do his best in every way. Please see that all reports required for the fourth quarterly conference be in hand. Let full financial reports be made as far as possible at the quarterly conference. We must have a strong pull and a pull altogether if we bring up everything required of us. Let no man fail.

OUR SCHOOLS.

The time will soon be here when our boys and girls will leave home for college. Many of them will be going for the first time, prepared to enter the freshman class in our higher educational institutions after a period of preparation in the high school. This first year at college will be a momentous event in their lives. Both for them and their parents it is a time of high hope accompanied by more or less fear and anxiety.

It is a source of great satisfaction that Methodist boys and girls of Louisiana and Mississippi have schools of their own church to which they can go with every assurance that all their educational needs will be adequately met, and to which their parents can commit them with the assurance that they will be guarded by proper moral and spiritual influences.

In the Louisiana Conference, the Methodist Church maintains two colleges—Centenary College, an A-grade coeducational institution at Shreveport, and Mansfield College, a junior college for girls, at Mansfield. These two schools are both historic institutions, with a notable record of worthy achievement. Many of the most useful citizens of Louisiana and of other sections of the South, both men and women, have received in them their educational preparation for life. Both these schools today are prepared to render the finest kind of service, and we commend them to the patronage of all our people.

In the Mississippi Conference, the Methodist Church likewise has two institutions—Millsaps College, at Jackson, and Whitworth College, at Brookhaven. These two schools are associated in the Millsaps-Whitworth system. Millsaps is an A-grade institution, coeducational to the extent that it receives girls as boarding students at the beginning of the junior year; Whitworth is an A-grade junior college for girls, perfectly correlated in its work with Millsaps. It is believed that this affiliation of Millsaps and Whitworth has solved the educational problem of the Mississippi Conference and has provided a well-nigh perfect educational plan and program for that section of the church. During the period of middle adolescene, when right ideals and correct attitudes are being formed, the girls have their first two years away from home in a comparatively small school where Christian sentiment prevails and where close companionship with teachers may be had; then, having thus been prepared for broader contacts, the girls may go directly from Whitworth to Millsaps, fully prepared to enter the junior class. Both these institutions have the highest rating possible in the educational world for material equipment and academic thoroughness. We commend these two schools unreservedly.

In the North Mississippi Conference, the church maintains one institution for the higher education of girls—Grenada College, at Grenada. This Conference is also joint owner with the Mississippi Conference of Millsaps College. Many parents believe that the church should maintain a four-year A-grade senior college for girls; and Grenada College is maintained to meet this need. The action of the district conferences last summer, by a practically unanimous vote, in authorizing and providing adequate financial resources for Grenada College, has made it possible for this institution to take its place in the first rank in our educational system. With adequate buildings, a beautiful campus, and an efficient faculty, Grenada is worthy the patronage of all our people.

We suggest, entirely on our own motion, that those interested in any of these schools write to the following for full information: Centenary College, President George S. Sexton, Shreveport, La.; Mansfield College, President D. B. Raulins, Mansfield, La.; Millsaps College, President D. M. Key, Jackson, Miss.; Whitworth College, President G. F. Winfield, Brookhaven, Miss.; Grenada College, President J. R. Countiss, Grenada. Miss.

SUNDAY SCHOOL DAY.

As we read the reports of the Conference Sunday School Superintendents from week to week, we are made to wonder more and more that so many of our churches fail to observe Sunday School Day It is made obligatory upon presiding elders, preachers in charge, and Sunday school superintendents to see that the day is observed; yet, according to the reports, there are scores of churches that fail to do anything about it. We wonder.

"A GREAT MORAL ISSUE."

If anybody heretofore has believed that prohibition is not an issue in the present presidential campaign, or that a great moral issue is not involved in the campaign, his views will have to undergo a radical change if he accepts the statement of the Democratic presidential nominee in his acceptance speech on Wednesday of last week. In that speech, if we measured correctly, much more space is given to a discussion of the prohibition issue than to any other question involved in the campaign. What the candidate himself thus considers an issue, the people cannot ignore as one. Prohibition is an issue, politicians to the contrary notwithstanding.

We have not space to give the full statemen of Governor Smith's views on prohibition, but we select what we deem the salient points for comment.

"The President of the United States has two constitutional duties with respect to prohibition. The first is embodied in the oath of office. If, with one hand on the Bible and the other reaching up to heaven, I promise the people of this country that 'I will faithfully execute the office of the President of the United States and to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States,' you may be sure that I shall live up to that oath to the last degree. I shall to the very limit execute the pledge of our platform 'to make an honest endeavor to enforce the Eighteenth Amendment and all other provisions of the Federal Constitution and all laws enacted pursuant thereto.' * * * The second constitutional duty imposed upon the President is 'To recommend to the Congress such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.' * * * The platform of my party is silent upon auy question of change in the law. I personally believe that there should he change and I shall advise the Congress in accordance with my constitutional duty of whatever changes I deem 'necessary or expedient.' * * * I believe in temperance. We have not achieved temperance under the present system.* * * I believe in reverence for law. To-day disregard of the prohibition laws is insidiously sapping respect for all law. I raise, therefore, what I profoundly believe to he a great moral issue involving the righteousness of our national conduct and the protection of our children's morals. The remedy, as I have stated, is the fearless application of Jeffersonian principles. * * * In accordance with this Democratic principle, some immediate relief would come from an amendment to the Volstead Law giving a scientific definition of the alcoholic content of an intoxicating beverage. * * * Each State would then be allowed to fix its own standard of alcoholic content, subject always to the proviso that that standard could not exceed the maximum fixed hy Congress. I believe, moreover, that there should he suhmitted to the people the question of some change in the provisions of the Eighteenth Amendment. * * * I personally believe in an amendment in the Eighteenth Amendment which would give to each individual State itself, only after approval by a referendum popular vote of its people, the right wholly within its borders to import, manufacture or cause to be manufactured and sell alcoholic beverages, the sale to be made only by the State itself and not for consumption in any public place. * * * Such a change would preserve for the dry States the benefit of a national law that would continue to make interstate shipment of intoxicating heverages a crime. It would preserve for the dry States Federal enforcement of prohibition within their own horders. It would permit to citizens of other States a carefully limited and controlled method of effectuating the popular will wholly within the borders of those States without the old evil of the saloon."

In his staetment, the Democratic nominee says he will live up to the oath of his office in an honest endeavor to enforce the Eighteenth Amendement and all laws enacted pursuant thereto. We take this statement at its face value, though his record for enforcement of the prohibition law in New Pork is not very encouraging.

He then goes on to say that he believes in changes in both the Volstead Law and in the Eighteenth Amendment, and that he will recommend such changes to Congress. Believing in such changes and recommending them, it is only reasonable to suppose that he will do all in his power to bring them about. It is urged in behalf of the nominee that he is an "efficient executive"—which means that he generally gets what he wants.

The essence of the proposed changes, as we understand them, is that this nation return to

THE TWO GLASSES.

There sat two glasses filled to the hrim,
On a rich man's table rim to rim.
One was ruddy and red as blood,
And one was as clear as the crystal flood.

Said the glass of wine to his paler brother,
"Let us tell tales of the past to each other;
I can tell of banquet, and revel, and mirth,
Where I was kiug, for I ruled in might,
And the proudest and grandest souls on earth
Fell under my touch as though struck with blight.
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the heights of fame I have hurled men down.
I have blasted many an honored name;
I have taken virtue and given shame;
I have tempted the youth with a sip, a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste.
Far greater than any king am I
Or than any army beneath the sky.
I have made the hand of the driver fail,
And seut the train from the iron rail;
I have made good ships go down at sea,
And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me.
Fame, strength, wealth, and genius before me fall,
And my might and power are over all;
Ho! ho! pale brother," said the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"

Said the water glass: "I caunot boast
Of a king dethroned, or murdered host;
But I can tell of hearts that were sad
By my crystal drops made bright and glad;
Of thirsts I have quenched and brows I have laved.
I have leaped through the valley, dashed down the mountains,
I have burst from my cloud fetters and dropped from the sky
And everywhere gladdened the prospect and eye.
I have eased the hot forehead of fever and paln;
I have made the parched meadows grow fertile with grain;
I can tell of the powerful wheels of the mill,
That ground out the flour, and turned at my will.
I can tell of manhood debased by you
That I have uplifted and crowned anew.
I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid;
I gladden the heart of man and maid;
I set the wine-chained and captive free,
And all are better for knowing me."

These are the tales they told each other—
The glass of wine and its paler brother—
As they sat together, filled to the brim,
On the rich man's table, rim to rim.

TO WHOM SHALL WE GO? THOU HAST THE WORDS OF ETERNAL LIFE (JOHN 6:68).

By Rev. J. F. Dring.

I am sometimes at a loss to know just what to do or say. The reason for my condition is, there are so many declaring themselves upon the vital subjects of life, and so few of them agree. One will say, "I am of Paul," and another will say, "I am of Apollos;" and then some fellow will chime in and say, "You are all wrong—come and follow me, and I will do thee good."

This is a strange world, full of strange beings, doing strange things. Most of them are sure they are right, and lots of them are sure the other fellow is wrong.

In the Bible account above mentioned, we find this great Apostle asking the same great question of mortal life, "To whom shall we go?"

There is danger in drifting from the truth of God; and to go away in search of either life or truth, we are likely to stumble into a den of heartless, death-dealing influences that will wreek the whole life of man, and leave him stranded, lifeless, upon the roadside of delusion.

On the other hand, we ask, Is it safe to follow or be led by any other than those who stay close to the inspired Word? "Oh," some will say, "we do not deny the way as given by the Word; but, in this great advanced age, we are not confined to the strict rule of pious living that our people of fifty years ago were, and we are to consider the educational development of our people, because it has removed from us the stigma of superstition that once made us rush to the altar, and cry out for God to forgive." That group of learned Christian gentleman will say that the day is past, and we are no longer groping in that dark region of superstition, and to be a well polished son of God, all that is necessary is to acknowledge the Bible as truth, join the church, be baptized, and you have a way-bill to heaven.

I am not so sure about all that. It seems to me, since God is God and Jesus Christ is still the Saviour of the world, and that we have had no changes in the personnel of the heavens, that you and I had better stay pretty close to the line of difference, for we must take heed lest we stumble, and fall into the snare of the devil.

The shaping of the lives and destiny of man is vested in the story as revealed and told in the Bible. I am not sure that I would be able to declare myself a man, were it not for the fact the Bible first stated the fact. All kuowledge begins with the Bible, and I am sure that we will not be able to discover a greater source of truth, based upon undisputed facts, than that of the Bible. Then if I leave the Bible and truth revealed by it, to whom shall I go.

If some little fragment of humanity eould coin some great fact, and it could go the rounds for a few centuries without being upset, he would be counted great; but since no one has been able to do a great wonder like that, would it uot be much better for the men of God to stay with the great Bible story?

After the multitude had been fed, and Jesus had declared to them the story of the bread of life, many of them went back, and followed him no more; and in this present day, any preacher that declares the whole truth and upsets the playhouse of these modernists that want to build a flutter mill and cool their aching head, will get upon the skids in short order. There are a multitude of that elass that have gone back, and they are not in harmony with the spirit of Christianity, or of Methodism, and they sit back in the shade of their cold-blooded formalism and declare that the Holy Ghost baptism and a clean life are no longer demanded. But aside from Jesus and his message as a whole, there is no eternal life. Peter discovered that, and was honest enough to say so. The only reason some folk are in the Methodist church to-day, is for the bread and cheese they get; and as soon as a great task is assigned, or a great issue raised, either moral or spiritual, they will desert the ranks of true soldiers, and go away with soda cracker crowd until the fight is over, and then get upon a housetop and shout, "Look what we have done!"

There is an advertisement in almost every post office in the country, showiug the boys in Panama, and it states there, "The army life teaches your boy to shoot straight." May God in heaven help us as his soldiers to learn to shoot straight.

"To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life?" No man is satisfied with a half loaf; then let us go to God. He is the fountain-head of all of our life. The church will move forward as it trusts in a living God, God is not slack concerning his promise, his hand is not shortened that he cannot save. The heavens are not shut up to man; the great heart of God is just as anxious to-day as it was when Jesus stood beside the sea and multiplied the bread and fishes. The anxious, tear-stained face of the Son of God is just as much for you as it was for the Bethany sisters when they stood at the grave of Lazarus.

The old-time power of the Holy Ghost is for you, your children, and for as many as believe on his name. No hungry soul will be satisfied away from the feet of a crucified and risen Lord.

Stocks and bouds, houses and lands, will not satisfy, but a great loving Christ enthroned in the human heart will make the whole world a paradise, and a land of perpetual sunshine.

Brethren, let us declare the Master and his leadership, as Simon Peter did, and not be attracted away from the path of life and duty by these different spirits. We may not get the applause of the multitnde; yea, the crowd may disperse without even a handshake; but in every heart let the truth find its way, and when you and I shall sleep beneath the mouldy clay somewhere in a silent city of the dead, may they write, "He was a true follower of Jesus Christ."

Jonesboro, La.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.

By Dr. O. E. Goddard.

Last week I had a call to go to southern Oklahoma to visit a man and his sister who have a genuine interest in the missionary program of our church. It developed that they were planning, since they have no heirs and no immediate relatives who need their estate, to will all their property to the Board of Missions.

I found these old people very well informed about the missionary work of the church and their information relative to the several fields amazingly full and accurate.

Before I left their home they executed a will giving to the Board of Missions, after their funeral expenses are paid, their entire estate, the major part of which is to be used for work in China.

I mention this ease to suggest to several thousand other people in our church who have no dependents and are liable to die and leave their property to be consumed by people who do not deserve it or to be dissipated in litigation, that they follow the noble example of these loyal Methodists in Oklahoma. This is to exhort these several thousand such people to secure an attorney and will part or all of their property to the Board of Missions, now while they are "clothed and in their right minds."

The Board of Missions is a good custodian of any man's estate, which will be used in keeping with the directions of the one making the bequest. During the past year one of the great Protestant denominations was in dire straits and would have had to retreuch and recall its missionaries from the field if it had not beeu for a bequest of $250,000 that came to them in their hour of distress.

There are thousands of people in our church who ought to will certain properties, varying in value from $1,000 to $1,000,000, to the Board of Missions to be used in carrying forward its great interuatioual missionary program in eleven foreign fields. Any secretary of the Board or the treasurer would be glad to give the needed information or answer any questions.

I am writing this note as I am taking the train for New York en route for Africa. Before I return the latter part of December I trust the Board of Missions will have been notified of many wills made in its favor.

(Note—The Bequest Department of the Board of Missions will gladly give full information as to how bequests may be made to the Board and show forms to be used when writing a will in the Board's favor. Information will also be furnished concerning aunuities. Write the Bequest Department, Board of Missions, Doctors' Building, Nashville, Tenn.)

WHY ARE THE PRESBYTERIANS AND BAPTISTS SO SMART?

By J. R. Pepper.

This writer has just finished an automobile journey of a good many hundred miles, covering several States in the South. He passed a large number of rural churches, and not one of them a Methodist church, so far as there was anything on or about the buildings to indicate their family name.

The only churches bearing any names were Presbyterian and Baptist churches.

As I rode by many nameless church edifices I wondered why it is that the Presbyterians and Baptists are so much smarter than the Methodists. Think of hundreds of Methodist churches standing, many of them, right along our main highways, and not one of them with a name on it! Are we ashamed to let the public know that there are some Methodists in these communities?

Our Presbyterian and Baptist friends seem to be proud of their churches, and some of them have names painted in large letters over the door or elsewhere.

I have known people to determine largely the location of their home by the fact of having or not having a church in the community.

It can well be understood how a Presbyterian or Baptist would feel in riding over the route this rider has just finished. Either one could locate in many places with a Presbyterian or Baptist church nearby, according to the known names of said churches. A Methodist would have to inquire very much before settling in any community touching his church relations.

The Remedy.

If the Board of Lay Activities will take hold of this matter very vigorously and insist upon each Annual Conference Lay Leader calling a meeting of the District Lay Leaders of the Conference, urging them to take up this work and fix a special week for placing names on the churches in each Annual Conference district, it can be accomplished.

The District Lay Leader can easily secure the co-operation of each church and charge lay leader by proper effort. Surely each church can well afford to pay the small amount for painting its name on the building if the lay leader of the church will attend to it.

Doubtless some one painter could be secured to do all the work in an entire district at a nominal cost.

I know of some rural churches nearly one hundred years old that have never had a name placed upon them, and only persons living somewhere near know their names to this day.

This matter of placing names on church buildings is far more important than ever before for the reason that leading highways are passing them upon which go many thousands of tourists annually.

Will the Board of Lay Activities please lay hold of this important undertaking?

GOING FORWARD AT MALINES, BELGIUM.

Annual Report for Year Ending June 20, 1928.

By A. Mietes.

(Rev. A. Mietes, of Malines, Belgium, is foreign pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Minden, La., Rev. Leon I. McCain, pastor.—Bureau of Specials.)

We are going forward in the right way in our church at Malines. Although the brethren (Darbists) and others may mock at our individual communion cups and our broad views and say: "The Methodists have an elastic conscience in this matter," it is a fact, a happy fact, that our number of communicants is rising and the spiritual life deepening. Also our Bible study evenings are much frequented and the attention is encouraging.

The work of a preacher for souls is sometimes very difficult. There is often lack of sympathy and co-operation. But at Malines I have no ground of complaint, for the members work with me, perhaps not as much as possible, but with more heart than before. House-visiting is much appreciated and the relations are very pleasing. My task is facilitated in every way by the sympathy of our members and our friends toward their pastor.

Our public consists generally of five kinds of Protestants, but we are all living in peace. Sometimes there is some friction, but in the spirit of love we can always come together.

Special efforts have never had much success at Malines. But if the people do not come to us, we go to them, and by distributing on a large scale numbers of tracts, handbills, gospels, and copies of "De Garve" we reach a goodly number. New visitors come in and already some of them have signed cards for membership.

Extension of the work is the parole. We tried to find places to preach in and around the town and also in the next villages, but it was not possible to succeed. The beginning was always friendly, but after some days came a refusal caused by fear of the consequences. But we do not lose hope.

Our Sunday and Thursday schools received many blows from the Roman Catholic priest of our hamlet. Families were visited and menaced. A spy was always at our door during the week. We lost a lot of children, but we won more, and the situation to-day is rose-colored.

The sewing class was for some months our bugbear. There came no more than five girls, who for some years had been members of the Sunday school. It seemed not possible to catch others. But after some effort the number grew to fifteen girls who come regularly. Three of the oldest girls desired to sign cards of membership, and a good many of the girls come into our Sunday meetings. Miss Van Duven and Madame Mietes, the leaders, are very content.

A Woman's Society has been founded, but the result is not encouraging. Only three of four women come in, but the hope is ours that it will go better and better. Patience and faith are indispensable for Christian work here in Malines, and the leader, Madame Mietes, is believing there will be more members soon.

Laymen's work is carried on by my youngest son, who is an exhorter. He gives all his spare time to children's work, hall and tent work. The children are very pleased to have a young leader instead of a stately deacon. Some of our members are always willing to help in the distribution of tracts and pamphlets and as members of the song band.

Bookselling and advertising are profoundly made better by the electric lighting of our windows. Regularly people stand before the window to read and admire the religious prints. The selling of books is more than ever before. Our paper, "De Garve," which is issued by the Protestant Evangelical churches of Belgium, is always received with eagerness. It is a pity, however, that we have not yet our own paper, a real Methodist paper, for our own use. The people of Malines pay large sums for such books as "The Secrets of the People" or "The Wandering Jew," but for religious books there is little demand.

The Finances. The state of financial affairs is very satisfactory. At the end of this church year we see with gratitude an increase in the income, some 1,000 francs. No special means were necessary. If there was a need, there was always a helper.

What was done for other organizations included gifts collected two times for the "Union des Fraternities," and also for the British and Foreign Bible Society at London, and general benevolences. If I asked my people for something, always the necessary sum was given, but the watchword of the people of Malines is: "By our people, for our people." And it is easier to get something for Malines than for any other purpose.

Facts and great events are very seldom found in this town of the Roman Catholic Cardinal. In Malines there always rules a spirit of deadly submission. We like better to see a living people full of fire for heaven's sake. Recently we have had two remarkable conversions, but for the safety of the people concerned it is better to tell no more about them in public. The Roman Catholic newspapers are always full of fire, but not a fire of good quality. They are full of articles of abuse, but for the people they are of no value. It is as Jeremiah says in 13:23: "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots?"

Statistics are dry but necessary, so I shall end my report with a series of ciphers, showing the work for the past year:

"WONDERFUL WORDS OF LIFE."

By Rev. Marlin H. McCormack, Jr., in the Bulletin of the Clinton Methodist Church.

I have often wondered just what would be the impressions received by an intelligent person, who had never heard of Christianity, from reading the Bible for the first time in his life. His mind would be free of the preconception and presuppositions of the average young Christian. He would not take anything for granted, or interpret it in the light of church tradition acquired in his early childhood or youth. It would be a strange new story to him. We wonder just what he would think of it?

What would he think, when he read, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal," and then observed the average American Christian putting his whole soul, mind, and strength into the task of making money and living a life of extravagant pleasure?

What would he think, when he read: "Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth;' but I say unto you, that ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." And then, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy! But say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father who is in heaven." How many Christians could he find doing these things?

Can you not see his eyes gleam as he peruses the golden words of the nature-loving Master when he says:

"No man can serve two masters:
For either he will hate the one, and love the other,
Or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other.
Ye cannot serve God and mammon (money)

"Therefore, I say unto you:

"Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink;
Nor yet for your body, what shall ye put on.
Is not the life more than the meat,
And the body than the raiment?

"Behold the fowls of the air:
For they sow not,
Neither do they reap, nor gather into harns;
Yet your heavenly Father feedeth them.
Are not ye much better than they?

"And which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?
And why take ye thought for raiment?
Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow;
They toil not, neither do they spin;
And yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed as one of these.
Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field,
Which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven,
Shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?
"Therefore, take no thought, saying, 'What shall we eat?'
Or, 'What shall we drink?'
Or 'Wherewithal shall we be clothed?'
(For after all these things do the Gentiles seek):
For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.
But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness;
And all these things shall be added unto you.

"Take therefore no thought for the morrow;
For the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself.
Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

"O well," you say, "Jesus meant—." But to this man Jesus meant just what he said. No preconceived dogma clouds his mind to the simple truth. He doesn't have to adjust the saying of the Master to a system of theology. All he has is the New Testament minus the theological trappings that hide its simple truths from our more handicapped minds.

Then to "cap the climax" our friend reads with amazement the Master's great summary of practical religion:

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even unto them; for this is the law and the prophets."

Could he prove by the life of the average Christian that such is really the law and the prophets—a complete summary of real religion?

We boast that our religion is the religion of "faith." We boast more "faith" than anything else because it is the easiest thing to claim to have; and who can prove that we do not have an abundant supply of it? This was the kind of folk that Paul left James to deal with, but the aged Apostle challenged them to prove their faith by their works.

The great lesson that we need to learn is that faith is a result rather than an antecedent of religion. Sheer faith will not fulfill our obligations or discharge our duties, it can only help us to do so. After love, faith is the greatest force; but is not great for what it is, but for what it enables us to do. The value is not in the planting, or in the cultivation, but in the fruit. The central word of the Golden Rule is "do."

"THE POLITICAL CHARACTER OF THE ROMISH CHURCH."

I am glad that a paragraph of an utterance of mine, made some fifteen years ago, is being republished in the papers of the church—and in a few secular papers. Who has sent it around I will not surmise.

It is as follows:

"The trouble with the Roman Catholic Church is that it seeks to be both a church and a political party. Its arrogant claim of being the only true Christian church might be treated with indifference; but when its head asserts political and civil authority, a position is assumed which cannot be allowed any church whatever. If it must assume such a position, its members must not complain if it is met with political opposition not offered to any other church. If it were willing to take its place as a church along with all other churches, it would be improper to meet it with any other attitude than that with which we meet all other churches; but it is not willing to be only a church. Putting itself into a class to itself by its political animus, it must take all that such improper attitude makes inevitable. It cannot claim the political exemption of a church while it asserts political claims as well as churchly prerogatives."

It will serve to illumine and emphasize the truth which I then declared to recall the occasion which elicited it.

Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt was in Rome, Italy, where he was informed that the condition of his having an audience with the Pope at the Vatican was that he should not seek to be received by the King of Italy at the Quirinal. Mr. Roosevelt very properly declined any audience with the Pope on such a condition.

The facts were cabled to the United States, and I was asked to express my opinion of the course of Mr. Roosevelt, which course I warmly approved, and do now approve.

I said among other things that the Government of the United States had amicable diplomatic relations with the Government of the King of Italy, and that Mr. Roosevelt did right in respecting those relations and rejecting the conditions sought to be imposed upon him by the Pope, which would have required the ex-president to be grossly discourteous to the Italian sovereign.

Then I used the language found in the paragraph which has been so widely republished during the last few weeks, and which I have reprinted above.

It expresses exactly what I believe about the political character of the Church of Rome—a vicious character which I trust no Protestant church will ever assume.

The politicalization of the Church of Rome has brought to it immense and irreparable damage in Latin-America, and in all the world, even in Italy; and the politicallzation of a Protestant church will injure it in the same way. So our Lord taught when he said, "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword."

I cannot approve the intrusion of any church—whether Protestant or Romish—into the arena of party politics. Such intrusion is a fatal blunder as well as an obvious violation of the truth uttered by our Lord when in the severe ordeal of his trial before Pontius Pilate, he said with majestic calmness, "My kingdom is not of this world."

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Some one asked the good, plain brother how he liked the sermon. He replied the preaching was good but the preacher was not "hostile" enough. He was driving at a great truth. Real gospel preaching undeniably should contain an element or strain of hostility against evil. The preacher who makes the sinner ashamed, arouses the dominant spark of repentance—godly sorrow for sin—in the heart of the careless, unconcerned backslider, and even awakens a stronger resolve for righteous living in the conscience of the faithful, is not speaking in vain. Fighting fire is no child's play. I visit the fire stations occasionally. The city fathers have chosen the strongest, most stalwart men for service there. The engines are marvels of mechanical power and finish. Sometimes the gong may sound just to call the men to quarters for training. "Ready" is the watchword—instant response is always expected and it comes. Fighting sin is a man's job. The Jewish priesthood would have none to serve in that high office who were lame or blind or had any physical defect. Fire burns our homes. The fires of sin burn and sear, and blacken the best and fairest graces of life. A soldier of the cross means so little to some I have known. It should mean a life and death struggle against the world, the flesh, the devil.

Read that old hymn about it again and again. It will stir your blood. There is a sermon in every line, and a weapon of righteousness in every thought expressed. Life is ever a struggle—better by far be on the right side and hostile to evil in speech, thought, and deed.

Aug. 10, 1856, was the date of the devastating Lost Island hurricane, which destroyed hundreds of lives, washed away the surface of the island, leaving a scene of ruin and desolation, where erstwhile was a recreation center and playground for the people of Southern Louisiana. Seventy-two years thereafter another hurricane has swept across Southern Central Florida, and is at this date speeding towards the northern Gulf coast. These storms are not only simply but awfully terrific when they reach their height. Virgil's description of the fierce gale that beset his hero and his followers is scarcely an exaggeration. For earth, air, and sea are commingled and the very cloud-shrouded skies seem to bend low toward the drenched earth. No wonder the ancients believed in demons of the air, for the howl and roar of a tropical hurricane sounds like one may fancy hell broken loose, or some dreadful powers of nether worlds unleashed.

In the great economy of a providential God no doubt these dread visitations have their place. They show to us, after all our "boast and heraldy of power," how dependent we are. Men need shaking up once in a while to settle them on a proper basis. So here is where earthquakes, hurricanes, tornadoes, etc., come in. Better have them right well scared occasionally than for them to think, because they have invented a few engines and found out some things about nature and her secret workings, which God put here to entertain them and keep them out of mischief, that they are supreme lords of creation. Yes, sir, a genuine hurricane can bring this lordship business mighty low.

THE CULPEPPER MEETING AT IUKA, MISS.

Rev. John B. Culpepper and his son of the same name just closed an old-fashioned tent meeting here at Iuka, in which some twenty-five found peace at the feet of Jesus, of whom fifteen united with the local Methodist church.

Brother Culpepper, Sr., delighted and blessed all by his unique and fearless presentation of the old-fashioned gospel. His sermons were especially helpful to the church members of the community, and some eight hundred took vows of reconsecration and promised a more efficient service to their Lord.

Brother Culpepper invited all the colored people of the community to our Saturday evening service. They sang their weird spirituals, and by their animation and fervor added much to the delightfulness of the occasion.

John B., Junior, was noted for his wonderful work with the children of the community. His little talks to them in the afternoons were gems of gospel truth, yet couched in the language of his juvenile listeners. His song leadership during the meeting was very inspiring, and although he did not preach often, yet when he mounted the pulpit he brought the people nearer to God and made sinners tremble.

The good wives of these saints of God were our guests during this revival period, and it was great to have them in our little city. The Methodists of the town raised a purse of $500 for these loyal servants of God.

TWO GOOD MEETINGS.

Dear Brother Carley: We haven't bothered you very much this year. And we want to tell you about how we are, and what the Lord has done for us and our people.

First, I was taken sick the 3rd of July, and have been on the bed most of the time since. I have been sitting up a little for about ten days. I was just fearfully sick the first eight days; thought I was getting better, so I sat up a little while on Tuesday, July 10, and overtaxed my strength, and had a "slight stroke of paralysis," so the doctors called it. I think it was hard enough. I am just now able to walk about the room some and go to my meals, with the aid of some members of the family.

This "speli" put a stop to my work. I had two meetings of my own that had to be held. My wife wrote Brother McIlwain, of Corinth, and Brother Parks, of Amory, and these two good men came to my relief.

Brother McIlwain held my meeting at Friendship, and they had an old-fashioned revival. Those people got happy—they had the "old-time religion," and shouted all over the place. Twenty-one were added to the church.

Brother Parks had a great meeting at Van Buren. He was handicapped, as his mother fell and was right seriously hurt, and he had to go to Brooksville to see her. He was out of the meeting three days and missed six services; but Brother Edgar Isbell took charge, kept things going, having great services. (They shouted down there, too.) Brother Parks got back Friday morning and took charge of the meeting, and closed out last night (Tuesday) with eleven additions to the church.

These were wonderful meetings. God was with us—is with us. We give him the praise. Pray for us.

PROGRAM, SARDIS DISTRICT MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am sending the program for the Sardis District Preachers' meeting, which is to be held in our church in Hernando on Tuesday, Sept. 11, with Brother H. R. McKee as host.

10 a. m., sermon by Rev. M. H. McCall.

11 a. m., an exhibit of the manner in which a pastor should make out his reports to the Annual Conference, by Brothers W. W. Hartsfield, G. H. Boyles, and H. R. McKee.

"Why Should We Observe Rally Day in the Sunday School?" by Rev. G. A. Baker, J. D. Simpson, and W. W. Jones.

"The Purpose and Scope of the Church Social," by Rev. C. M. Kinard, Mrs. C. T. Floyd, and Mrs. J. T. Lockhart.

"Cokesbury School Taught in Every Church—Should It be Taught by the Pastor?" by H. N. McKibben, W. M. Jones, and R. H. B. Gladney.

Special Quartet, by C. T. Floyd, K. S. L. Cook, H. R. McKee, and C. M. Kinard.

The program committee has arranged a splendid program, and it is hoped that all our brethren will be present. We need the few hours of fellowship afforded.

"THE LIVING GOD."

By Rev. John D. Ellis.

We read about "the living God" in the writings of Moses, and the prophets, and in the writings of the apostles. When Jesus was upon earth he said: "The living Father hath sent me."

Peter said to Jesus: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

We, of this day, have never heard literally the voice of God nor seen his form; Yet, God is; he has being.

Some people affirm that God is an "abstraction;" others say, "He is only a principle."

An "abstraction" is an idea apart from any particular object; a "principle" is a general rule of action, or a governing law of conduct.

The God of the Bible lives; he has life; he has consciousness; he is sensitive, Almighty Spirit; he is life primordial, and the author of all life.

Jesus said: "The Father which is in secret." He is not counterfeit, or fabulous because he is invisible.

Air is invisible; so is the law of gravitation.

Many Scriptures show that God "thinks;" his thoughts have utility and generosity.

Many of God's thoughts are revealed in nature; in the gospel of his Son, we see the disposition to forgive.

It cannot be said that an "abstraction," or a "principle" is endowed with thought.

Many Scriptures show that God rejoices; he is the Friend and Portion of his people, and rejoices over them. One great thing about "the living God" is that he careth for us: "He careth for you."

The emotions of "the living God" were manifested in the life of his Son on earth.

An "abstraction" or a "principle" has never produced living offspring.

The seat of government of "the living God" is not on earth; it is above the earth, in regions of holiness, and glory.

He does not faint, and never grows weary.

"The living God" is omnipotent, and omniscient—things which do not belong to a mere "principle," or an "abstraction."

He is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality.

"The living God" is Jehovah, the great "I Am." He is not a God of the dead, but of the living.

As Christians, we are "the children of the living God," and because he lives, we shall live also. A "principle," or an "abstraction," is powerless to resurrect.

What "the living God" is in essence, or property, is above human understanding; still, he has sentient life, and from his personality emanate thought, affection, emotion, and almighty power.

God is a personality in the sense of sentient life, wisdom, and omnipotence. In his life, he is distinct from all life derived from him.

There is no life in a "principle," or an "abstraction."

"Principle" is the result of life intelligent.

Wherever principle exsists, intelligent life must precede it, to announce it.

"THE TRUTH ABOUT PROHIBITION."

"One of the commonest statements is that prohibition cannot possibly be enforced," writes Dr. Frank Crane in an article called "The Truth About Prohibition" in the Christian Herald of Aug. 25. "You cannot change the immemorial custom of a people," it is said. They have always drunk, and they always will drink, you hear.

"This is a curious argument. In substance it is that the bootleggers, hijackers, and other lawbreakers dominate the country. It is the same as saying that because men always will murder you had better repeal the law against murder on the statute books; because men always will steal you had better have no law against theft. Just remember that there is no law that is not broken, and the fact that there is a law passed implies that there are those who would like to break it, and do break it.

"This country is ruled, and its laws are made by the law-abiding people. They are not now ready, and never will be, to turn the law-making business over to the criminals.

"All this turns, of course, upon the question whether the drinking of alcohol is wrong or not.

"In one sense it is not wrong. A man has a perfect right to eat and drink what he pleases. That is, he would have the right if he lived alone on a desert island.

"But immediately upon becoming a civilized being and a member of society he loses certain elements of his personal liberty. If what he drinks may make him a madman, or the creature of a habit that may bring misery to his fellows, he has no right to drink. As far as he himself is concerned, a man has a right to get drunk and become violent as often as he pleases; but as far as society is concerned he has not that right provided it makes him dangerous to his fellows. And law is not made by the individual, but by society.

"Personal liberty is a fiction when it comes to civilized man. You have no right to drive on the left-hand side of the street; you have no right to spit on the sidewalk in a public place; you have no right to use profane language where it offends your auditors; you have no right to appear naked in a public place, nor do a hundred other things. Civilization itself depends upon the restrictions it places upon personal liberty.

"The United States, by abolishing altogether the legal sale of alcohol has made the greatest moral gesture and the most profitable economic move of all time.

"For centuries the church has been busy picking up after the saloon, just as for centuries chaplains have been busy praying for the wounded in armies. The time has come when instead of clearing up the wreckage made by the twin devils of alcohol and war, it has been decided to put these institution out of business. It is the same thing as sweeping up the water that comes from an open faucet, or turning off the faucet.

"It is necessary to keep these things in mind. Many business men and others who were once in favor of prohibition are beginning to weaken under the insidious attacks of wet propaganda. It is time for every man to stiffen up his backbone and not to be influenced by the continual assertions such as are put forth by the wets."

MODERN WORSHIP.

Two men into the Temple went
To hear the Gospel free:
One's mind on worldly cares was bent,
One yearned his Lord to see.

To both the service was the same;
Yet one departed as he came,
The other left with soul aflame.
Which of the twain were ye?

—Joseph Milton.

"TAKE THIS ADVICE."

"Christianity is not a religion of rules. It is the religion of the divine example. Try to follow the blessed steps of the most holy life. Take his advice. Ask yourself in the moment of perplexity or temptation what would he do if he were here? Nothing else will so surely lead us into the way of holy living."—George Hodges.

WHO WATCHES YOU?

Two small boys were walking along a path near a railroad, and one of them wanted to walk on the track. But when he first thought of it he said: "I guess I won't, now. If my mother should look out the window she'd see me, and she doesn't like me to walk on the track."

After a while a hillock shut them from view of the houses.

"Now we can walk on the track," cried the boy. "Come on, Joe."

"I guess I don't want to," said Joe.

"Ah, come on, your mother can't see you."

"I guess I don't want to anyway."

Then a lady who was behind them smiled at Joe, and said, "Who watches you, laddie?"

"Why, I guess I watch myself, m'am. Mother says if I don't I won't behave very well, 'cause other folks can't watch me all the time."

Who is watching you, boys? Have you learned to stand guard over yourself?—Christian Observer.

"MISSIONS AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS."

By Miss Julia McGowan.

(Miss McGowan is a member of the Epworth League of St. Mark's, New Orleans. This address was the winner in the Western Division of the "Know Missions" Oratorical Contest held at Mount Sequoyah last week. Miss McGowan will contest with the winner of the Eastern Division, the final contest to be held in Nashville in September.—Editor.)

"The United States," said a prominent American citizen, "is in a position of leadership in all the fundamental, idealistic, moral, and spiritual forces which make a nation great and constitute a worthy civilization."

If Mr. Houston had made this statement in 1924, the world might have applauded and passed it on without a second thought as to the definite relationships involved.

The United States has always been looked upon, by nations less fortunate, as the Christian nation: the Christian nation because it has been so richly endowed by the heavenly Father; the Christian nation because it has spent millions to build mission churches, hospitals, schools; the Christian nation because it has spent millions to send doctors, nurses, teachers, engineers; the Christian nation because these activities have been done in the name of Christ.

These missionaries have worked miracles in foreign lands in his name. They have relieved suffering, banished ignorance, and brought hope and salvation to nations doomed to peril. But along with these errands of mercy, they have brought enlightenment to these nations as to their places in this world, nations in a world of nations. As these nations take their new places in their seats of national authority, they look as a natural consequence to the United States, the Christian nation, for Christian principles in international adjustments. But as they turn their hope to the United States, they turn again with this message to our missionaries, "Your Christian nation is not Christian."

Our missionaries have but one recourse and that is to remind us with Saito that "It is of little use to preach the gospel of Christ as the power of God unto salvation until in lands that call themselves Christian it has proved itself to have this power in social and international relationships."

Non-Christian nations are pointing to our policy of interference with Mexico. We cannot deny the embarrassing fact that it is foreign capital that has exploited Mexico. Our capitalists, along with others, have gone into Mexico and have taken wealth untold without one thought to contribute to the upbuilding of Mexican civilization. With the richest mines in the world, Mexico to-day has little residue from them after 300 years of exploitation; and with the most productive oil fields in the world, gasoline sells there to-day for almost double the price that we pay for it in this country.

"The difficulty," said President Calles, "is not a difficulty between the people of the United States and the people of Mexio; it is rather a difficulty between the people of Mexico and a few American capitalists." Yet our country protests and threatens military intervention when Mexico aims to preserve a little of her own natural resources.

The use of armed force by our government to protect lives and property of our citizens in foreign lands has been a frequent source of hostility and war. What about our policy in China? Has the presence of our gunboats done other than to create hostility towards the United States? Our missionaries are not asking for gunboat protection; they are only asking for a fair chance to preach the gospel of Christ. How can they preach a gospel of peace and world fellowship if there is always to be the shadow of military forces behind them? If our commercial interests must be protected in China, let's see that our commercial interests give China a fair deal. Our Chinese problem then presents itself as to whether Western prosperity is uppermost in our minds for China, or China for Christ!

The hope of the future lies in international cooperation. Co-operative action on the part of our government with that of Mexico, Argentine, Brazil, and Chile would be far more effective in Nicaragua, for example, than military intervention on our part!

In considering the relation of the United States with the Philippines let us first consider our own past history. In 1776, the Continental Congress stirred the hearts of American patriots by asserting that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights," and that "to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the government," and that "when any government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute a new government."

Yet, the United States has repeatedly refused this right to the Philippines. The contribution that the United States will be able to make to world peace will be greatly affected by our policy with regard to Filipino Independence. If we stay in control of the islands indefinitely, we will not only incur the hatred of the Filipinos, but we will encourage other powers to prolong their control over subject countries. The London Daily Telegraph of April 10, 1927, said: "The withdrawal of America from the Philippines, either now or in the near future, will very seriously weaken the position of the Western powers in the Far East." Our Filipino question then presents itself as to whether or not we are seeking international friendship and co-operation.

There is no question but that we have done a vast amount of good during our period of administration; but this fact does not give us the right to continue controlling indefinitely some twelve million people of a different race, against their wishes.

February 22, 1927, was set aside by the people of the Archipelago as National Prayer Day, when all gathered together to pray to Almighty God, the Father of all nations, for complete separation from the United States. It was our missionaries who brought the light to these people; can we, the Christian nation, break faith now?

Our missionaries are being turned away from foreign lands because they claim that we, the Western lands, have a superiority complex. There is no question that race prejudice exists to-day. What then can be the cause that gives rise to such racial antagonism and conflict? Among the causes noted by Oldham was the economic question. The relation in which the United States and native races have stood each other for the most part has been that of employer and employed. In the tropics, this antagonism has taken on a racial color, but in its root it is not unlike our Negro problem.

Can racial antagonism be denied when we consider that great international disaster to religion and to the effective work of our American churches, the Japanese Exclusion Act. The purpose of Congress was no doubt to stop further Japanese immigration on the assumption that a flood of Japanese were still entering the United States. As a result of the Gentlemen's Agreement of 1908, more Japanese males left the United States than entered by 22,737. The number of foreign born Japanese in Continental America during 1908-1923 did not exceed 8,681. Cyrus E. Woods, former United States Ambassador to Japan, commenting on the subject, said that it was not exclusion that Japan resented, but humiliating race discrimination. By the exclusion act, Congress has thrown away one of the most important assets in solving the problem of the Pacific and has created unneedful fears of humiliation, mortification, and distrust. It has halted the effect of Christianity and set up the missionary as an object of ridicule. Can we preach Christianity to these people when we consider them inferior?

"The East," says one missionary, "does not want the gospel handed down by racial superiors; it wants it as revealed in the sharing of life."

Still another problem confronts those who would preach the gospel of Christ as the power of God unto salvation. That problem confronts itself with the prevention of war. War, and especially war between supposedly Christian nations, not only indicates the failure of the Christian forces in the past, but hinders them in the present and handicaps them in the future. We are living to-day in an age of science and interdependence. Every meal we eat, every stitch of clothing we wear is bound up by invisible threads of connection with the labor of African Negroes, Mexican peons, French peasants, and plantation boys of the Southeast Islands. The world to-day is an intangling interdependence of labor, of commerce, fabrics and foods. With these physical interactions and with such mechanistic links as telegraph cables, steamships and airplanes, the world today is heading toward a great commercial oneness. When we realize that in order to meet an industrial need, the world is attaining this great unity, then it is we realize the need for international peace.

The question then arises as to how we are going to abolish this giganitc force which seems to be a necessary part of a nation's history. League enthusiasts claim that it is to be the League of Nations that will satisfy this great need. World Court enthusiasts would claim like honors; but whether it is to be a League of Nations or the World Court, or some other international organization, it will never reach its highest point until Christ takes his rightful place at the head of the round table of the Nations.

"Internationalism," says Edward Merrill, "has no sound and firm basis save in Christian principles and ideals and no one can take the principles and ideals of Jesus and his gospel as authoritative throughout the range of human interests and not believe in international order, organized and maintained for the preservation of peace through the administration of Justice as both possible and necessary." All demands now vocal are for disarmament, for greatness through service, for the rights of weaker nations, for the substitution of reason for might, of law for war, for the putting of international intercourse on a human instead of an animal basis. Are all these not thoroughly Christian in spirit, meaning and aim? We should remember that the real power behind international progress towards bettered conditions is public opinion.

"War is an international affair," says Doctor Root, "and to prevent it there must be international opinion and international action upon that opinion and international institutions to give effect to that opinion."

After all, you ask, what has international peace to do with Missions? It is the very heart of missions. "The missionary," say Cornelius Patton, "is an apostle of internationalism. He bears a message of peace and good will to all men. He proclaims one God for the human race and hence one brotherhood for man. He seeks to establish a church, an organization which brings into one fellowship all nations and races."

As the missionary is an apostle of world peace, so missions is the solution of the great international problem. If America, the Christian nation, would stand for and uphold in her actions world friendship and co-operation, what a great step would be taken towards international peace! But as long as America allows war and race discrimination and industrialism to form the basis of her civilization, missions must fail, for, as Jesus said, "If the blind lead the blind, shall not both fall into the ditch?"

Suffering humanity is looking to missions and missions is looking to us, the youth of America. We must not turn back, for "he who putteth his hand to the plow and turneth back is not worthy of the Kingdom of God."

"Is there a word in the English language that contains all the vowels?" "Unquestionably." "What is it?" "I just told you."—Boston Transcript.

HANGING ON.

It's hanging on that does it,
When others faint and tire;
To keep a-going onward,
To climb a little higher.
Some folks are always weary;
They say it can't be done,
While others keep on trying,
And find in work their fun.

It's hanging on that does it,
It takes a lot of grit,
But the more of that you're spending,
The more you have of it;
And soon it gets as easy
As singing an old song,
For forget that you are plugging,
And the days just slide along.

It's hanging on that does it,
Folks see you standing pat.
They say you are a wonder,
A genius, and all that;
You laugh at their exclaiming,
"Superior brain and brawn."
And know that all the difference
Is just in hanging on.

THE STORY OF A LITTLE SEED.

Once upon a time there was a tall milkweed that stood in a fence corner at the very edge of a large wood. As the summer advanced, the milkweed was covered with long green pods; and by and by these pods burst open, and dozens upon dozens of tiny seeds with soft, downy tips, came peeping out. "My children, my lovely little seed children," murmured the milkweed, as she swayed to and fro in the summer breeze, "you must fly away now and leave me, one by one. But the good God meant that every one of you should sink down into the cool, damp earth and grow up to be a big, splendid milkweed just as I am."

"And so we will; and so we will!" cried all the downy seeds together; "we will not forget what you have told us. Good-bye, dear mother, good-bye." Just then a gay little breeze came dashing by and caught them up in his arms and away they flew, here and there and everywhere. But wherever a seed dropped into the cold, damp earth, the milkweed mother knew that a tall, splendid plant like herself would be growing next summer.

One little seed, smaller than the others, with downy wings that glistened in the sun, shrank back into the green pod and refused to go with the rest. "I like the sunshine and the pure, sweet air and the bright blue sky," she cried; "don't cast me on the ground, Mr. Wind, but take me sailing away and away, and ever and ever so far!"

Now the wind was a jolly, rollicking fellow, so crying, "All right, here we go!" he caught her up and carried her with breathless haste, through the woods and over the brook to a wheat field that stood fair and shining in the sun. At last she caught on a prickly ear of wheat and hung there, breathless.

"And who are you?" she cried at last, when she was rested enough to speak.

"I am a stalk of a wheat field," answered the wheat politely.

"And how came you here?" said the seed gazing admiringly down at the long, yellow stalk.

"Oh, I was a tiny grain once," said the wheat. "But a farmer planted me in the cool, damp earth, and I grew up to be the splendid stalk that you see."

"I don't want to be planted," said the little seed saucily. "I had much rather fly about in the sunshine. Take me up again, Mr. Wind," and away she flew.

When she stopped again, after a long, glorious flight, she caught on the rough bark of a broad, graceful tree, covered with green leaves and luscious fruit.

"And who are you?" she asked again.

"I am an apple tree," said the big tree, kindly.

"An apple tree, and how came you here, pray?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was just a tiny apple seed once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I have grown into a great, broad tree and bear ever so many delicious apples every year of my life."

"That's all very well," said the little seed, "but I like better to fly in the sunshine," and away she went, rolling and tumbling and laughing in the summer breeze.

She flew back into the large, dark forest this time, and when she stopped again she found herself in the arms of a great forest tree, larger and more splendid than any she had ever seen.

"And who are you?" she asked of the big, rough tree.

"I am an oak," was the answer in big, kindly tones.

"And where did you come from?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was nothing but an acorn once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I am a great fine tree, with ever so many birds nesting in my branches."

Just then the seed looked down into a hollow in the great gnarled branches and saw a little brown something, ugly and shriveled and old.

"And who are you?" she said with a little shrug of contempt.

"Oh, I am an acorn," came the answer in a shrill, cracked voice, "a last year's acorn that didn't want to be planted. Just see how safely I am hiding."

The tiny seed looked at the poor, wizened acorn, and at the big splendid oak, and hung very quietly in her place for a long, long time. At last she called out, very gently: "Take me down to the cool, damp earth, Mr. Wind, for I want to be a milkweed like my mother!"

"All right," said the good-natured wind, and away she flew.—The King's Builders.

ONE BIRTHDAY SHORT.

It was hard to see the entire troop start hilariously off to camp, and to be himself left behind. Donald Barton was as large and strong as half the boys in the troop; he could walk as far, run as fast, and row as well, but he was one birthday short. No help for that. Rules were rules. One must abide by them. The Scoutmaster suggested that eleven-year-olds lacked "the judgment necessary for camping." Cousin Edith, Girl Scout of many birthdays, poohed at that idea, and as a sort of consolation prize told Donald the story of the Ohio Perry boys, a true story which should be familiar to every boy and girl Scout.

For the story we go back about one hundred and twenty-five years to the day when Levi and Pepper Perry, with their parents, left Wales for America. They landed at Philadelphia, where they learned that plenty of land could be had for almost nothing far to the west across the Ohio River. Mother and younger children were left with friends in Philadelphia while Mr. Perry and the boys pushed through Pennsylvania, and finally stopped in the wooded wilderness of what was later Delhi, Ohio.

There Mr. Perry "took up" his land and built a log cabin. Before the cabin had either fireplace, or chimney, or proper daubing, the father, knowing that September was near, decided to return to Philadelphia to get the rest of the family and more supplies. Levi, aged eleven, and Pepper, only nine, were to camp out till his return.

Oh, yes! there were Indians around. They would better stay indoors if the Indians came. There were white neighbors, the nearest being Thomas Cellar, who lived only fifteen miles away down the Indian trail. They must go there for meal. Father would not be gone long, and would bring mother back. So off went Father Perry.

The boys had an axe but no gun. They cut down trees and piled up the trunks and large branches for fuel for the fire, which burned outside the wide-open door of the cabin. Of course they had a flint and tinder-box for emergencies, but they had learned to keep the fire during the night by covering it deep with ashes. For some weeks they lived largely on berries, grapes and plums, which grew abundantly in the woods. Chestnuts and walnuts they gathered and stored for winter, when mother would make nutcakes. They stuffed the spaces between the logs of the cabin walls with mud and leaves; but even so, the winds blew through the cracks all too freely for their comfort, when on cold nights they slept snuggled together under all the bedding they had.

Day after day passed and father did not come. Snow fell. Winter in good earnest. Meal low in the bucket. By good luck they found a fallen tree whose huge trunk had been hollowed out by ants or some equally industrious bugs, a fine dormitory for rabbits, and rabbit stew eked out their meager rations. Dried rabbit skins, pinned together with the sharp thorns of the hawthorn, made a fur coverlet for their bed. Some hunters (whether white men or Indians, the Perry boys never knew) shot a deer, took the best cuts from his carcass, and left the rest in the snow. Venison made a welcome change from the rabbit diet. Now all the meal was gone. "To-morrow," said Levi, "we go to Cellar's."

Nowadays fifteen miles is considered a very good hike for the younger troops of Boy Scouts, but Levi and Pepper made the hike, spent the night (I hope) with the Cellars, and trudged back to camp next day with their bag of meal. And the Indian trace was no modern asphalt road!

Spring! No word from father. But the boys were not idle. The sound of the axe was heard in that land.

June! Then one afternoon a rustling sound crept up the eastern trail. Indians? Immigrants?

"Sh, sh! Listen!" commanded Levi, his hand behind his ears. "Hear that queer call?"

Then suddenly, "That's Welch! It's father. Come on, Pep!" and down the trail dashed the boys.

Hugs, kisses and tears! For how could mother keep the tears back when at last she saw her laddies safe and sound after eight months alone in that wilderness? Wilderness, did I say! Come out with Father and Mother Perry while the boys show them the place they have actually "cleared" and made ready for planting!

It really looks as if some boys have "judgment" enough for camping even if they are a birthday or two short!—Marion B. Knight, in the Christian Century.

"TIME OUT."

"'Your master is decidedly better, Thompson, but very irritable. He mustn't be thwarted.'

"'He expressed a wish to wring my neck, sir.'

"'Well, ah, humor him.'"—Punch.

The physician's son was entertaining his playmate at his home. They were playing at being doctors. The son unlocked a door and disclosed a skeleton to the terrified gaze of his playmate. "It's nothing to be afraid of," he said. "It's only an old skeleton."

"Wh-wh-where did it come from?" quavered the other.

"Oh, I don't know. Papa's had it for a long time. I expect it was his first patient."—Exchange.

In the church pharmacy are at least four bromides that infallibly produce a quiescent conscience, and gently put the patient to sleep. 1. I work so hard all the week that when Sunday morning comes—; 2. When I was a boy I was made to go to church three times on Sunday, and so now—; 3. Company came just as we were about ready—; 4. I came twice, and not a soul spoke to me—.—Trinity Church News, Brooklyn.

"A GREAT MORAL ISSUE."

the principle of local option in its handling of the liquor question; and that the importation, manufacture, and sale of alcoholic beverages be made by the State itself, but not for consumption in any public place.

As we see it, the adoption of these proposed changes would undo all that has been accomplished in this nation against the liquor traffic. The purpose of those opposed to this traffic is to destroy the liquor business. This determination is based upon moral, social, and economic grounds. The liquor traffic has always been lawless in spirit, and destructive of the best in life. The only way to control it is to get rid of it. This we have done: first by local option, under which most of the territory of the United States became dry, and then by constitutional amendment, by which the legal process was completed. Governor Smith's proposition now is that we go back to local option, and that the States themselves engage in the liquor business.

As we have stated before, prohibition is a great moral issue in this campaign, and the issue is as clearly drawn as words can make it. When the issue is perfectly clear, the result must be left to the voters themselves.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We thank Rev. W. I. Henley, Longview, Miss., for two subscriptions recently sent in.

Brother T. M. Killgore, Lisbon, La., has our sincere thanks for a list of six subscriptions, accompanied by check, recently sent in.

Rev. J. H. Morrow, of Roxie, Miss., assisted Rev. H. Meliard in a meeting at Macedonia, on the Centreville charge. Four fine young people joined the church.

Rev. Guy M. Hicks, pastor of Epworth Methodist Church, this city, has recently returned from his vacation, spent in Georgia and other places.

Mr. Howard Carter, physical director of the Central Y. M. C. A., Norfolk, Va., paid a visit to his parents, Dr. and Mrs. Briscoe Carter, Ponchatoula, La., last week.

Rev. R. L. Armstrong, pastor of Felicity Methodist Church, New Orleans, returned from his vacation last week, which he spent in Texas and New Mexico.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace H. White, Alexandria, La., announce the marriage of their daughter, Manie Hatton, to Mr. James Paul Johnson, on Aug. 20. The Advocate extends all good wishes to this fine young couple.

We have received and read with pleasure the daily copies of "Misscela," official organ of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League Assembly, which met last week in Hattiesburg, Miss. The Mississippi Leaguers had a great gathering.

Mrs. Addie R. Williams, of Montpelier, La., in renewing her snbscription to the Advocate, says: "Oh that fathers and mothers could feel the need more and more of seeing that their children had good books and papers!"

The "Sequoyah Sequawker," official organ of the Western Epworth League Assembly, Mount Sequoyah, Ark., was issned as nsnal this year. with Dr. R. S. Satterfield as editor and Rev. C. E. Nisbett as pnblisher. It was full of good things.

Brother L. E. Havens, Ocean Springs, Miss., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "It is my intention to take my church paper as long as I keep house and am able to pay for it, regardless of cost. I conldn't get along without it."

Rev. E. R. Smoot, of the North Mississippi Conference, was the principal preacher at the historic Kavanaugh camp meeting, held at Crestwood, Ky., Aug. 9-19. A Bible conference was held in connection with the camp meeting, in which some of our great leaders took part.

The Home Quarterly for October, November and December carries excellent articles by Bishop Candler, Dr. E. L. Pell, Dr. H. B. Trimble, Dr. J. A. B. Fry, Dr. N. B. Harmon, and Nancy Smith Krusekopf. The Workers' Council for September contains helpful article on Training Day, Promotion Day, and Rally Day.

We are glad to be informed that Mr. G. L. Hawkins, well-known layman of Hattiesburg, Miss., who has been ill since last February, and has been in the Sanatorinm at Magee, Miss., during the past several weeks, has so far recoverd as to return to his home, with prospect of complete restoration of health.

Rev. H. E. Carter, writing from Fernwood, Miss., under date of Aug. 25, says: "Mother slipped away this morning to be with the Heavenly Father." We extend sincere sympathy to our brother and other loved ones and friends of the deceased in their great sorrow.

The new Methodist church at Oberiin, La., Rev. G. D. Purcell, pastor, held its opening service last Sunday, the sermon being preached by Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District. Pastor and people are to be congratulated upon this fine achievement.

Rev. Wm. Schuhle, accompanied by his son, Billy, paid tbe Advocate office an appreciated call on Tuesday of last week. They were returning home from Lake Junaluska, N. C., where Billy had been in a boys' camp and where Brother Schuhle had been taking in the program of the Lake Junaluska Assembly.

Rev. Harry S. Allen, one of our general evangelists, is assisting Rev. A. A. McKnight in a meeting at Varnado, La. Brother Allen has an open date immediately following this meeting, and he would be glad to hear from any pastor desiring his assistance. He can be reached at Varnado, La.

Dr. Cleanth Brooks, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Alexandria, La., was in New Orleans last week and honored the Advocate office with a call. His son, Cleanth, Jr., a Phi Beta Kappa gradnate of Vanderbilt University this year, holds a teaching fellowship in English in Tulane University, this city, where he will do graduate work in his chosen field.

Evangelist Claude P. Jones is holding a union meeting this week at Medina, Tenn. He has two open dates for fall—Sept. 30, for one week, and Oct. 31. Any brother desiring his services for this time can reach him at Jackson, Tenn., until Sept. 9; after that, he can be reached at Bilxi, Miss., or his home, 103 Fourth Street, Hattiesburg, Miss.

From the Lincoln County Times, Brookhaven, Miss., of Aug. 23: "Preparations for the reception of a record-breaking student body are going on apace at Whitworth College these days. Several applications have been coming in each day for the past few months, and at the present time the enrollment promises to be the largest in the history of the institution."

Rev. Leon I. McCain, our pastor at Minden, La., recently assisted Rev. J. F. Waltman in a meeting at Lisbon, La. The beautiful new church was filled at nearly every service, and its capacity was overtaxed several times. There were sixteen additions to the membership of the church, and several new subscriptions to the Advocate were received.

Tbe following telegram was received from Miss Elizabeth Langford, Louisiana Epworth League Secretary, on Aug. 22, sent from Mount Sequoyah, Ark.: "Julia McGowan, New Orleans, won first place in oratorical contest of Western Epworth League Assembly. Our Louisiana crowd is certainly proud of her success. The final contest with the Eastern winner will be held in Nashville in September."

We have just received a copy of the Year Book of the General Sunday School Board for 1923. It is beautifully printed, and is full of information concerning the Sunday school work throughout the church. It ought to be in the hands of all our people interested in this great department of the church's work. A copy will be sent free of charge upon application to the Sunday School Board, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

The following sad news comes from Rev. G. P. McKeown, our pastor at Woodville, Miss.: "Miss Daisye Ferguson, a missionary teacher in Collegio Bennett, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, died on Aug. 17. Her body will be brought to Woodville for interment. She was a noble character, and her untimely death has caused sadness in our hearts. Three brothers—Walter, Oscar, and Howard—survive." The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends.

The Methodist Layman for August is an especially attractive and interesting number of the official organ of the Board of Lay Activities. It is a "Who's Who" number, containing sketches and pictures of many of the leaders in the laymen's work throughout the church. We think our own Conference Lay Leaders—J. G. Houston, North Mississippi; J. M. Sullivan, Mississippi, and T. W. Holloman, Louisiana—show up mighty well. All the laymen ougbt to read the Methodist Layman.

This sad news comes from Rev. J. R. Murff, from Kilmichael, Miss., under date of Aug. 24: "From the old homestead, near Aberdeen, Miss., my mother was translated to the skies this morning at 3 o'clock, after seventy years of useful living and seventeen weeks of suffering. We will place her worn and tired body in the country churchyard beside father, who preceded her to the beyond twenty-two years ago. Pray for us." Our sincere sympathy is extended to all the loved ones and friends of this departed saint.

The presiding elder, Rev. H. G. Hawkins, and the lay leaders of the Meridian District, Mississippi Conference, have planned to hold at nine points in their district, Sept. 2-7, a series of laymen's rallies. The chief speaker will be Mr. Fred T. Barnett, Associate Secretary of the General Board of Lay Activities, Nashville, Tenn., and the purpose of the rallies is to arouse the interest of the laymen and instruct them as to their duties as members and leaders. All the men and women of the churches are invited to attend; and at four points, Waynesboro, Quitman, Lauderdale, and Scooba, there will be both morning and afternoon sessions, with dinner on the grounds for speakers and all attending.

We hope all our people, the preachers especially, will read the August number of the Christian Education Magazine, which recently came from the press. This issue contains a tirbute to the late Dr. Stonewall Anderson, a statement by Dr. H.H. Sherman, elected to succeed Dr. Anderson as General Secretary of the Board of 9ducation, the annual reports of the secrttaries and the treasurer for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1928, and the condensed minutes of the thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Board, held at Nashville, May 1. The Magazine contains much that every friend of Christian education should be interested in. The following figures will be of interest to our readers: Amount subscribed and amount paid on the Christian Education Movement to March 31, 1928: Louisiana Conference—subscribed $421,539, paid $185,994.75; Mississippi Conference—subscribed $875,000, paid $385,495.80; North Mississippi Conference—subscribed $406,379, paid $178,185.07.

GOOD WILL.

In building our new church in Lake Charles and on the occasion of its opening, August 12, one of the most encouraging things has been the cordial expressions of good-will from outside sources.

Catholic friends have contributed financially and the resident priest sent us a fraternal letter.

Our Jewish friends have for the past two years freely permitted us to use the Temple for one of our large Sunday school classes and also contributed to the building fund.

The Presbyterians, whose church is in the same block with ours, worshiped with us at the opening service.

One of the Baptist churches addressed to the congregation a congratulatory letter, which was accompanied by a floral offering. The other leading Baptist church worshiped with us on the Wednesday evening following the opening, and presented the pastor's wife with a mahogany rocking chair.

The Simpson Methodist Church sent us a floral offering, and on Sunday, Sept. 2, will dismiss their regular morning service and participate in the Lord's Supper with us.

On the occasion of a banquet given by the Men's class, representatives from the churches above mentioned, and also the Christian, Episcopal, Nazarene, and Calvary Baptist (Goosport) churches were present and brought expressions of good-will.

A letter of congratulation was also received from the local officer of the Salvation Army.

We gave an "open house" reception on the 13th, which was attended by people of all creeds.

As another evidence of good feeling between all faiths in Lake Charles, in response to a protest made in the local paper by the Southern Methodist pastor against a "Bathing Beauty Revue" that had been planned and advertised for July 4, citizens of all faiths responded favorably. The Catholic priest read with approval the protest at the Sunday morning mass, stating that it expressed the sentiments of the Christians of the community, admonished his members not to participate in the "Revue" and also made a strong protest in the American-Press. As a result of this co-operation, the "Revue" was called off by the organization which had sponsored it.

We have in Lake Charles a Protestant Federation of laymen who are ready to meet on the call of the Ministers' Association for common counsel and action.

The Women's Societies are also federated and have regular meetings once a quarter. Recently there has been organized a federation of Young People's Societies, and on their motion made a vigorous protest against a Sunday circus to be staged just outside the city limits, which would not have been permitted if there were any law to prevent.

Another very interesting thing is the good fellowship existing between town and country. Some of our laymen and young people have greatly assisted the rural work. Our Brotherhood holds an annual barbecue in the Moss Bluff neighborhood, where now a neat church has been built. On next Sunday evening, this entire country congregation will attend service in our new church in Lake Charles, and will receive the "glad hand" of welcome.

REPORT OF THE WORK AT SALLIS, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just finished our revival meetings on the Sallis charge, and our hearts are rejoicing because the Lord was with us and gave us some gracious revivals. The churches were greatly revived, and many souls were added to his kingdom.

We began our meeting at Sallis, July 4, with Brother S. H. Caffey, of Oxford, doing the preaching. Brother Caffey is a good gospel preacher, and his messages were very much enjoyed by our people. We had six additions here.

Brother M. L. McCormick, from Carthage, was with us at Shrack, but it sure rained out there—didn't get to have but four services. They were good services, though. Brother McCormick is a good preacher, and won a warm place in the hearts of all our people out there.

The pastor did the preaching at Spring Grove, Zemuly, and Salem, assisted by his wife, who worked with the children and young people. The good people of these communities held up our hands as we labored with them, and the Lord greatly blessed our efforts. We had only two additions at Spring Grove, where two little girls gave their hearts to the Master. At Zemuly we had a class of fifteen fine boys and girls to come into the church. Zemuly is a fine community, with many young people, which affords a fine opportunity for service. At Salem there were thirty-two additions to the church, ranging from 58 years down to about 7. It was great to see those fathers and mothers accept Christ and unite with the church. Many hearts were made happy because of their coming. I received eight into the church on Wednesday night, and on Thursday night, the last night of the meeting, I took in a class of twenty-four, the largest class I have ever received. It did my heart good, and caused my soul to rejoice, to see so many accept Christ.

We had our brother, W. P. Bailey, and his wife with us at Adams. It was a great pleasure to have them with us. They love the Lord and enjoy the work. The people enjoyed his preaching and her singing very much. We had eleven additions to the church there, and many resolved to live better lives.

We love our people, but we couldn't help loving them, for we have some of the best people in the world to serve. We are having a good year.

A. W. BAILEY, Pastor.

FATHER HELPS SON IN GRACIOUS REVIVALS.

Dear Brother Carlay: Brother W. J. Dawson, of Shubuta, conducted our revival at Pleasant Ridge church, near Moselle, and did some most splendid preaching, and our services were well attended, both morning and evening. He left the church much better and stronger by his splendid, brotherly bearing and his spiritual sermons.

I am with H. W. F. Vaughan, on the Yazoo circuit. We had a splendid meeting at Bethany church, with eight additions on profession of faith, and probably three others to join next service day. The meeting closed with every one in fine spirits. A Sunday school was organized with twenty-six members.

We closed a meeting last night at Fletcher's Chapel. We had splendid congregations both morning and evening—house filled each night. A most beautiful spirit and energy prevailed throughout the meeting, and they wanted us to go on another week. Fifteen united with the church on profession of faith. They were certainly a fine people to preach to. Many were glad to reconsecrate themselves to the work of the church. The same can be said of Bethany.

We will be at Pleasant Hill next week; every one loves the new preacher and his splendid wife, and they are doing a good work.

Trust everything goes well with you.

Sincerely yours,

PERCY VAUGHAN.

Ellisville, Miss.

A BOY'S AIM.

Once a little boy looked at a sunset. It was more beautiful than anything else he had ever seen. He turned to his aunt and said, "Auntie, when I grow up to be a man I intend to be a painter and help God paint the sky." That boy wanted to do something great. Of course, he could never help God paint the sky. God did not need him for that, but there are lots of ways in which a boy or girl can help God make the world brighter. Can you think of any?—Southern Churchman.

DORCAS LUCINDA BREWER-CLEMONS was born April 4, 1844; dled Aug. 5, 1928. One of Mrs. Clemons' joys was to have the pleasure to entertain those who love God. Her heart and her home were always wide open to her pastors. She was like Mary of Bethany—no one ever entered her home or sat at her table without her breaking the alabaster box of loving ministrations and happy hospitality. She was not counted among those women who longed to loom large in the limelight of the public eye. She was content to fulfill the humble and heroic mission of daughter, sister, wife, and mother in the home circle. While she was much alive to the signs of the times and took a deep interest in the great outside world, her supreme delight was her home. Her tireless devotion to her family was beautiful and sublime. No duty was too great, no task too heavy, if it brought to them some comfort and happiness. Sister Clemons joined the Methodist church in early childhood. It was the writer's privilege to be her pastor for four years. I always found her enjoying a rich experience in sweet fellowship with her blessed Lord. Mrs. Clemons was a member of Old Mount Carmel church, from which she was buried by her pastor, the Rev. J. L Nabors, assisted by her presiding elder, the Rev. E. H. Cunningham. I commend the bereaved family to God, who alone can sustain and keep them during this sad hour.

C. A. NORTHINGTON.
Ackerman, Miss.

MRS. JOHN C. DARNELL was born, April 4, 1873, and fell asleep May 30, 1928. Her last few days on this earth were days of violent suffering; but she bore it patiently, and even on her deathbed she looked to Jesus and praised him for his blessings. She would beg her friends to get right with God and tell of his wonderful deeds he could do for them. Her health had been failing for over a year, and she was confined to her bed for six weeks. Our loss is heaven's gain. Our earthly home is no longer cheered by her sunny smile, but is sad and lonely. No mother to smile and welcome us home. Oh! how we miss you. She united with the Methodist church early in life, and lived a humble Christian until her death. She was the mother of ten children, five girls and five boys. She is survived by her husband, Mr. John C. Darnell; her five girls, Mrs. Angella McKee, Mrs. Inez Burton, Miss Virginia Darnell, Mrs. Voncille Chisolm, and Mrs. M. M. Chisolm; her five boys, Mr. Roscoe Darnell, Mr. Frank Darnell, Mr. Hilmon, J. C., Jr., and Nelson Darnell; one sister, Mrs. Sadie Clark; four brothers, Jim, Alford, Jessie and W. P. Hudnall; and eight grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by Brothers Saunders and Walters. Mrs. McKinley Chisholm sang, "One of God's Days." After the service a long party of sorrowing friends and relatives followed her to Hopewell cemetery, where she was laid to rest beneath the season's choicest blooms.

As we wander around the dwelling,
And we think of days gone by;
How we miss the kind instruction
Of our mother gone on high.

Oh, 'tis hard to part, dear mother,
No one else your place can fill,
In the home or round the fireside,
When we're well or when we're ill.

The chair you used is vacant,
Your voice is hushed and still;
A place is vacant in our home,
That never can be filled.

All is dark within our dwelling,
Lonely are our hearts to-day;
For the one we loved so dearly
Now to heaven has gone to stay.

HER LOVING HUSBAND AND CHILDREN.

A MOST REMARKABLE WOMAN PASSES INTO BEYOND.

MRS. SARAH ELIZA HOWE—but better known by her friends, who were legion, as, "Mother" Howe—peacefully and sweetly passed into the Beyond just at noon Sunday, Aug. 5, 1928. She was 98 years, 5 months and 20 days old at the time of her going. In early life she gave everything to her Lord and Master. For him she lived and served for nearly a century. Her church and its spiritual welfare were ever in her mind. Just two months before her going she spent the entire day at old Crawford Street Church, in which she had been reared, in attendance on the district meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society. She had been one of the organizers of the Foreign Missionary Society in this old church the year it was authorized. Dr. Charles B. Galloway, later the great missionary bishop, was her pastor. Even before that date she had helped organize a society for a similar purpose. Her interest in this great work never lagged. On Sept. 24, 1850, she was united in holy wedlock to Professor Robert D. Howe, a native of New York State, who had come to Vicksburg Miss., as a teacher. Her husband's father was an honored member of the New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and many of his descendants are to-day active Methodists throughout New York State. The marriage was certainly an ideal union. Their home was blessed with two daughters, one, Roberta, living only nine months, the other, Juliet, becoming the wife of Rev. Nolan B. Harmon, now an honored superannuate of the Mississippi Conference, whose son, Nolan B. Harmon, Jr., a member of the Baltimore Conference, has recently given to the press two great books. Mrs. Harmon has been in poor health for many years, but is left to mourn the loss of a dear mother, along with her husband and grandchildren. "Mother" Howe leaves four manly grandchildren, to whom she had been a real inspiration all of their lives: Rev. Nolan B. Harmon, Jr., Front Royal, Va.; Robert Howe Harmon, Washington, D. C.; John Wesley Harmon, Shreveport, La., and A. P. Harmon, Vicksburg, Miss., and one great-grandchild, Nolan Harmon, III, Front Royal, Va. Mrs. Howe's husband preceded her to the Glory Land by forty-eight years. Most of the time since his death has been spent in the home of her son-in-law preacher. Her helpfulness has been of untold value. For many years she has really had full charge of the household, and on the Saturday preceding her going she had planned everything for Sunday. There are many people who carve out a remarkable career along one or sometimes two lines, but Mother Howe was remarkable from every worthwhile standpoint, the physical, the intellectual, the social and the spiritual. The silver wedding was observed in Vicksburg, Miss., Sept. 24, 1875. The announcement of this happy event contained a poem from the pen of her husband which bears out the statement in Proverbs 31:28: "And her husband, also, he praiseth her." No better tribute can now be paid to her, 53 years after these lines were penned. Space forbids quoting the entire poem, and we close this brief tribute with the husband's prayer contained in next to the last stanza, which has been gloriously answered.

"And when Life's troubles here, with us are o'er,
God grant our future lot may be the same,
For sure I feel, with other gifts in store,
Heaven's doors will move at mention of thy name."

Her pastor,
J. L. NEILL.

ZONE MEETING OF MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OF HATTIESBURG, PETAL AND PURVIS.

A history of each of the Societies in the zone and a talk by Miss Addie Greely, deaconess of the Central Methodist Church, of Meridian, were interesting features of the zone meeting held at Court Street Methodist Church, Monday afternoon, July 30, with Court Street and Petal Societies as hostesses.

Miss Greely is a former resident of Hattiesburg, and her many friends were delighted to have her present. She led the devotional, using as her subject, "Secret Prayer." After a prayer by Mrs. Dan Gilliman, Miss Greely told of her work in Meridian and also of her work in Florida, where she was stationed for awhile.

A member from each auxiliary gave its history, which showed the Woman's Missionary Society "Looking Backward, but Thinking Forward." The histories given were those of the Priscillian Circle, by Mrs. H. L. Galloway; Court Street, by Mrs. H. O. Siebe; Purvis, by Mrs. Slay; Lydian Circle, by Mrs. Henry McArthur; Broad Street, by Mrs. L. O. Wicht; Y. P., by Mrs. J. W. Thompson; Main Street, by Mrs. T. P. Crymes.

There were about seventy-five in attendance, and the meeting was opened with the singing of the Jubilee Song. Mrs. D. E. Edwards, president, presided. Mrs. Jeff Brown, secretary, read the minutes of the last meeting, and Mrs. W. A. Bilho, treasurer, gave her report.

District meeting for the young people, to he held at Broad Street in August, was announced.

The election of officers will be at the next meeting, which will be held at Broad Street in Octoher. After the song, "Publish Glad Tidings," the closing prayer was given by Rev. Mr. Holifield, pastor of the Petal church.

During the social half hour which followed, delicious ice cream and cake were served by the hostesses.

MRS. JEFF BROWN,
Secretary.

Alabama Lady Gives Interesting Account of Long Use of Black-Draught In Her Home.

Sipsey ah, Okla.—"I have taken Black-Draught ever since I was a child, and can recommend it as a splendid medicine for family use," says Mrs. Cora Maberry, of this place. "My mother used it, in bringing up her family, and after I had a home of my own, I continued to use it, as I thought it was especially good to give the children.

"My children did not mind taking Black-Draught, and so when they got upset with stomach spells, or were constipated, I gave them Black-Draught tea.

"If I found that they were taking cold, I was quick to start giving them Black-Draught, as it helped them to throw off the impurities which caused the trouble.

"My children are all grown now and have homes of their own, but I still keep Black-Draught in the house and use it myself when I wake up in the morning feeling dull and 'headachey', and have a bad taste in my mouth.

"Black-Draught is a simple remedy for constipation, and I prefer it to others because it is purely vegetable. I always feel better after I have taken a course of it." In use over 87 years. NC-191

TWO NEW JUBILEE AUXILIARIES.

Dear Missionary Women of Louisiana: I know you will rejoice with me that there were two Jubilee Missionary Auxiliaries organized this week—one at Rosedale, La., Sunday, with a membership of fourteen, and one in Lottie, La., organized Friday, with a membership of ten. These women are enthusiastic and will do fine work. We need your prayers to help support us.

Wishing all of you much success in your work for the Master, I am yours in his service,

SUCCESSFUL VACATION SCHOOL AT RIENZI, MISS.

A most succcessful and delightful ten-day Vacation Training School has just heen completed here at Rienzi. It was conducted hy Miss Elizaheth Earnest, of Scarritt College for Christian Workers, ahly assisted by a corps of local workers from all our church denominations. Total enrollment of children from six to sixteen, was seventy-five, and attendance was exceptionally good, with interest increasingly keen in the work right up to the end. Closing exercises last Friday were well attended by parents and interested citizens generally. Simple refreshments were provided and served hy the ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society. A fine showing of handwork hy hoth boys and girls and review of work by the Bible study classes, singing, flag salutes, etc., was much enjoyed.

Miss Earnest expressed herself as highly delighted with the way the Woman's Missionary Society had planned and organized the work before her arrival here. She said it was so efficiently done that it left her only pleasant duties of supervision, and enabled her to conduct what she considers her most successful school of the summer.

It is declared on every hand that this training school is about the fluest thing for community improvement and profit to the children that has yet heen in this community.

Superintendent of Publicity.

ZONE MEETING AT LORMAN, MISS.

Zone No. 5, of the Vicksburg District, met at Lorman, Miss., Aug. 10, with Mrs. George McNeil, of Washington, Miss., presiding.

Song No. 19, "Jesus Is All the World to Me," was sung, after which Brother J. H. Grice, of Lorman, conducted the devotional. "Publish Glad Tidings" was sung before going into the business session.

Our chairman, Mrs. McNeil, expressed regret that Mrs. McKeown, of Woodville, Miss., could not be with us.

Thirty-four answered to roll call; others came in later until forty were registered.

"The Jubilee Spiritual Message," hy Mrs. Ford, of Lorman, was a wonderful lesson in itself of how we should act and live to give a glowing Christian experience.

The history of the Missionary Society was given hy the historian of each Society: Mrs. Lewis, Fayette; Mrs. Dennis, Mispah; Mrs. L. C. Miller, Washington. Greendale and Natchez were not represented.

A letter of thanks to the district for the "Love Gift" sent to Miss Neil Drake was read. She will buy some hooks she very much wanted with this "Love Gift."

Brother Cain, of Fayette, gave us a fine message on "Christianizing America," or "The Challenge for the Next Fifty Years." He asked us to think of how may non-Christian people we have in our own America, and said we should seek genuine regeneration of church, business, and politics. The least we can do is to see that our schools have Christian teachers.

Brother Anders, of Washington, dismissed us for the noon hour, at which time a real picnic lunch was spread on a long table in the church yard.

At 1:40 the afternoon program began with the singing of "His Way With Thee." Brother Anders conducted the devotional.

A general discussion was led by Mrs. Kinnison, of Fayette, on "How Should Good Members of the Missionary Society Meet Their Responsibilities." Mmes. Ford Lewis, R. W. McNeil, Kling and Maddox took part in this discussion.

Mrs. Gray Geoghegan told of the children's work at Fayette.

Mrs. McNeil asked Mrs. Kinnison to tell us of the Young People's meeting to he held in Vicksburg soon. Mrs. McKeown sent a message urging the adult members to see that the young people were sent.

Washington asked us to meet with them when the weather is cooler for the third meeting of the year.

Brother Anders thanked Lorman for inviting us to come and for their genuine hospitality. The societies gave a rising vote of thanks to the Lorman society.

MRS. W. R. EASTERLING,
Secretary.

THE REVIVAL AT GUEYDAN, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: Just a word concerning our second meeting at Gueydan, in which we were assisted hy Rev. P. M. Caraway. It was acclaimed by all as one of the best meetings ever held in Gueydan. Interest was very good throughout. Our morning attendance was exceptionally good.

We had thirty-five accessions to the church, nineteen on profession of faith, and sixteen by certificate; out of these sixteen by certificate, fourteen were from the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The meeting proved a great blessing to our church.

Faithfully,
EDGAR C. DUFRESNE, P. C.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Workers' Council meeting at Lake Charles on Wednesday preceding the opening of the new church was an enthusiastic occasion. This school has about eighty workers on the official staff.

Dr. Charles D. Bulia, Nashville, writes: "I promised Dr. Cleanth Brooks that I would take the class in Evangelism, nsing Dr. Chappell's book, 'Evangelism in the Sunday School,' in your Standard Training School at Alexandria, Sept. 2-7. I am looking forward with pleasure to the occasion."

Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, and Mr. D. B. Talley, District Secretary, are trying to put on three Standard Training Schools in their district this year. The Amite-Hammond Training School opens Monday night, Aug. 27. Dean R. E. Smith, one of the instructors, is booked to preach Sunday morning at Hammond, and evening at Amite.

The writer was at the opening of the Houma Standard Training School this week. At the first faculty meeting each instructor reported practically all pupils enrolled were credit pupils. Among the pastors working for credit were C. J. Thibodeaux, G. A. LaGrange, J. C. Rousseaux and A. D. Martin. The pastor at Patterson, Rev. R. L. Clayton, was missed, but Mrs. Clayton was with us.

The largest class reported was the class on "Spirit and Genius of Methodism," taught by the pastor, Rev. B. H. Andrews. This was Dean Smith's first time as instructor in the Houma School; Mrs. Smith and Prof. Raulins have taught in nearly all former schools there. A hearty welcome was extended Mrs. Raulins and the girls on their first visit to Houma.

The Young People's class at Winnfield, taught by Mrs. John M. Gwin, is working enthusiastically on the enrollment of Young People in the coming Standard Training School booked for Sept. 9-14. Mrs. R. E. Smith will have many of these Young People in her class.

Mrs. J. T. Wood, of Winnfield, is due a vote of thanks for the class she has worked up for the Beginner Course in this Standard Training School. Dr. A. S. Lutz will teach the course on "The Bible."

Conference Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Pastors, take notice: Under the law of the Methodist church, the quarterly conference is recognized as the official body for the transaction of the business of the local church. Since, however, the quarterly conference is constituted primarily as a business organization, it has seemed wise to grant to tbis conference the authority to constitute a special committee, which, when constituted, should assume full responsibility for the work of the Sunday school. The legal provision reads as follows, Paragraph 382: "The quarterly conference may constitute the pastor, the Sunday school officers elected by it, and not more than three other persons a Sunday school committee."

The officers to be elected by the quarterly conference are as follows: A superintendent, who shall be nominated by the preacher in charge; an assistant superintendent, if one be needed; a secretary-treasurer; a superintendent of cradle roll; a superintendent of home membership; and, if there be any organized departments, the superintendents of such departments.

All these officers, except the superintendent, are nominated by the superintendent, the pastor concurring. These persons, when duly elected by the quarterly conference, together with three other persons who should be nominated by the pastor and superintendent, and elected by the qnarterly conference, will constitute the Snnday school committee. The Sunday school committee in the small church serves as a board of religious education for the Sunday school.

The four major responsibilities of this committee may be indicated as follows: (a) To determine the policies of the school; (b) To elect the officers and teachers annually; (c) To provide and promote training for officers and teachers; (d) To see that the school is provided with sufficient literature and equipment.

The past week Miss Caraway has been teaching a class at Shady Grove, on the Kosciusko circuit; Rev. Roy Grisham, at Ridgeway, on the Drew mission; Rev. E. G. Mohler, at Gray Rock, on the Coffeeville circuit, and the writer one at Bowling Green, on the Acona circuit. These are small schools, but have in them excellent people. They have room for development and growth. Bowling Green observed Sunday School Day, Sunday, the 20th. It has been several years since the day was observed in this school. Rev. Carl Wasson is a strong preacher, a diligent pastor, and a real leader. The people respond to his leadership in a way that makes the heart rejoice. The dairying industry is taking hold in this community. Trained officers and teachers for the church, and dairying on the farm, will change this section materially and spiritually. A bright day is just ahead of us.

REPORT FROM THE GILBERT CHARGE.

Dear Brother Cariey: I have finished holding my revival meetings. Dr. Monk, pastor of First Church, of Monroe, did the preaching for me in our meeting at Gilbert, and did it well. Dr. Monk endeared himself to my peopie. I am sure iasting good was done.

Rev. J. F. Dring, pastor at Jonesboro, did the preaching for us at Fort Necessity. Brother Dring is an unusually good gospel preacher. I believe that this oid historic church has a fine future before it. People seem to be fully awake to their opportunity, and are ready to meet their duty as faithful men and women.

While I am writing, I wish to say tbat I had the pleasure of worshiping with Rev. R. T. Ware, the 15tb of July in his beautiful new church in Shreveport, Park Avenue. I want to say it is a monumental piece of work, a church that has iong been needed to meet the needs of that community in that fast growing city of Shreveport. I believe Park Avenue is the best church building for the money I have seen anywhere. I don't see how the picture of the church has escaped being given us in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. It is excellently arranged, and fully departmentalized for Sunday school work.

I am sure it is now a piace that many preachers would be giad to have their name read out for at Conference. Heretofore it hasn't been a place to be coveted because of the tremendous task and work attached to the job of taking care of the congregation and at the same time building a church. This hard-working preacher shouid be permitted to stay and enjoy this spiendid work as long as he and congregation agree.

J. C. PRICE.

BEWARE OF THE BLACK WIDOW.

By Dr. Oscar Dowling, President, Louisiana State Board of Health.

There are few poisonous spiders in this country, notwithstanding the fear and aversion that people have for this animal (not insect). One, however, is a marked exception, and its bite is not only extremely painful but at times even fatal. This is the "black widow," "shoe-button, or "hour-glass spider, scientifically known as the Lactrodectus mactans.

The Lactrodectus is common throughout the Southern States, and has been repeatedly found in Louisiana. Provided with a black body about three-eigbths of an inch long, it is distinguished by its somewhat hour-glass shape and rather thick, round abdomen, which gives it the popular terms of hour-glass and shoe button. The "black widow" cognomen probably originates from the well known tendency of female spiders to consume tbeir mates—if the iatter fail to escape. Another characteristic is the red marking on the under side of the abdomen.

The "black widow" conceals herself under the bark and rotten wood, in cracks and crevices in outbuildings and basements and under stones, and being diminutive frequently escapes attention until she has had her chance to strike her fangs into the unwary person's hand or finger.

Only a short time ago, many severe cases were reported from California, where the Lactrodectus seems to be very prevalent. And recently Ewing, of the United States Bureau of Entomology, who has been investigating the venom of other spiders and insects, pronounced the results of a "black widow" bite to be far worse than tbat of either the tarantula or trap-door spider.

The symptoms are intense agonizing pain in the limb in which the puncture occurs. It does not appear at once, but increases in severity, becoming unbearable and iasting for several days. Besides this, there is marked constitutional disturbance.

None of the cases in the California series died from the effects of the bite, but tbe suffering caused, which could oniy be controiled by opiates, was great enough to warrant the attempt to produce an antiserum. At the present time it is not known whether this has been developed. Now, throughout the hot months in fact, is spider time. Many peopie are outing in the woods and fields. The best cure is prevention. Forewarned is forearmed. Be careful how you pick up old pieces of wood, and beware of the "black widow."

Women!
Relieve cramps with old remedy

Women themselves discovered this new and helpful use for an old product. They tell us that the cramps experienced by many girls may be relieved through the use of Chamberlain's Colic Remedy. For 57 years, this remedy has been a household remedy for quick relief of intestinal disorders. Probably many women have already discovered this remedy's ability to relieve the periodical cramps peculiar to women—especially after catching cold.

If you are one of those who suffer from these cramps, get a bottle of this proven remedy at once. It insures you against the usual agony, discomfort and loss of poise. If you feel an attack approaching, just take a few drops in sweetened water and secure immediate relief.

Simple? . . . Yes, but effective and safe.

All druggists know Chamberlain's Colic Remedy and its reliability. You need have no hesitancy in asking for it. If you wish to try it, we'll send you a trial size bottle free. Send for it today. Have it ready. Chamberlain Laboratories. 1073 Sixth Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPROVAL AND COMMENDATION.

Whereas, the Eureka Methodist Church, of Eureka Springs, Miss., of the Shuford charge, has just closed one of its most successful revivals under the pulpit work of its pastor, A. C. Johnson, unassisted; and,

Whereas, twenty-two unsaved persons confessed Christ and united with the church, and the pastor and people were drawn closer together into a better appreciation and understanding of each other, and out of chaotic uncertainty and doubt there emerged a great peace and faith; and,

Whereas, under this pastor's faithful direction, some 769 Scripture chapters were read during the revival, which continued for nine days with results that gratified the most optimistic; and,

Whereas, the Eureka Methodist church seldom experiences such uplifting meetings as the one just closed; therefore, we the undersigned, in view of the great good that has been accomplished by the splendid work of our pastor, do hereby proclaim to the world our approval and commendation of our pastor, Rev. A. C. Johnson. He has proved himself worthy of our highest regard and uttermost faith, and we, as officials in the church in question, pledge him our most hearty cooperation. We further state that our pastor's work here has been thorough, consistent, and of rare and compelling quality in all particulars, and hereby endorse his revival here as an example of note in our history.

These resolutions are to be sent to the county paper, the Panolian, and our Conference organ, the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

FROM THE CALHOUN (LA) CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: Calhoun charge has made some advances this year. First of all, we rebuilt the parsonage and built a beautiful six-room church at Calhoun at a cost of $5,400, all paid for. We dedicated the church on April 1. We now have one of the most beautiful churches and parsonages side by side, in a splendid location in the State (in its class). We immediately had Brother A. K. McLellan with us in a Cokesbury School, resulting in some good, but not what we would have desired. Then we had our revival meeting in July, Brother C. E. McLean doing the preaching; not the results from this we should have liked to see. Miss Elizabeth Langford followed this up with a three-night League institute, which was a splendid success, resulting in the organization of a Hi League and an Epworth Junior Society, both of them doing splendid work.

Spiritually, and in some other ways, Calhoun church has moved forward quite a bit. We expect to entertain the Ruston district conference next spring.

Perhaps Drew church has moved up more than any other church on the charge—they have increased financially, numerically, and most of all, spiritually. Brother D. W. Poole, my young neighbor from Choudrant, did the preaching in a revival here, and some of the finest results we have ever experienced we had here. Received this year seven fine young people into the church, all on profession of faith. One fine young lady is a life service volunteer, Miss Nita Johnston. Already she is at work in her own and neighboring churches. Here we have some money in bank and a fine lot to build a new church, and have set October to erect it. We have had an organization here, but never a building before. We organized a new Sunday school here also.

Claiborne is a splendid church in a fast-growing section just out of West Monroe, and there have been substantial increases here—placed new pews, built concrete steps, installed electric lights. Brother Ledbetter, of De Ridder, who built this house and organized the congregation, did the preaching in the revival. We had some splendid results, receiving ten into the membership on profession of faith. The whole church was built up, and Claiborne has better days just ahead. One of the substantial members at this church, Brother I. D. Wallace, gave Brother Ledbetter one acre of land upon which to build a home, and Brother Ledbetter expects to build there soon; and when he superannuates (which ought to be some time off yet), he will live in this community.

Besides all this, the pastor has married during the year twenty-eight coupies, spent about four weeks in bed with "flu," helped Brother Poole in a meeting each at Choudrant and Indian Village. Busy, but happy.

Fraternally yours,

W. F. HENDERSON, JR.

Preaching in Polish and also in German will soon be begun in the little Methodist church at Chodziez, Poland, a town on the borders of Germany and settled by both Poles and Germans. So far, all Protestant work in that center has been among the Germans. The Methodist pastor is the only preacher in the town who can preach in both languages. It is believed that this condition of affairs offers a great opportunity to the church to heal the wounds that have so long kept the people of these two countries from being brothers.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: As I write you this evening I am in the happiest of moods; and I well may be, as I am on the beautiful Mount Sequoyah enjoying a happy fellowship of other Epworth Leaguers and leaders at our Western Epworth League Assembly. I truly would love to wave a wand over these mountain tops and immediately see my Louisiana Leaguers here with us. I say "us," because I am not enjoying this wonderful fellowship alone. I am so glad that W. L. McDuff, Monroe District Secretary; W. V. Hall, of Winnfield, and Miss Julia McGowan are here with me. As you know, Julia is to represent our Conference in the Oratorical Contest, and, say, she certainly has some strong competition from ten other Conferences. By the time you read this, you will have learned of the results; but do not judge her too harshly should she only get second place. Should she take first place, and we think she stands a splendid chance, you should shower her with congratulations, as hers is no easy task.

Leaguers, may I fuss a bit and say that I am sorely disappointed at the small delegation from Louisiana? Only four Leaguers from such a great State is a bad showing. Every one is saying, "Where is Louisiana this year?" Now how do you suppose I like that? Should I feel that you would not be fully compensated by attending such an inspiring assembly, I would not scold; but no real Methodist, young or old, could select a more fitting place for a real rest, vocation, or instruction. Of course, Texas numbers about fifty per cent of the delegation and they are certainly a lively bunch. We have other Leaguers here from Arkansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Tennessee, New Mexico, and even way-off California. We feel fortunate in having Rev. and Mrs. W. W. Drake, of Ruston, La., with us. They will be leaving the first part of the week for their return trip to Louisiana.

As with all assemblies the program is splendidly planned, with the best instructors available, which contributes toward a most successful time in every way. Besides our class periods, we have the happy privilege of hearing many inspiring lecturers, among the most inspiring being Dr. Paul Harris, of Washington, D. C., representing the National Council for World Peace. His lecture on Sunday morning was so interesting that he was drawn into an open forum by the young people for the afternoon session.

I cannot go into detail in telling of the fellowship hour, vesper services, recreation in mountain hikes, baseball games, relays between the Tomahawks and Sky-rockets (i'm a Sky-rocket) and other interesting amusements; but I'd love for the Leaguers to know that there is not only study but no end of the fun and good times at such an attractive mountain retreat. You will have to see for yourselves, and that means that next year old Louisiana will make itself known at Mount Sequoyah as it did in the summer of 1926. I'd love to write much more, but I can't afford to miss the best time of the day and that is vesper service, led by our beloved B. Frank Pim and Miss Ina C. Brown, of Central Office.

The other Louisiana Leaguers join me in best regards to you.

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTES.

In the past two months, the Epworth League work in North Mississippi has been pushed forward. With Katherine Bryson in the field for the summer, an effort has been made to have her visit all Leagues throughout the Conference that feel that they need help. It has been somewhat discouraging at times to find League leaders so indifferent toward making their League better, but, as a general rule, the Leagues in our Conference are in much better shape than they are often given credit for.

There has been no effort heretofore to have district institutes in every district during the summer, but this is being done this summer. The Corinth District Institute was held at Booneville, July 19, and was perhaps the best institute ever held in our Conference. One of the outstanding features about this meeting was the great number of pastors that were present. We are working very hard this year to put our League work across to our pastors.

At Greenville on Aug. 24 the Greenville District Institute was held, and it was very successful. The Greenwood District Institute will be held at Carrollton, Aug. 29; the Columbus District institute will be at West Point, Aug. 30, and the Aberdeen District Institute will be held at Amory, Aug. 31. Grenada District will hold its institute early in September.

We have been very fortunate in securing outstanding speakers for these programs, and we feel that the Leagues represented at these meetings will be our outstanding Leagues during this year. Thus, our aim is to have every League represented at some institute.

KATHERINE BRYSON.

FINE REPORT FROM LONGVIEW, MISS.

Dear Dr. Carley: We have just closed a splendid meeting here, conducted by Dr. W. M. McIntosh, of Central Methodist Church, Columbus, Miss., which resulted in nineteen additions to our church. Of this number, thirteen came by profession of faith and six by letter. Six others announced their intention to join the Baptist church.

The meeting held by Dr. McIntosh was the greatest held in Longview in many years. The crowds that attended the services were responsive to Dr. McIntosh's stirring gospel messages, both young and old reconsecrating their lives at the altar for Christian service. The close of the meeting found but very few people in this community out of the church.

The singing was ably conducted by Jeff Cunningham, of Corinth, Miss. Jeff also preached some helpful sermons during the meeting.

Our work on this charge has progressed nicely. We have received thirty-nine members into the church this year. Our people all seem to be happy. God has blessed us. The finances are coming up in good shape, and we expect to make a pleasing report at Conference.

Sincerely yours,
W. I. HENLEY.

Longview, Miss.

In 5 Million Homes Tonight

A host of babies will enjoy sound sleep tonight. And their parents will have unbroken rest. Castoria is the cause of this contentment in a multitude of homes.

Good old Castoria! Children cry for it. Mothers swear by it. Not a household where there is an infant should ever be without it. A few drops of Castoria quiet Baby in a perfectly harmless manner. It is natural slumber that follows. Castoria is a purely vegetable product. No opiates. No narcotics. Of any kind.

Now you know why trained nurses give Castoria as often as an infant is ailing, or even restless. And why do we tell mothers it is the first and only home remedy when Baby has constipation, colic, diarrhea, or other upset. It is made for babies, and safe to give babies, and other things are not.

Fletcher's Castoria is "old-fashioned" if you count its fifty years, but it's a new-fashioned mother, nowadays, who worries along without it. Twenty-five million bottles bought last year! Think of the number of mothers who rely on Castoria! All these mothers can't be wrong! To keep a bottle in the house is a precaution you owe your little one.

Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

Dangerous Varicose Veins Reduced or Money Back

This Simple Home Treatment is Giving Amazing Results

Rub Gently and Upward Toward The Heart as Blood in Veins Flows That Way.

If you or any relative or friend is worried because of varicose veins, or bunches, the best advice that anyone in this world can give you is to ask your druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength) and apply as directed night and morning to the swollen, enlarged veins. Soon you will notice that they are growing smaller and the treatment should be continued until the veins are of normal size. So penetrating and powerful is Emerald Oil that even Piles are quickly relieved and absorbed.

RELIEF FROM ITCHING PILES

is so quick when PAZO OINTMENT is applied, it will surprise you. Druggists are keenly interested in the remedy and are recommending it to their customers. Ask your Druggist about PAZO OINTMENT. In tubes with pile pipe, 75c; or in tin box, 60c.

TRUE PROSPERITY.

By Bruce S. Wright, D.D.

"I wish that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth."—III John 2.

That is a pretty severe test. By this test what is the condition of our health to-day? If I am as strong as my soul is strong, what is the measure of my strength? If you are as healthy as your soul is healthy, how healthy are you? If I am as rich as my soul is rich, how rich am I, or how poor? If you are as prosperous as your soul is prosperous, how prosperous are you? A severe test! It by no means follows that outward health and prosperity are sure signs of inner prosperity. It simply means that the essential test is not outer but inner, that true prosperity is of the soul—even as thy soul prospereth.

Our lives are chiefly concerned with physical prosperity. We need to concern ourselves more with soul prosperity. Government is organized and conducted with an eye to physical prosperity. Infant industries are encouraged. Tariff walls are erected to protect and assure prosperity to our country's home endeavors. Investments in foreign lands are faithfully followed and safeguarded by diplomacy, gunboats, and armed marines. Our city governments are concerned chiefly with physical affairs. Our city fathers discuss buildings, streets, pavements, taxes, and parks. How much of our daily life is consumed with matters of physical prosperity! Our energies are given to problems of food, clothing, shelter, cleaning, washing, dressing—cares concerned chiefly with our physical life. Of necessity so, because we must live. But because we do the one does not mean that the other should be left undone. Because we pay so much heed to our physical prosperity means that we should give more heed to our soul prosperity. For in the end it is soul prosperity that counts. What shall it profit if a man gain the whole world and lose his own soul?

We guard most jealously the elements and institutions of temporal prosperity. Why should we not guard as jealously the prosperity of the soul? The government has an intricate system of marking all currency, by letters, numbers, cross letters and cross numbers, and secret insignia. When the government destroys old, discarded money it is done only in the presence of three different department representatives; it is quite an elaborate ceremony, the mere matter of the destruction of old paper money. Why all this fuss and secrecy? To safeguard the nation's currency against counterfeit, to protect the symbol of the nation's material prosperity. What is the nation doing to guard the nation's soul? Do we have locks and keys against the counterfeit of character? In the majority of towns and cities across the country the most stately and costly buildings are the bank buildings. The directors boast of their safety-deposit vaults, where anything deposited is secure—protected by heavy doors, locks, combinations, lights, burglar alarm, and insurance. What for? To safeguard the symbol of the community's prosperity. How about the safeguards for the soul of the community? What protection are we giving our boys and girls, our young men and young women; how assiduously are we cultivating the soul prosperity of our mature and influential life?

Physical prosperity has its limits; soul prosperity has not. Though a man be fabulously rich he can eat only so much, drink only so much; he can live in only one house at a time, or ride in one car at a time, or read one book at a time, or wear one suit of clothes at a time, or live the physical life only so long a time—the days of our years are threescore years and ten. On the other hand, there is no limit to the prosperity of the soul. The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more. No one is so good that he cannot be better. No one is so like Chrst that he cannot be more like Christ. Christian character is never a finished product, there are always added touches to be made. No diplomas are granted in the school of sainthood; for sainthood never finishes school.

Material prosperity comes to us in many ways; soul prosperity in only one. Physical prosperity may be inherited. A sound body, at least the foundation of a sound body, is a matter of inheritance. Likewise money and prosperity may be inherited. Or they may come as a result of what men wrongly call a streak of "good luck." Or he may have been "in on the ground floor." There is only one way in which soul prosperity can come. It must be sought. One must definitely, deliberately, constanly go in quest of soul prosperity. No one has a rich inner life who does not cultivate it. No one is the soul of generosity, goodness, great thinking, and noble doing who does not seek that soul.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. The only sure path to real prosperity is to govern the physical by the rule of the spiritual, the outer by the inner, the material life by the soul life. We hear criticisms of the church, that the church is not functioning, that the church is not doing her duty nor measuring up to her opportunity. The church is functioning; the church is the only institution dedicated to the proposition that the path to sure prosperity is to govern the physical by the spiritual, that to have a healthy body we must have a healthy soul. Happy is he who sees that. Blessed is the man who does not forget the blue flower.—The Advocate.

DOCTOR GLOVER ON BUNYAN.

At the Baptist World Alliance meeting in Toronto, Canada, June 23-29, the Tercentenary of John Bunyan's death was celebrated. The principal address was delivered by Dr. T. R. Glover, of Cambridge University, who is reported as follows in the Watchman-Examiner:

I did not know that John Bunyan was dead. He lives, and is more and more coming into his own. There are four things that I want to say about Bunyan:

(1) He was made by his religion. God gives mankind more genius than men ever use. I know of no authorities on education who know how to capture and develop genius. Suppose John Bunyan had never been converted. You never would have heard of him. His religion made him, made him sane. You remember how when he was haunted by the sense of having committed the unpardonable sin he did what no insane person ever would have done, he went to an aged Christian. But he got cold comfort. He was told that probably he had committed the unpardonable sin. Then he discovered that that Christian had had little conflict with the devil and was therefore ill-suited to give him help. Bunyan cross-examined his authorities. Then he found peace, and commenced to preach, and was persecuted. If he had left off preaching he would have remained a tinker. It was only in Christ that he found his gifts. This is a message for youth. If you want to develop and use all the genius that God has put in you, give yourself to Christ and to his service.

(2) Bunyan went to jail for twelve years for a lost cause. The English like to be with the majority; the Americans, as Bryce said, have a passion for it. What was the sense of lying in jail for a lost cause? There was no sense, except devotion to principle. As an old Cambridge schoolmaster said: "If you want to make an ass of yourself, try acting on principle." Bunyan said that he would stay in prison until the moss grew on his eyelids. But the moss never grew on such eyelids. What is the matter with this Congress? Not enough of you pastors have gone to prison for conscience sake. The last battle for liberty of thought and conscience has not yet been fought. But, you say, that happened under a monarchy; it could not happen to-day in our land. I am not so sure that freedom of thought is safer under a democracy than under a monarchy. Trade unionism knows how to kill freedom..

(3) Bunyan was a man of letters. How well do you know Mr. Talkative in Bunyan's book? Do you know that Bunyan's bad people always think themselves right? They walk away on their own feet unconvinced. Then I think of Mr. Fearing. It seems to me he was a professor of ancient history, because he loved ancient things, and he was never sure about his own salvation. He had no dealings with Vanity Fair, and he was familiar with the Valley of Humiliation. And have you met Mr. Feeble-Mind, the son of Mr. Fearing? And Dr. Skill? When my children were sick I had the physician read the passage about Dr. Skill.

(4) The London Times said that Bunyan wrote the world's best supplement to the Bible. What is more, he wrote my autobiography. I know the Slough of Despond. I also know Doubting Castle. I have spent some of my holidays in Doubting Castle. The accommodations are no better now than they were in Bunyan's time. In the allegory that castle was afterwards destroyed, but it has been rebuilt since then and with a lot of science in it..—The Christian Advocate.

AN AGE-LONG IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

From the earliest dawn of history there has been an irrepressible conflict between the godless and the godly, between the forces of the kingdoms of this world and the forces of the kingdom of God.

The faith which unites the sons of God to their heavenly Father, separates them from the world, incurs its hostility, and exposes them to its persecutions.

Such an outcome is inevitable.

Sin entered the world in which men live through the malignant hostility of Satan to God. This warfare began before man was created; for the Scriptures tell us that "there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the Dragon; and the Dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their places found any more in heaven. And the great Dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world; he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him" (Revelation xii:7-9). Whatever these mysterious words may signify, they cannot mean less than that there was a spiritual conflict in the super-mundane realm between the loyal sons of God and insurgent spirits who arrayed themselves against him; and that the warfare was projected into the earth when the rebellious hosts of evil were defeated.

Among the children of men it has been true, ever and always, that "the carnal mind is enmity to God" (Romans viii: 7); and by consequence that mind is enmity to the good and goodness also.

By the very essence of sin and the spiritual nature of the kingdom of God the children of this world always combat the children of the heavenly King. Hence the first sin recorded after the fall of Adam was the murder of a saint by a sinner. Abel's spiritual, godly character enraged Cain, and out of the hateful animosity of the latter to the former the first death of a human being was wrought by a murderous blow. St. John exposes the motive from which the act of Cain sprang: "Cain, who was of that wicked one, and slew his brother. And wherefore slew he him? Because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous" (I John iii:12).

As the righteousness of Abel incurred his murder, in like manner the faith of Moses called down upon him reproach: "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward. By faith he forsook Egypt, not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured as seeing him who is invisible" (Hebrews xi:24-27).

All the heroes of faith named in the roster of saintly souls given by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews were men who suffered because they were sons of God. All of them, "of whom the world was not worthy" (Hebrews xi:38), were involved in a state of war during all their brave lives of faith. So invariable and inevitable was the militant state of those high sons of God that the writer of the Epistle found their number too great for mentioning by name most of them, and says time would fail him to enumerate individually all of those "who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens" (Hebrews xi:34). Concerning others of like militant faith he says: "Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings, yea, moreover of bonds and imprisonments; they were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword: they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins: being destitute, afflicted and tormented" (Hebrews xi:36 and 37).

Nothing befell them which is not the common fate of the children of God.

The new birth enlists every renewed soul in the warfare of the faith "once for all delivered unto the saints;" for every truly regenerated soul must be a non-conformist, and cannot be conformed to this world, but is transformed by the renewing of his mind. (Romans xii:2.)

In this they are like their Lord and should not desire to be otherwise. So Jesus forewarned all who would come after him: "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love its own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you" (John xv:18 and 19). St. John, who recorded in the Fourth Gospel these words of the Master, drank deeply of their meaning; and he repeats the truth contained in them in his first Epistle, saying: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God, and we are the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not" (John iii:1).

The children of this world could not endure God's only begotten Son, and they have no fellowship with any to whom he has given the power to become the sons of God. "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not" (John 1:10); and because the world knew him not he was crucified by its princes; "for had they known him they would not have crucified the Lord of glory" (I Corinthians ii:8). Wilful and guilty ignorance of God led to the crucifixion of Christ, the climax of human crime beyond which no man can go in sin.

Thus the darkest deed of mankind was the murder of God even as the first sin after the fall was the murder of Abel, the first son of God at Eden's gate.

And all the children of God must suffer at the hands of a godless world. They, with their Lord, suffer not so much for what they say or do, but rather for what they are.

The all-inclusive issue in the warfare made upon them is the fact that they are the sons of God. This issue is inescapable. It is as inevitable as the abiding existence of sainthood.

Let every child of God know, therefore, that when he was born from above he was enlisted in a spiritual warfare to be continued as long as his earthly life endures. Hence, he is exhorted by St. Paul to put on the whole armor of God in order to "fight the good fight of faith" (I Tim. vi: 12). In his equipment for this holy war is "the girdle of truth," "the breastplate of righteousness" "the preparation of the gospel of peace," "the shield of faith" "the helmet of salvation," and "the sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God."

In this wonderful armor there is a piece for the protection of every part of "the happy warrior's" body, except the back; because no provision for retreating before his foes is to be considered.

And his "weapons are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds;" for he "wars not after the flesh" (II Corinthians x:3and 4).

So also the Captain of his salvation disdained to use carnal weapons, saying before Pontius Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight; but now is my kingdom not from hence."

In the field where the real and decisive battles of the sons of God are fought mere force counts for nothing. In the realm of the spirit the issues of this age-long war are settled: "for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against wicked spirits in high places" (Ephesians vi:12).

The final issue of this irrepressible conflict is not doubtful. Though suffering the sons of God need not surrender. They can, and should, conquer though they die. "Nay in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us" (Romans viii:37).

A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

By Rev. J. S. French, D.D.

At the last session of the General Conference, the Committee on Revisals had before it a memorial from the Florida Conference to the effect that any preacher transferred from an Annual Conference, or any layman moving outside the boundaries of an Annual Conference between the time of his election to the General Conference and the holding thereof, should automatically lose his membership therein. The Committee on Revisals non-concurred, but the Conference passed the measure; whereupon the bishops very properly declared it unconstitutional. Just before final adjournment, when everybody was in a hurry and there was no time for careful thought and debate, the time most dangerous in any legislative body, the matter was brought up again and passed. It will come down to the Annual Conferences this fall.

On its face, it seems a very innocuous thing, but it has in it highly destructive elements, some of which are mentioned as follows:

1. It is the entering wedge with which to destroy our connectionalism. This is the outstanding feature of Methodist economy. This is what chiefly distinguished it from other forms of government, and anything which breaks it down tends toward congregationalism and is dangerous. From the beginning we have carefully guarded this point. We receive members into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, not into a specific local congregation, and we give those removing a certificate which declares that "The bearer hereof, * * * has been an acceptable member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in * * * charge," etc. When it comes to our preachers, under Section V, of Chapter III of our Discipline (page 83), we ask, "How is a preacher to be admitted on trial into the traveling connection?" and we answer, "By the Annual Conference." It is the agency through which the Connection works, but nothing more in this case. It is an area lying temporarily between certain lines of latitude and longitude, but the lines may be, and frequently are, changed. When they are, certain men find themselves outside old Conference lines, but they are not outside the Connection. To pass this measure would mean to substitute for our connectionalism a more or less loosely knit federation of Annual Conferences, from which it is but a short step to another measure proposed by the same Conference, but rejected in committee, viz., that no man can enter an Annual Conference, by transfer or any otherwise, without the affirmative vote of that Conference; thus confining itinerancy largely to the bounds of an Annual Conference and breaking down our entire system. From this, it is an even shorter step to autonomous local congregations and the elimination of the episcopacy for lack of functions. The proposition is as hazardous a one to historic Southern Methodism as can well be.

2. It limits, to an extent further than we have been willing to go, the rights of an Annual Conference. In the episcopal decision which declared the measure unconstitutional, the following language was used: "It affects the qualifications of the representatives of the Annual Conferences in the General Conference, and puts a limit on the action of the Annual Conferences. * * * From the beginning of the delegated General Conference in 1808 each Annual Conference has possessed, and in more than one instance has exercised the right to be represented in the General Conference by representatives who were not members at the time of the session of the General Conference of the Annual Conference that elected them."

In 1844 the crux of the matter was the power of the General Conference. Delegates from the North took the position that it was absolutely supreme; those from the South, the opposite. It is not surprising, therefore, that the constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church contains this provision which it is now proposed we should adopt. It is entirely in accord with that church's idea of the supremacy of the General Conference and the subserviency of the Annual Conference. We of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, however, have been jealous of the rights of our Annual Conferences and wholly unwilling to put ourselves in the position of advocating centralization of power. In church and State our history speaks for itself, and these of all times seem poor ones in which to abandon our position. With prophetic vision, Dr. Kelley, of the Tennessee Conference, twenty-five years ago, wrote a book on "The Rights of An Annual Conference." Some of us thought then that he was pursuing a chimera, that he was defending something which needed no defense; and yet to day we face this proposition which would further limit the rights of an Annual Conference and consequently result in greater centralization of power in a General Confernce. It ought not to be done.

3. It makes it possible for the bishops to determine the clerical membership of a General Conference. They could transfer men, after their election, and thus cause them automatically to lose their seats. Granted that it is not likely to occur; yet it ought to remain impossible of occurrence. Moreover, it would greatly interfere, sometimes, with the best interests of the church, since a bishop would feel a delicacy in transferring such an one, even though he might be greatly needed, lest he should be accused of bringing undue power of episcopal persuasion on a man whose views did not coincide with his own.

Dr. A. C. Millar, of Little Rock, Ark., who called attention on the floor of the General Conference at Memphis to this aspect of the proposed measure, is not alone in his viewpoint. Even though such a provision is in the constitution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, there are those of that denomination who see its dangerous aspects and are not silent regarding them. Dr. Wilbur F. Steele wrote a very thought-provoking article for the issue of Zion's Herald of Oct. 5, 1927, under the striking title, "A Startling Query: Can Bishop Mussolini Prorogue the General Conference?" To pass this amendment would be to add another embarrassment to the many under which our episcopacy already labors, and greatly enhance the scope of adverse criticism to which it is being subjected in these restless times.

The Florida Conference is not alone ip its restlessness regarding transfers. There are several which will agree that the power has not always been wisely used. But to attempt a remedy which results in a breaking down of our connectionalism, the further restriction of the rights of an Annual Conference, and the concentration in the hands of the episcopacy of such power as this measure would place there, is to tear down the house in order to stop a leak in the plumbing.

RESOLUTIONS.

(Resolutions unanimously adopted by the Epworth League Assembly of the Mississippi Conference in annual session in Hattiesburg, Miss., Aug. 24, 1928.)

Whereas, it was the industrial, social, educational, moral and religious forces of the nation led by Christian leadership that overthrew the legalized liquor traffic and secured national prohibition; and,

Whereas, the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Episcopal Address of 1926, emphatically stated "that in our States, from constable to governor, and in the nation from revenue agent to president, officials must be selected who believe in enforcement not only because prohibition is the law but because it ought to be the law," and in the same address furthermore declared that the Christian citizenship of the nation "must unite in the fight with vigor and persistence to outlaw the criminal traffic and the would-be nullifiers of the law;" and,

Whereas, Governor Alfred E. Smith, the Democratic nominee of the Houston Convention for the Presidency of the United States is aggressively and irreconcilably wet, with a long and consistently wet record in his own State and has virtually repudiated the Law Enforcement plank of the Democratic Party by repeated expressions since the convention of his determination to emphasize his own wet modification views, and as leader of the Democratic Party to work for their adoption; and,

Whereas, Alfred E. Smith is affiliated with Tammany Hall as an officer, and is a political product of the spirit and methods of that corrupt, wet and alien "commercialized political institution," whose policies and stanndards are repugnant to Southern dry Democracy, and absolutely incompatible with Christian ideals;

Be it, therefore, resolved, That we, the members of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League Assembly of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, do hereby express our vigorous opposition to the election of Alfred E. Smith as President of the United States, on the grounds that it would seriously endanger all prohibition legislation by the possible repeal, modification or nullification of the Volstead Code and jeopardize the ideals of the dry Anglo-Saxon South;

Be it further resolved, That we show our good faith in the above action by renewing our solemn pledge to abstain to-day from all use of alcoholic beverages and to plan and work consistently for strict observance and enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment and all legislation pursuant thereto.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Toleration is a much used and much abused term during these days when party and party principle are traveling devious ways, and many are making statements concerning their interests which are mazy and puzzling. Our minsters are accused of intolerance, since many of them dare to preach a gospel that touches and shapes human life in all its multifarous interests. They are told by self-appointed censors from way-back, who 'chaw terbacker" and exude wisdom of the oxteam and loghouse age, to preach the gospel and not dare to lay hands on the sacred palladium of politics. That is too holy a thing for a preacher to pollute. He becomes narrow, intolerant, a bigot, a fanatic if he utters from his pulpit or in public speech or writing anything concerning civic righteousness or those great issues in State affairs which are basic and indispensable to righteous government of a people. I, too, say preach the gospel, a gospel of individual responsibility to God's call of saving grace; a gospel of love, consideration and privilege to others; a gospel that openly and courageously condenms sin, whether this hydra-headed monster is seen in personal conduct, in State, or in church; a gospel that will dare to invade the gilded palaces of the Herods of this age, and lay bare their vain subterfuges and artful propaganda. Hayseeds and demagogues telling the preachers what they shall preach! What does this crowd know about the gospel? They seldom if ever attend a church service to hear any kind of a gospel. The present-day conception and interpretation of Christ's message to man in his social, civic, and personal relation to the race at large, if perchance these censors might hear it, would be strange music to their ears. They have not got as far as John the Baptist in their viewpoint, not to say anything about that all-inclusive message of universal life, of leavening righteousness, of deathless moral and spiritual truth and power, which is the hope, the promise, the assurance of God's kingdom in the earth. Yes, preach the gospel, but know how big it is, how broad it is, and that its purpose, properly understood, reaches every phase of human life, and its saving grace should be known in legislative halls, in courts of law, as well as in the churches of our land. Looking backward, conservatism is mighty comforting to some folks, but if ever it won a battle, or anything else worth the winning I never heard of it.

"How shall they hear without a preacher and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Never was there more need of a faithful, efficient minstry than in this day when evil manifests itself on every hand. Custom and not conscience is the criterion and guide to most of our people in matters of conduct and living. The line of division which is drawn so fully and clearly by the teachings of the New Testament and evidenced to an enlightened conscience by the Holy Spirit, is to many a wavy, glimmering, adaptable line. It seemingly moves backward from moral standards to suit the whim and pleasure of this class. If people would spend as much time and talk in condemning evil and doubtful courses of conduct and life, as they do in apologizing for and defending these, we wonuld have a higher social standard. If our boasted representative democracy means anything, the same principles of right as against wrong should hold good in social circles, in the home, in the State house as well as in the church house. Equal privileges to all should first apply to the time-honored privilege of an honest, God-fearing life, and standing for the things that make for peace and righteousness. In the divine order of revelation law came before liberty, and the lofty privileges of the latter must be based upon and substantiated by the penalties and sanctions of the former. All that restrains from evil, call it law or what not, is in its end a blessing to men. The unchanging law of rigbteous thinking, righteous living, or conduct, allied with loyalty and love to a righteous God is the hope and salvation of the world.

LAY ACTIVITIES BOARD TO TAKE OVER LAKE JUNALUSKA.

Announcement that the Board of Lay Activities of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will take over the plant of the Southern Assembly to hold it in trust for the use of the church, was made recently by Judge M. E. Lawson, of Liberty, Mo., presirent of the Board.

Judge Lawson explained that the laymen's board would not assume any financial obligation, but would act as trustees until such time as the existing obligation of approximately $300,000 is liquidated, when it will be turnd over in fee simple to the church forever.

The Southern Assembly, with the improvements which have been installed by the stockholders, has been appraised by mercantile concerns at a value of more than $1,000,000.

While the assembly since its founding has been used for and regarded as an institution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, the property has been owned by a private corporation. For this reason it has been difficult to interest individuals to buy and erect homes here in sufficient number to place the institution on a paying business.

With one of the important connectional boards behind it there is every reason to believe, leaders say, that its permanence and prosperity are now assured. More than 600 acres of land have been plotted and their sale to congregations, church organizations, and individuals, will, it is said, realize more than enough to discharge all debts against the assembly.

That this plan will meet with instant success throughout the denomination was indicated when E. A. Cole, of Charlotte, one of the stockholders, explained the plan of financing, which has already been approved by the College of Bishops, and other church officials, and pledges of co-operation were made from the floor Friday night, and several indicated their desire to buy a lot and erect a summer home. Superintendent R. E. Noliner reported sales to the amount of $12,000 from this source.

For several years the future of the Southern Assembly has been hanging in the balance on account of the outstanding indebtedness and the fact that the General Conference would not take it over while hampered by a debt.

The action of the Board of Lay Activities in coming forward with a proposition to hold it in trust until funds from the sale of vacant lots will retire the obligation and then to assume entire ownership, removes every obstacle, and it is believed the Southern Assembly is due to enjoy an unprecedented period of usefulness and prosperity.

G. L. Morelock, General Secretary of the Board of Lay Activities, and R. E. Noliner, General Superintendent of the Southern Assembly, expect to complete plans at an early date for reaching the church's constituency in the Junaluska area east of the Mississippi river. They are both pleased at the outlook, which is due largely to a rising interest of Methodist laymen in a project which was launched by laymen twenty years ago. Much of the interest which has resulted in this practical settlement of the financial difficulties is credited to the great layman's conference in session here Aug. 19-26, which has marked a high tide in the life of the Southern Assembly, which will doubtless affect favorably the future of the institution.

A LETTER FROM "MR." SHIPMAN.

My Dear Dr.: I am glad to say that we are having some real good meetings up this way, and without the professional evangelist, too. In my humble judgment it will be a great time for the kingdom when the pastor and his people, and maybe a neighboring pastor, learn that the Lord is ready to honor their efforts in winning souls. So many pastors have declared themselves unwilling to undertake this work that I fear our people have lost confidence in their own pastors; and the pastors seem to have lost confidence in their people in this kind of work.

The professional evangelist may be of much service; but we can't all have the expensive evangelist, so it seems to me that it becomes us to cultivate, have faith in, and use our home helpers. The most of our thoughtful laymen, and preachers, too, are getting tired of paying big prices for little meetings.

I recently had N. G. Golding to assist me in an eight-day meeting, and sixteen better sermons I have not heard in many a day—spiritual and evangelistic. Great crowds gathered to hear this young, earnest and spiritual man of God. Twelve came into our church. He mixes well with all classes.

Doctor, I understand there is a protracted meeting going on at Lake Junaluska, and that Bishop Candler and Dr. Arthur Moore are doing the preaching. Don't you know, the old devil will get a real walloping? I like to hear the devil run down and beat on. I just don't like the devil at all, just because he is always attending to his business.

I suppose the heat guage is pointing high with you as it is with us—real good old summertime, with the watermelon smiling on the vine. Great time to flatten out under a good fan and read a good book, which I have been doing. Just finished Dr. Winton's "Mexico, Past and Present;" when I finished it and laid it down, I said, "Two dollars and the time well spent." Many people will be interested in that wonderful story just at this time, and I will gladly send the book postpaid to any one who will read it. I think the Doctor spent many years in Mexico, therefore he knows what he is writing about.

My evangelistic elder has one more meeting (at Lambert) to hold, then he promises me he will hold up. I hope so, for I want him to be strong at Conference, for I am getting pretty heavy to handle. The slate at this end of the State looks like a "Movie."

May the good Lord have mercy on us all.

Most cordially,

Tutwiler, Miss. "MISTER" SHIPMAN.

THE CONVERSION OF A HIGH MUCK-A-MUCK.

By Rev. John W. Ramsey.

Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, Honorary Curator, Department of Vertebrate Paleontology, American Museum of Natural History, has given up "the ghost." It is well known that Professor Osborn has for years championed the evolutionary hypothesis, and to establish the Darwinian theory of the Simian ancestry of the human race he placed on exhibition in the Hall of the Age of Man, one of the departments of the American Museum of Natural History, over which he presides with the dignity of scholarship, three busts illustrating the stages of man's evolutionary ascent or decent from his ape progenitors, and representing the three following types: Trinil Ape Man, Neanderthal Man, and Cro-magnon Man. Professor Osborn, recognized as one of the world's greatest paleontologists, once said of these three busts: "That these three restorations of prehistoric man form a progressive series is evident not only by the general form and the appearance of relative intelligence appreciated by the most casual observer, but especially by definite characters such as increased prominence of chin, reduction of eyebrow ridges, reduction of the prominence of the lower face as a whole, increased size of skull and brain capacity."

While visiting the American Museum of Natural History, thousands of school teachers and school children have been told repeatedly and led to believe that these fake busts demonstrate and prove beyond all question the evolutionary hypothesis and the ape ancestry of man; and now, after all these years of teaching the materialistic theory of evolution as an established fact of science, Professor Osborn has repudiated the whole business.

The Princeton University Press has recently issued a book, entitled, "Man Rises to Parnassus," with the sub-title, "Critical Epochs in the Prehistory of Man," from the pen of Professor Osborn, in which he completely reverses his former position on the controverted theory of evolution. The volume referred to consists of six lectures given by Professor Osborn under the auspices of the Louis Clark Vanuxem Foundation at Princeton University in 1927. Quoting from one chapter in this volume, Professor Osborn states his purpose in delivering the lecture contained in that chapter as follows: "To banish the myth and bogie of ape-man ancestry" (Type emphasis mine).

In another chapter Professor Osborn makes the following gratifying statement: "The author has now entirely abandoned the arboreal hypotheses and believes that man has descended from cursorial or running ancestors." Referring to a statement made by him in 1896, when he was a zealous advocate and a cantankerous proponent of the ape-man ancestry theory, Professor Osborn adds: "Since then the complete skeleton of the Neanderthal man has been discovered, and the balanced proportions of the upper and lower limbs lend no support to the arboreal hypothesis. The Neanderthal man is descended from hundreds of thousands of walkers, not tree climbers. When man does take to the trees it is never in the manner of the chimpanzee or of the gorilla, but in the manner of the bear. That is, of 'shinning the tree' by embracing the trunk of the tree with arms and shins. No anthropoid ape displays this power. The ape must rise into tree, not by the trunk route, but by the branches." So, that's that, and you now have it from the fountain-head of acknowledged scholarship, viz., Professor Henry Fairfield Osborn, Honorary Curator, Department of Vertebrate Paleontology, American Museum of Natural History!

Professor Osborn visited in person the localities in which the recent discoveries were made in England, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, and France that he might be able to give first-hand knowledge of the facts to the scientific world, and his findings as related in his book make very interesting reading, a perusal of which would no doubt furnish thought provoking intellectual pabulum for the smaller fry among the present-day modernistic and evolutionary sycophants—if they were blessed with the ability to read and think for themselves rather than voicing, parrot-like, the sophisms of others, as has been their habit. Professor Osborn is to be congratulated for bringing the whole subject up to date, and setting the pace for all scientists who may engage in prehistoric research in the future.

The question now is, What will pseudo-scientists, liberalistic preachers, and others whose vanity, the product of superficial mentality, led them to accept the theory of evolution, vainly believing that such acceptance would automatically enroll them among the scholars and intellectuals of the world—what will they now do? Since one of their greatest spokesmen has wholly rejected their ape-man ancestry hypothesis, what will these vain, peacock fellows now do? I have no doubt that they will continue their raucous croakings with their inconsequential voices notwithstanding the fact that the biggest frog of all has forsaken the pond. While it is admitted by all real scholars that the greatest physical scientist in the world has no real knowledge of electricity, magnetism, ether, chemical affinity, gaseous expansion, light, heat, sound, life, or death, it is an incomprehensible mystery to me that every tadpole scientist thinks me knows all about theology, evolution, your ancestry and creation.

Now, let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Since Professor Osborn has rejected the ape ancestry of man, affirming that man is a walker and not a tree climbing animal, we have come to the place where we can plant our feet on terra firma and begin walking, as a man ought. With man's animal ancestry rejected, there is but one theory of his origin left us, viz., the "mud-theory," if I may use the sarcastic nomenclature of modernists and liberalistic preachers, the latter denying the creed of the church while dishonestly eating the church's bread. What I started to say is that with the repudiation of the groundless theory of man's ape ancestry by Professor Osborn, there is but one other possible solution to the problem of man's origin and that is to be found in the Bible as revealed in the book of Genesis: "And God said, Let us make a man in our image, after our likeness—so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. . . . And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." So, then, man came into being not through some age-long, indefinable, materialistic evolutionary processes, but by the direct creative act of Almighty God who "formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life." If others prefer an ancestry with caudal appendages, they are at liberty to make their own choice; but as for me—I came from God.

DEATH OF BELOVED LOCAL PREACHER.

Dear Advocate: On Tuesday of this week we buried Brother Fountain Townsend, an honored local preacher, at Salem, ten miles north of Kilmichael. Brother Townsend was in his eighty-first year. Had been a local preacher in our church for something like sixty years. He was the pastor's friend and adviser, and will be greatly missed by his church and community. For the past two years Brother Townsend lived in Winona, but prior to that he made his home in the Salem community. Revs. Mellville Johnson and J. R. Murff assisted in the funeral service, which was largely attended. A suitable memoir will be furnished later.

E. S. LEWIS.

POETICAL TEXTS.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

My Debt.

If I have strength, I owe the service of the strong;
If melody I have, I owe the world a song;
If I can stand when all around my post are falling;
If I can run with speed when needy hearts are calling;
And, if my torch can light the dark of any night,
Then, I must pay the debt I owe with living light.

If heaven's grace has dowered me with some rare gift;
If I can lift some load no other's strength can lift;
If I can heal some wound no other's hand can heal;
If some great truth the speaking skies to me reveal;
Then, I must go a broken and wounded thing,
If to a wounded world my gifts will no healing bring.

For any gift God gives to me I cannot pay;
Gifts are most mine when I must give them all away;
God's gifts are like the flowers which show their love,
By giving all their own fragrance away;
Riches are not gold, or big estates, or marts—
The only wealth that is, is found in happy hearts.

—Charles Coke Woods.

The most modest and retiring of us can but see that we have many gifts and numerous blessings and some few talents. What we want to realize is that they are not ours to keep, but were bestowed upon us in order that we might give them away; and it is a strange paradox that the more we give, the more we have for ourselves. I am so glad that we have diversities of gifts. Life would be monotonous if we excelled in the same things. We would not appreciate a beautiful song if every one we knew could sing. We would not listen spellbound to some speaker if all had the gift of oratory. And then it is great that there are so many things those who can do who have not talents that place them before the public. We most probably love to listen to the sweet strains of a violin in some master hand; but if we are sick, it is to the physician we go who can heal us; if we are tired, we seek some quiet haven of rest; if we are sad and lonely, we go to some one who will deal gently with us and speak to us words of cheer.

Often we find some who are strong, able to endure hardships, and they owe a debt to those who are weak and ready to fail. Theirs is the privilege of upholding the weak brother. Some can lead with lighted torch and prove an inspiration so that others will follow.

If we have the gift of a golden voice, it should be used to brighten the lives of some shut-ins, of many who are not able to go to concerts and musicals. Great gifts are rare, but they are not lost when given to the poor and lowly who ofttimes appreciate more than those who criticize. Often there are tasks given us that no one can do quite so well as we can. It is not a virtue to underrate ourselves. Sometimes another word for modesty is laziness, or indifference. If we could but realize the fact that it is only by giving we live, we would be far busier doing things for others. All Nature points out to us the truth that richness comes by giving. Flowers waft their perfumes far and wide, the trees give of their foliage to cover the little sleeping seed that will wake some day in full glory. What if the trees do look stark and bare for awhile? They will bud out again in a far more luxuriant foliage and they can look out and see the result of what they have given to enrich the earth and to bring forth new plants and blossoms. O let us give and keep on giving and never cease as long as God gives his precious gifts to us!

THE RE-TIRED MINISTER.

By Rev. Fred Smith.

There are three kinds of ministers, according to my mode of classification. There is the tired kind, then the re-tired kind, and the retired minister. Inevitably we all come at last to be members of the third type. "Old age is a losing game," said the once famous Bishop Warburton. Perhaps it is. I am not an old man yet, and with many of my brethren I hope to put up a good long fight in the Pauline way. There is such a thing as leading captivity captive. You recall Browning's victory song:

"Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be!"

And the secret lies in the fact that until we have to face the last retirement we see to it that we form the habit of re-tiring.

Such a minister I met a few weeks ago. It happened that the day following was the twenty-third anniversary of his ordination. He told me that at the evening service the following day he was going to preach a sermon to himself. He was full of the thought of re-tiring, but to retire, that had never occurred to him. There is value in the hyphen—some times. Ministers can well afford to know the time of re-tiring as well as the time to retire. Many a wise minister has postponed for a long time the fact of his retirement because he gave proper attention to the need for re-tiring.

Lyman Abbott once wrote: "I can always tell when I go into a minister's study by looking at his books whether he is living in the twentieth century or in the eighteenth." In other words, to retire one's mind as one re-tires his car calls for the replenishing of one's library from time to time. But one can ascertain the state of a minister's mind also by other observations. I do not recall seeing on the walls of the study of the minister whom I visited recently any sign of a diploma. I almost wish now that I had asked him why. As I recall my Seminary days I remember how the boys pennanted the wall with the names of the schools they had attended, not forgetting to include the one they were memmers of. It gave us a sense of importance and dignity. Those were the days of knowledge accumulation. One comes to wisdom later. Then it is that these insignias seem to have a fading significance. It is always good to hear from what school a minister has graduated. But unless you also come to know into what knowledge he has grown, it won't amount to much.

My attention was attracted recently to the fact announced in our local paper that an out-of-town speaker was to address a young people's conference on "Science and Religion." I decided to attend the session. The speaker reminded us that he had been a president of a college. He had the insignia of scholarship, but so far as knowledge of science was concerned it soon was proved that he had not the substance of it. He spoke of "the molecules of ether!" Apart from this tremendous elemental error it was plain to perceive that he had not refreshed (re-tired) his mind with regard to science for more than a decade. Perhaps once the address had been considered great; now, the most that could be said for it was that it was grating. In fact, I thought I saw the reason for the past tense in the sentence in which he referred to his college presidency after I listened to his speech. Because he had failed to re-tire it was found convenient to see that he was retired.

The diplomas which a man displays on the walls of his study may come to show the measure of his ignorance rather than the amount of his knowledge. "Time makes ancient good uncouth."

That was a lasting truth which the dean of my first Seminary told us on the day of graduation. With a smile he said:

"You have heard many things in this school which you will soon find it needful to forget."

That was a spiritual gold-piece. Scholarship is more than a feat in memory. It is a putting away as well as taking on. In my reading I have heard of "The Attic mind" which embodied the best of Greek culture, but in my wanderings I have sometimes found men with "attic minds." The big thing for any minister is not that he graduated, but that he is growing. Palmer of Harvard used to say that he found it necessary to often question himself. Too many minsters take themselves for granted.

The need of the pulpit to-day is for the minister who re-tires himself by much reading and thought. It is not enough for him to learn the vocahulary of the new knowledge; he must assimilate the substance of it. And that is a distinction which many ministers seem to overlook.

A friend of mine, presumahly interested in religious education, said to me concerning a certain religious convention to be held in a nearby city:

"I guess I will not go. There is nothing in it for me."

And I thought I saw the day of one worker's retirement drawing nigh.

I recall as a lad hearing a minister say that he burned the sermon notes he used each Sunday at the end of the day. Few men work under such a discipline as that. His explanation was that until he was at least forty-five he owed it to his mental development to give himself the work of working out each week two new sermons. Compared to him how sorry is the picture of those ministers who talk of "their barrel" which never fails them! They go from place to place, and the barrel followeth them all the way. These are they that must be saved, yet so as hy fire. Better the Spartan discipline of my early friend than the lazy loquacity of these pulpit loungers!

"What need have you to go to school?" was the query presented to me by a minister when he found that I was to attend a summer school of theology for a term. And the only answer that I can thing of now which would have answered him completely would have been the laconic reply:

"Time to re-tire!"

When it comes to the matter of re-tiring I am a great believer in the hyphen.—Record of Christian Work.

LOOKING TOWARD SUNSET—A MEDITATION.

If, when at last, the night shall begin to fall, and the things which now seem so important shall all have been left behind, and the Master's voice shall be heard saying: "The day is done. The work is finished. Lay down the burden. It will soon be time to go to sleep;" if, in that hour, I can remember that among the toilers in the field I have tried to do a man's part; that when the sun was withering I have not shirked my stint; that when another has grown weary I have tried to speak a word of hope, and to lend a hand which would help and never hinder; if I can feel that in my work I have known how to sing, and, because of that, have taught others to sing, too; if I can know that in my heart I have cherished hatred toward no human being, but, seeking to be like him, have tried to forgive as I would wish to be forgiven, and to judge charitahly of others' failings as I would want them to judge of mine; then, whatever mistakes may have been made, I can lie down and sleep as peacefully as the little child at evening time who, with the mother's touch upon its hand, passes into slumber, knowing that all is well; that there is one watching beside me who "neither slumbers nor sleeps," and that when I shall awaken it will be to find myself in the old home, surrounded hy those whom I have learned to love, and that shall be morning.—George Thomas Dowling, in the Churchman.

THE HOUR HAS STRUCK.

You may wonder what is meant by the above caption. Nothing more nor less is meant than that "the hour has strnck" in "French Louisiana" for Methodism to do her work and minister to these people or give up the field to that church that will do the work.

"The field is white unto harvest." It has never been so before. You may ask why I believe "the field is white unto the harvest." The answer in part is this: we now have good graveled roads traversing this whole territory in every direction and more are being built. This brings the people out of the "backwoods" to the front, where civilization is. This makes it possible to reach them from the large centers of population by automobile. This makes it possible for one community to have the assistance of others in time of revivals or at the regular services. It is not so hard to get folks to attend service if it looks as if others are attending. We have good public schools now all over this territory, and many of the teachers are Methodists. In past years we had to battle against ignorance or worse because all the schools in the territory were parochial schools, supported by the Roman Catholic Church, which schools taught intolerance and narrowness. These schools are rapidly giving way to the State public schools. This means that all the children now attending our State schools are speaking the English language, which eliminates in a large degree the necessity of using only French-speaking preachers. These people are getting mighty hungry for the gospel, yet many of them are not yet brave enough to launch out with us.

Some one might say, "Are we not ministering already to these people?" I will say emphatically, no. We are not touching sides or bottom in this work. For example, take my own charge—Opelousas. My nearest neighbor pastor south is twenty-five miles away; to the west, twenty-five miles; to the north, twenty-five miles, and to the east, twenty-five miles. Now you can very readily see how impossible it is to minister to such a large territory—fifty miles square. Now this is just a small sample of what we have from here to the Gulf of Mexico, two hundred miles south. On top of all this responsibility, the flood last year that came in three miles of Opelousas on the east, left this territory impoverished. No crops last year and less than half crop this year as a result of the after-effects of the flood. This means that the preachers in this flooded area are confronted with a large deficit in salaries. Our people in the flooded area at present are "broke." The chairman of my board of stewards, a most godly man, and a prince, who was a most liberal contributor to the church and saw to it that his pastor's salary was kept up to date, has not made a dollar since May 15, 1927. He put his money into the cause of missions, education, church extension and in every call of the church; now he can do nothing, and I am sure, though he has not said so, that he is heart-sick at the seeming unconcern on the part of the church in other territories that do not have to labor under this handicap. I am of the opinion that this condition is not known throughout the church. There is as fine a Christian people in the church in this territory as you will find anywhere. Yet they are so in the minority they cannot prosper.

What does all this mean? It means that just as we have the opportunity that we have longed for to take this country for Christ, we are forced to cut down and weaken our front lines. The Methodist people in this territory cannot finance this work, and yet they are called upon to contribute to the cause of missions on the same basis or ratio as those of other territory, where missions is not seen. Brethren, we have it all about us and cannot do it! We cannot, with the present force and money.

Using my own case for example: The charge that I serve is the seat of Methodism in this State. The Louisiana Conference was organized here in the same church building that I am now preaching in, except it was torn down and made smaller several years ago. If you know anything about the history of the church, you will recall that Bishop Soule organized the Louisiana Conference in Opelousas on Jan. 6, 1847. I believe I have the date correct. We have a church membership of two hundred and eighty-five. These members do not all live in town. They cover a radius of eighteen miles in all directions almost. They come this distance to church and Sunday school. You can readily see how impossible it is to do the needed pastoral visiting. It is impossible from two standpoints—no one person can do the work, and it is too expensive. Now in spite of this handicap, I do get to the last person and visit in their homes—not often, but as often as physically possible. The automobile expense is not less than $600 a year. The Methodist preacher in this territory is called upon to conduct funeral services for all that are not closely affiliated with some other local church, and we have them here by the thousands who belong to no church. Most of them were reared Roman Catholic, but for some cause or other are not keeping their membership intact, and the priest will not bury them unless they can raise a good amount of money, which many of them cannot do and some will not try to. We have our opportunity presented when they are in trouble.

The assessment for my salary is $2,520. The stewards made the assessment in good faith and are trying to pay it. Owing to financial conditions, my salary is now in arrears near $1,000. What does this mean? It means that I am not able to meet my grocery bills and other current expenses. I am now behind several months with my grocery bills, and both my grocerymen are Roman Catholics. They are two fine gentlemen and appreciate the condition and have never pressed me; but is it fair? Here is your brother in this mission territory trying to minister to more people than there are in some presiding elders' district, and unable to meet his bills. You may say, why did you make these bills? They were made in good faith and will be paid. No one is worried about that, but the thing that we are to face is what are we going to do in the future? Now, some if not all of this deficit will be raised by Conference. These bethren on my board will get it if it is to be had. They will snap out of this condition shortly, but the work will be handicapped while they are coming back financially.

Our work in this territory should be so stabilized that the pastors would not be handicapped financially. We should put in each center a strong man to head up the work, and when I say strong, I mean strong. He should be a good man, a good preacher, a lover of mission work and a good pastor. He must be well educated and well up to date in manner and methods. This is ordinarily a rich territory, the finest farming land in the country. Our boys and girls here are going not only to the high school, but to college, and this territory is being filled with college graduates. The salary of this man should be fixed at a good amount and backed by the Board of Missions. He should be furnished with all the workers needed, and he should be given authority to direct the work. There should be carried on in all this territory a Christian education program that would be headed up in the strong center. The man that should head up this work must be a man that knows and appreciates this opportunity and one who is willing to give of himself that this work shall be done and that these people be given a chance. You cannot go to other sections of the country and get the man. It takes from three to four years to learn these people and to understand them, and above all to win their confidence. Now, when I say this, I am not referring to our own congregations, for they are just like other people, fine, intelligent, educated, forward-looking people; but I refer to the French Catholic population. The man in charge should be a soul-winner, for this work is a soul-winning task through preaching, personal work and in the educational program of the Sunday school and Epworth League and the other organizations of the church.

The presiding elders in this territory should be men who know this territory and men whom the people in this territory will love and appreciate. There is not a man in this territory that is so loved and respected as the earnest, energetic Methodist preacher. The whole country has its hat off to the Methodist preacher. These are a great people to serve. The most lovely folks in the world are found in this French section of Louisiana. Everybody here is good to the Methodist preacher, but that does not make amends for his financial handicap, for they know nothing about that except where they have dealings together.

With my presiding elder's assistance, we have organized a large mission charge adjoining Opelousas. In this mission we have six preaching places, with four Sunday schools and two Epworth Leagues. We have secured the services of a young man who has recently answered the call to preach. He is assisting in the work not only in these missions points, but is also assisting in the local program. In fact, the whole work is one, for the membership of the Opelousas church reaches all over this territory almost, and the pastor here has to serve these people anyway. So in this way we hope to begin some real mission extension that will be the beginning of greater things. But how can we finance the work? We cannot without the help of others. I shall be glad to have the Mission Board and others to confer with me about this work.

Brethren, what shall we do?

Yours for His kingdom,

D. B. BODDIE.

SOME PROVERBS OF THE AFRICAN.

It is said that in order to understand the wisdom of a people it is necessary to study their proverbs. Here are some African proverbs that show wisdom, brevity and force:

"The weasel has pride, the snake having gone out of its hole"—When the cat is away, the mice will play.

"Pots are made while the clay is in good condition"—Make hay while the sun shines.

"A chip killed an elephant"—Get out of harm's way.

"The potter eats out of a broken kettle"—The shoemakers' children go worst shod.

"Do not begin with the meal before the water is boiled"—Do not count your chickens before they are hatched.

"It is better to turn the enemy back on the hill than to drive him out of the village"—Prevention is better than cure.

"He weeps with one eye"—He is insincere.

"You kindle a fire and leave it"—You are a talebearer.

"No clever man ever licks his own back"—Do not try impossibilities.

"The hut of a man who professes, but does not perform, leaks."

"The eye crosses a full river"—desires go beyond the possible.

"We will ask for it when it is cooked"—Events will prove.

"All countries are frontiers"—Wherever you are exposed to dangers; said to grumblers.

"Harness is never tired"—Travel has no ending.

"A thief catches himself"—Murder will out.

"Anger is a warmth which lights itself."

"Right has no age."

"The lent knife never returns alone."

"Scarcity lives in the house of the quarreler."—Dr. C. E. West, in "The Other Sheep."

The Bible Institute in the Songdo district, Korea, was held at the Korean New Year, and was attended by fifty of the leading laymen of the district. The Institute had a full program of Bible study, special lectures, Sunday school addresses and revival services, the latter conducted by the Rev. L. C. Brannan.

THE RAINBOW.

By Leonard Sill Ashton.

Golden, radiant, glorious, the sun burst out from behind the black clouds which had darkened the summer afternoon, and before the rain had stopped falling the yellow light flooded the earth with shining beauty.

Every leaf, every pine needle, every blade of grass glittered, and then, stealing silently upon the air, through the very raindrops themselves, dawned the rainhow.

Lavender, pink, hlue and green—the delicate tints formed the wonderful arch in midair.

Gathered upon the wide piazza, the children had grown very restless during the shower, but now came the cries:

"It's clearing up! Here comes the sun!" and then, "Oh, look at the rainbow."

The children's mother, who had heen busily sewing, as well as endeavoring to keep the active young creatures within the hounds of the piazza's dryness, laid down her needle for a moment to look at the heautiful sight.

"Don't miss it for an instant, children!" she cried. "See, it's heginning to fade already."

"I wish it would stay," said Janet, the youngest. "I'd like to go and pick it up."

"That is something we can never do," said the mother; "but a thought has just come to me with the rainbow."

"What, mother?"

"Well, come and sit here heside me, and keep off the wet grass until supper time, and I'll tell you about it."

The children were really tired after an afternoon of romping and then racing over the fields to reach the house hefore the shower overtook them, so they were happy to sit down and listen to their mother, who always had something interesting to tell them.

They made a pretty picture as they gathered together. There was Janet, the youngest; then Mary, fourteen; Jack, who was twelve, and Dickie, just ten.

"You have been talking for a week about a club you were going to form," said their mother. "How is it getting on?"

"We haven't done much about it," said Jack.

"That is what I thought," replied their mother, "and do you know it is a very bad plan to get in the habit of planning and talking about this thing and that, and then not having anything come of it? Have the Morrises and Davises said anything about it?"

"No, only that they are going to belong, and Mary's going to he president."

"You haven't decided on any object for the club?"

"No."

"Nor even a motto, or colors?"

"No."

"Well, then, what would you think of suggesting this at your first meeting? Call it the Rainbow club, and have your colors the beautiful shades that we saw just now?"

"Oh, mother, that would be splendid," cried Mary.

"Wait a moment, Mary; this is not just a pretty idea. You are none of you too young to understand that every organization, however small, should have something in its constitution that works for the good of some one else. Why not have your motto 'Sunshine in the Rain,' and have this little club a society that tries to do something to brighten the life of another, when that life happens to he dark?"

"Oh, mother!" cried Mary again.

"Make a little rainbow for them?" asked Janet, eagerly.

"Yes, that is just what I mean," said mother, smiling alike at the two girls.

"But what do my boys say?"

"I think it will he fine, mother," answered Jack. "Only I don't want any one talking about it."

"You are perfectly right," said his mother. "Perhaps some people would say you hoys were afraid of heing laugbed at, hut you have the correct idea. Nothing that we do for others should be known or talked of, if we can help it."

"Let's get them all together to-morrow," said Mary. "May we have the meeting here, mother?"

"Certainly, and if you decide upon anything of the kind, I will get the rainbow rihhons for you when I go into town."

The wet grass was forgotten, and supper time came hefore the children were through planning for this new venture. All were anxious for tomorrow to come.

"We can go for the mail regularly for Mrs. Oldham, and not let her wait till her husband comes home at night, or have her watch for some one to go by to ask to bring it. And we can wheel Jimmie Phillips around his garden. He says when one of the hoys does it, it seems more like play than when the man just trundles him around."

In fact, the children went all over the village in their thoughts, stopping at this house and that, where they knew some one lived whom they might help.

Mrs. Marshall smiled as she took up her sewing again and listened intently, only once in awhile interrupting with a word of her own. She knew the first hurst of enthusiasm well, and she knew her children. Of course, they were not going to spend the rest of the summer waiting on their needy and afflicted neighbors; hut, nevertheless, they had grasped her idea thoroughly, and she knew there would he some result from their plan.

She was not mistaken.

The next afternoon there was much whispering and much mystery, although the house stood back from the road, and the garden and fruit trees were even farther removed. Evidently the club was to he an active one.

The names of people in the village were carefully gone over again, and after the election of officers and the decision as to the dues of the society, each one of the twelve children was given one person for whom he or she was to do something to help in his special need

Dickie was to get the mail each day to Mrs. Oldham, "and do it regularly, hecause she watches and watches for the letters from her two sons, one's a sailor and one lives in Chicago."

Anna Morris was to go and ask Mrs. Stringham, who was hlind, if she would like her to read to her each day.

"Bless your heart, yes," came the answer the next day when the subject was announced. "If there's a thing I enjoy, it is to know what the world is doing."

These two used up the village invalids, hut there were plenty of active hahies around, and the town was not one that boasted of much domestic help. While not actually ill, there were several overworked mothers.

"I'm going to take the Clark hahy an hour each day," said Adelaide Davis. "That will he rainhow enough for me. I can't say it means a stormy life for a mother to have a hahy, hut, anyway, they get tired and it will help."

The children were really all very quiet ahout what they did, and kept at their tasks with a degree of regularity.

Mrs. Mansfield's trip to town was delayed for various reasons, and it was fully two weeks before she was able to hring the children the ribhon.

By special invitation she attended the meeting that afternoon, and presented each one with a piece of ribbon of the variegated hues of the rainbow. It was decreed that it should be worn only at the meetings of the club. Then they told Mrs. Mansfield about the things they were trying to do.

"Think of the pot of gold that each of them will find, if they keep on following the rainhow in this way," she said to herself as she turned to go towards the house.—Girlhood Days.

DIRECTIONS:

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

Editorial

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The fifty-eighth annual congress of the American Prison Association will meet in Kansas City, Mo., Oct. 5-11.

Rev. Carroll Varner writes: "We are planning for big things this fall and winter at First Church, Tupelo. A finer people cannot be found anywhere."

Dr. and Mrs. R. H. Harper, accompanied by their son, "Pete," are enjoying a vacation on the Pacific Coast. Dr. Harper is presiding elder of the New Orleans District.

Due to the fact that last Monday was Labor Day and, therefore, a legal holiday, with no mail deliveries, it is probable that some communications intended for this issue of the Advocate failed to reach us in time for publication.

The First Presbyterian Church and the First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La., have been holding joint services. Dr. H. H. Thompson is pastor of the First Presbyterian, and Dr. Frank L. Wells is pastor of the First Methodist.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt, presiding elder of the Ruston District, and Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, both of the Louisiana Conference, were in New Orleans last week and paid the Advocate office appreciated calls.

Rev. Seamon Rhea, pastor, writes that the new church at Brooksville, Miss., will be opened next Sunday, Sept. 9. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. R. H. B. Gladney. All former members and pastors are cordially invited to be present.

Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir, our pastor at Plaquemine, La., paid an apperciated call at the Advocate office on Thursday of last week. He was just recovering from a badly infected hand, resulting from a cut recently. He gives a hopeful account of the work of his pastoral charge.

Rev. and Mrs. W. H. Giles are enjoying their vacation in Georgia. Brother Giles writes that he is not getting enough exercise to enable him properly to assimilate all the good "eats" he is enjoying. Wait till he gets back to his pastorate —St. Mark's, this city—and his complaint may be in reverse order.

The editor makes grateful acknowledgment of the kindness of Brother Charles O. Chalmers in writing "Personal and Other Notes" for the issue of Aug. 16. The editor's inability to perform this usual function was due to his having been called out of the city on unexpected and urgent business.

Rev. L. W. Cain, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, has called a meeting of the pastors and laymen of his district at Hammond for Tuesday, September 11, to check up on finances and lay plans for full collections. The editor of the Advocate thanks him for an invitation to attend and enjoy the dinner.

Rev. Leon I. McCain, our pastor at Minden, recently assisted Rev. S. S. Bogan in what is said to be one of the best meetings ever held in Glenmora, La. About sixty people came to our church as a result of the meeting, and some will go to other churches. Brother McCain writes that Brother Bogan is in favor with his people and is doing a fine work.

The following sad news came in a telegram from Rev. Claude P. Jones on last Sunday: "Mother died at 10 o'clock this morning. Funeral Monday afternoon." The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to Rev. J. R. Jones, presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District; the son, Rev. Claude P. Jones, and the other loved ones and friends of the deceased.

Rev. J. M. Alford, our pastor at Vivian, La., recently assisted Rev. J. O. Bennett in a fine meeting at Castor, La. The meeting was well attended and about twenty were received into the membership of the church. Brother Alford reports that he is preaching to the largest congregations at Vivian that he has ever had there at this season of the year.

At the recent election of officers of the Big Brothers' class, Greenville, Miss., Mr. George Robinson was elected president, and Mr. H. R. Brantley was elected vice president. Judge Percy Bell is the teacher. Other officers are: C. M. Rusco, treasurer; I. C. Stull, secretary; M. P. Massey, editor of "The Big Brother." The administration of the class is in fine hands.

The Century Company announces for early publication two great biographies—one of Cardinal Mercier, the distinguished Roman Catholic prelate, and one of John Wesley, by Umphrey Lee. Announcement is made that transcriptions of important Wesleyana will be printed in the volume about John Wesley for the first time. The price of both books is $2.50 each.

Miss Margaret Nicolaisen, one of the loyal and devoted members of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, spent a delightful week-end at the Seashore Camp Ground as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. O. Chalmers. Miss Nicolaisen reports a wonderful time on the beautiful Gulf Coast and expresses great appreciation of the gracious hospitality of her hosts.

Methodism in Natchitoches, La., suffered a great loss in the death of Mr. Thomas F. Porter on Aug. 16. He was about seventy-five years old, and for fifty years had been chairman of the board of stewards. He is survived by his wife, two sons, and two daughters. He was prominent in the life of his community and of that section of the State. The Advocate expresses its sympathy for the sorrowing family and friends.

Governor Long has appointed the Rev. Mr. Cox, a Baptist minister, to succeed Rev. H. S. Johns as chaplain of the Louisiana State Penitentiary. Brother Johns was in his twenty-first year as chaplain, in which position he achieved distinction throughout the United States because of his constructive work with prisoners. He will re-enter the pastorate at the next session of the Annual Conference.

We thank the pastor, Rev. "Bob" Shuler, for a copy of the Year Book of Trinity Methodist Church, Los Angeles, Calif., for 1928. It is a beautiful volume—perhaps the most pretentious volume of its kind ever published in America by any church organization. It is beautifully printed on fine paper and is profusely illustrated. The present membership of Trinity is approximately 4,000.

We take the following sad news from the bulletin of the First Methodist Church, Opelousas, La., for Sunday, Aug. 26: "The sad news of the death of Brother C. C. Wier's mother in Houston has just been received. Her remains will be laid to rest in Evergreen, La., this afternoon." The multitude of friends of Brother Wier throughout the State will sympathize deeply with him in his sorrow and remember him in their prayers.

The death of Judge Henry Mounger, at his home in Columbia, Miss., last week removed one of the strong citizens of Mississippi. He was a distinguished lawyer, but above all he was a faithful and devout member of the Methodist church. For a number of years he was the teacher of the men's Bible class in the Methodist Sunday school—a great teacher of a great class. He will be sadly missed. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to his sorrowing family and friends.

The work at Louisville, Misss., Rev. H. M. Ellis, pastor, prospers in every way. The debt on the parsonage, amounting to about $2000, has been paid, and the balance due on the Superannuate Endowment Fund will be taken care of in due time. The two Presbyterian and the Methodist pastors are conducting a union meeting at nights in the city park, which has been lighted and comfortably seated for the services. The meeting will continue through the week. Brother Ellis has been busy during the summer helping the brethren in their revivals, from which gracious results have followed.

The death of Mrs. Allen B. Kling, at her home in Satartia, Miss., on Friday of last week, as the result of an automobile accident, brought tragic sorrow to her family and friends. She was the daughter of the late Rev. F. M. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference. She is survived by her husband, Allen B. Kling, and three children, a son and two daughters; one brother, Rev. W. M. Williams, of the Mississippi Conference, and three sisters. The funeral service was held in the Methodist church at Satartia on Saturday morning, conducted by the pastor, Rev. E. D. Simpson, assisted by Dr. J. L. Decell, presiding elder of the Jackson District, with interment in the cemetery at Yazoo City. The editor of the Advocate and his wife, who is a sister-in-law of the deceased, attended the funeral.

THE GULF COAST, AND ELSE.

I have often thought of what a friend of mine said some years ago relative to traveling abroad; he said he had no desire to go to Europe until he had first seen the wonders of his own country. I have seen some little bit of the world myself—not enough to brag about—but it was only this summer that I laid eyes for the first time on that enchanting bit of the world right at my door, the Mississippi Gulf Coast. I had long heard of its charm and beauty and had all the while purposed going down there to see for myself; but, being close at hand, I reasoned that I could see it just any old time, hence had denied myself this privilege until this summer. Well, I want to say right here and now that the half had never been told! In spite of all the glowing descriptions I had heard of it, I was still charmed by it far beyond my expectations. My family and I went down in the car so we could go when and where we pleased; and from the time we hit Gulfport on until we left nearly two weeks later, it was one continuous delight to me. What prettier drive could any one want to see or enjoy than along that fine pavement skirting the Sound and in and out among those beautiful live oaks from Bay St. Louis on up through Pass Christian, Gulfport, Biloxi, and on! It is the continuous unfolding of a most pleasing and charming panorama. I was just recovering from the flu—that most terrible scourge of modern times—and went down there to rest, but each day found me yielding to the temptation to enjoy the spell of that drive again, and we were almost continuously on the "go."

Nature and man together have conspired to make of our own Gulf Coast one of the most delightful and interesting spots to be found anywhere. I was agreeably surprised to find that there is so strong and bracing a breeze blowing over that section from the Gulf. Blowing steadily and salt-laden as it is, one feels in it a tonic and bracer scarcely to be found anywhere else. I am an enthusiast over the mountains, having spent much time tramping around over them, and I have had much to say about the elixir of mountain air; but the breeze blowing most of the time while we were on the coast has got it beat. Then, too, what an unlimited amount of wholesome entertainment one finds here—boating, fishing, swimming to the heart's content! There is something "doing" all the livelong day—and far into the night. Bathing in the salt waters morning, noon, and night; boating after every kind that one could wish; and fully "fifty-seven varieties" of fishing. I shall not indulge in fish tales, but will take time to mention that one of my members went out one morning, and he and his three companions caught 150 trout in two hours. In fact, it is not necessary to spend one dull hour when vacationing on the Mississippi Coast unless from choice or too languid to be interested in anything whatsoever. Lest I make my story too long, let me say that I have come back thoroughly enraptured with that section; I am more proud of my State than ever, since I know what she has to boast of down there, and I believe Bishop Candler had just about summed the whole thing up right when he said it is destined to become the Riviera of America. I for one can hardly wait for next summer for a return visit.

With all that I have said above, there is an additional attraction for Methodists on this beautiful Gulf Coast—the Seashore Camp Ground. I was delighted to find that we have so finely located and so valuable property running along the shore line for quite a distance, only about two miles above Biloxi. Of course, I'll have to confess that I am woefully ignorant and frightfully behind the times that I did not know more about this valuable property which has been in the hands of our church for so long a time. When I saw it, something like 150 acres, so splendidly located, with its magnificent auditorium and numerous cottages and boarding houses, I immediately asked, "Why is it that the patronizing Conferences of our church have not built up here a great Summer Assembly?" It is true, and I am more than ever thankful for it, that they have conducted there for about twenty years a successful summer school of short duration for preachers, and also a sort of camp meeting for about two weeks, but we ought to have in addition to these something of an inspirational and instructive nature going on there practically all the summer. The Divinity School and Pastors' Conference were attended a little better this summer than formerly, but we ought to increase the attendance and interest far beyond what it is. We who heard him cannot soon forget Dr. Leander S. Keyser and his very helpful addresses twice a day for a week. Dr. Keyser is in no sense an orator, but he is a rare combination of heart and head, and no one can sit under him and not be made better and wiser for it. Dr. Faulkner, of Drew, delivered a course of lectures the second week, and while he is not an attractive speaker, yet you cannot listen to him long before you are convinced that he speaks with authority. It was not my pleasure to be present for the camp meeting, which came much later in the summer, but I understand that it was very largely attended and great interest was shown. Effort will be made another summer to make the programs there of still greater interest to the laity as well as the preachers. We are wonderfully fortunate to be in possession of this great piece of property at this time in the history of the development of that charming coast land, and we will be recreant to our plain duty if we do not take hold of this opportunity vigorously and make full use of it for the glory of God and the cause of righteousness. If we will but do this, then it will be no longer necessary for us to flie away to distant Junaluska, or Mount Sequoyah, or Winona Lake to get the inspiration and recreation which we will have right at hand.

A TRIP TO NORTH LOUISIANA.

Most of my ministry has been given to the northern part of Louisiana. Recently I was with Rev. W. F. Henderson, Jr., in a revival at Calhorne, on the old Dixie Highway, I believe U. S. No. 80. Brother Henderson has been kind enough to write up the meeting. This church has a future before it. There are a few substantial men and women in that church. The community is building up, and it is just ten minutes' ride into the city. They have electric lights now. Think of a quiet country home with city advantages, combined with country garden and other advantages, and just ten minutes to reach work! Give me a place like that to live!

It was a pleasure to visit Brother Henderson's church at Calhoun. To have built that church and improved the parsonage as he has done, and paid for all in the same year, is a notable achievement for that place. Who believed anything worth while could have been done at Drew? He is going to build a church at Drew. A new birth is taking place on the Calhoun charge. The report from Calhoun charge this year will command attention.

It was a pleasure to visit Brother Gunn, the wide-awake presiding elder of the Monroe District. It was a pleasure, too, to have him and Sister Gunn in one of our evening services. I heard good reports of his work on the district.

Being so close to West Monroe brought us in contact with Brother McCoy. Many of his people were out to our evening services. McCoy possesses the qualities needed for a successful pastorate at West Monroe. There I served six years and love my friends there. No better friends I ever had than in that place.

While in the northern part of the State I visited Arcadia a few hours. There I met a few of my friends and the successful pastor, Brother Morgan. There I labored for four years. Morgan succeeded me. The debt on the property is being met as it falls due. Good things were in the air about Morgan. He was kind enough to ask me to preach for him, but to stay over and preach I could not.

Other things I would like to say, but this letter is of sufficient length now.

MORNING PRAYER.

By William N. Robertson.

Lord, we come at break of day,
Hear our prayer, nor let us stray;
In the night thy loving care,
Gave new strength this day to share.

In our minds let thy mind move,
Make our hearts thy will to love;
In our weakness be our strength.
Faith to follow any length.

In our joy let thy praise ring,
Help us now thy praise to sing;
In our sorrow lift a song,
Push aside all thoughts of wrong.

In our house be thou our guest,
Tarry long, grace every feast;
By all roads do thou lead on
From break of day till setting sun.

When shadows come at end of day,
Keep us ever close to thee;
Clean and pure in thought and work,
Give us joy in Christ the Lord.

The Holy Communion

THERE is no time in the Christian's life when he comes into closer and more intimate relationship with the Divine than when he sits at the Lord's table. Why not approach its celebration with unalloyed joy; discarding all fears; thinking only of the wonderful privilege?

"The Sanitary" INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION Cups

It is now generally recognized that the Sanitary individual cup increases the attendance because it removes all fear of uncleanliness, and promotes a deeper reverence in the communicant. The Sanitary Communion Outfit Company offers an improved and satisfactory outfit throughout, including the highly polished beautiful mahogany tray here shown, which eliminates all noise, is lighter and more easily handled than others and is more in keeping with the furniture of the church than a tray of any other material.

Make your communion service all that it should be; send for free booklet and catalogue (with quotations).

MRS. SWAN B. SCRUGGS, of Iuka, Miss., passed peacefully away on the morning of Aug. 22, and a host of her friends gathered the next day at the Iuka Methodist church to pay their respects to her memory. Rev. Grover C. Schwartz, her pastor, had charge of the services and delivered the funeral eulogy. Interment was at the Moore cemetery at Iuka, Miss. Mrs. Swan B. Scruggs was one of the oldest members of our church, being born at Villa Rica, Ga., on Feb. 23, 1859. She moved to Iuka early in life and joined our church in May, 1882. She was joined in marriage to A. T. Scruggs, brother of Rev. John Scruggs, on Oct. 19, 1882. Three children were born, of whom only Mary Scruggs survives, one soldier son sleeps in France. Mrs. Scruggs leaves thousands of friends to mourn her passing, for she played a prominent role in the church and community life of this city. "She faltered by the wayside and the angels took her home."

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, in his all wise Providence, has seen fit to transplant from this earthly kingdom to our heavenly home our dear little friends and fellow Sunday school pupils, MARION MELVIN LUSTER and JANE ELIZABETH TATUM; and

Be it resolved, That while we acknowledge God's wisdom, we deplore the loss of these precious children, two of the fairest flowers of our little flock, and miss the sunshine of their presence; that we feel that they are now basking in the sunshine of our Saviour's smile, who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," and that they will never more feel pain, nor loss, nor sorrow.

Be it further resolved, That we extend to the grief-stricken parents and other relatives our heartfelt sympathy in their great loss, and pray for them consoling presence and strength of the "Everlasting Arms" and God's sustaining love.

Resolved, also, That a copy of these resolutions be read to the Sunday school; a copy be sent to the bereaved parents, a copy be included in the minutes of the Sunday school, and pubished in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Signed: Mrs. C. J. Henry, Mrs. E. D. Robbins, Mrs. J. C. Martin.

Edwards, Miss.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom, has called from this life to the upper realms of glory, our sister and co-worker in the Sunday school, MRS. G. C. BELKNAP; and,

Whereas, the community at large and the Methodist church have lost a true and valued friend; whose sweet and gracious Chirstian life radiated unselfish love to her family and friends;

Therefore be it resolved, That we shall hold in sweet remembrance our association with her and that we extend to the sorrowing loved ones our deepest sympathy in their irreparable loss. May they feel that death cannot destroy the heritage of her beautiful Christian life.

"O thou who dryest the mourner's tears!
How dark this world would be,
If, when aggrieved and wounded here,
We could not fly to thee.
But thou wilt heal that broken heart,
Which, like the plants that throw
Their fragrance from the wounded part,
Breathes sweetness out of woe."

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her bereaved family, a copy be sent to the Christian Advocate, and a copy spread upon the records of the Methodist Sunday school.

Signed: Mrs. L. E. Nichols, Mrs. J. O. Ware, Mrs. J. W. Ratliff.

THE PALMER CREEK CAMP MEETING.

The forty-fifth Annual Palmer Camp Meeting came to a close Sunday, Aug. 26, at the evening service.

The people say this was the best meeting held at this camp ground for many years.

There were seventy-five conversions and reclamations and eight additions to the churches.

A large per cent of those who attended these services gave expressions to having been greatly benefited spiritually.

A large number of young people were converted and we greatly appreciate the active part the young people took in the services.

Rev. B. G. Carns, of Wilmore, Ky., a graduate of Asbury College, did the preaching. Brother Carns so greatly endeared himself to the people that they unanimously invited him to hold their next camp meeting. We can heartily recommend Brother Carns as a safe and good evangelist. Brother L. E. Havens, of Vancleave, Miss., conducted the song services. He is a sweet-spirited song evangelist, and we hope to have him with us again.

We take courage and go forward.

REVIVAL AT ANDREWS CHAPEL.

Beginning on the third Sunday in July, we held our meeting at Andrew's Chapel, near Carmichael, Miss. The preaching was very efficiently done by Rev. Percy Vaughan, of Ellisville, Miss. Brother Vaughan brought to us at every service a splendid, soul-stirring message. The Sermon on the Mount was used as a basis for his talks at the morning hour. Those talks were splendid, and his night sermons were very fine and uplifting. There were five accessions, and another little boy expressed a desire to become a member but became ill and did not have the opportunity. The meeting ran from Sunday through Friday night.

S. O. S. CALL.

To the Presidents and Corresponding Secretaries of All Auxiliaries.

To her request for suggestion and topics to be used on this Missionary page, the editor of this department has received not even one reply. Perhaps the call was not sufficiently clear, urgent and personal. So the appeal is made direct to you, as officers. Will you please consult with each other and then one or the other of you write and send to the editor a paragraph or more on the following subjects, or on some similar subject which you believe will be of interest and help to the readers of this page:

1. What advantage have zone meetings over larger conferences?
2. Our missionary special and why it arouses—or does not arouse—our interest?
3. Four topics we have used for round table discussion in our society.
4. The woman who has meant most to our society and why.
5. How our society made some extra missionary money.
6. The most unique missionary program we have had this year.
7. The best missionary pageant or demonstration our society has given.
8. A visit to one of our Wesley homes.
9. Personal recollections of one of our foreign missionaries.

HISTORY OF THE HOLLY BLUFF, MISS., AUXILIARY.

Early in the summer of 1921, Mrs. T. B. Cottrell, of Vicksburg, came to Holly Bluff for the purpose of organizing a Woman's Missionary Auxiliary. Mrs. W. T. Hegman was elected as our first president, and has served in that capacity each year until this year, when Mrs. T. H. Phillips was elected to fill that all-important place.

We held our meetings from house to house, on Monday of each week, one being for Bible study, another for program, a third for mission study, and a fourth for business. We have never disbanded in the summer.

In the spring of 1922, we organized our children's department. This department has flourished from the beginning under the leadership of Mrs. L. R. Nabors, Mrs. F. W. Sharbrough, and Mrs. R.. W. Stampley.

In 1924, before the zone meeting was part of our missionary program, we conceived the idea of having a joint meeting with our sister society at Louise. Accordingly, on April 23, 1924, we had our first meeting, the Louise people meeting with us in the home of Mrs. F. W. Sharbrough. There were several subsequent meetings, which have been very delightful and helpful.

The Baptists and the Methodists worked together until the year 1925, when the Baptist ladies organized a Woman's Missionary Union in their own church.

Although essentially a Missionary Society, we have earned and expended each year large sums of money for local needs and have done much toward the building and furnishing of our church. We have joined the Louise ladies in furnishing the parsonage at Louise. We have increased our pledge beyond what was asked each year. We went over the top in the Belle Bennett Memorial. We have sent boxes to the Wesley Homes each year, and have responded generously to all calls made upon us for aid.

We attained the Honor Roll three years in succession. We lost out one year on account of a misunderstanding, but were on the Honor Roll again last year.

This year we are supporting a missionary student in Brazil. We are proud, indeed, of our record; but the spiritual growth of our women is the most inspiring. We already have three Jubilee members.

A LETTER FROM THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE PRESIDENT.

To the Members of the Missionary Societies of the Mississippi Conference.

My Dear Co-Workers: I shall begin my letter to you with a few words concerning the mission school held in Junaluska, N. C., July 31-Aug. 14.

The privilege of attending this school was made possible for me by our Woman's Conference, and I want each one of you to know that I appreciate to the fullest the opportunity of study which the school afforded.

Junaluska, often spoken of as in "The Land of the Sky," is indeed one of the beauty spots of our Southland. The Mississippi Conference was well represented at this school. Forty-one were present. This attendance registers the interest of our splendid Conference in the work of the kingdom.

I was privileged to take the course under Mrs. Hume R. Steele—"Missionary and Social Projects in the Home Land." We used as our texts, "What Next in Home Missions," by Shriver, and "Women and the Kingdom," by Howell. We were indeed led into new realms of thinking as we sat at the feet of this great teacher.

As we studied together, we decided that the next thing in Home Missions was "learning to live together." It is life as it is being lived that concerns Home Missions.

In studying the motto for the Jubilee year, "Looking Backward, Thinking Forward," we were urged not to forget the past. It is a wonderful heritage, but we should visualize and accept the challenge of the future. Build upon the past and always look toward the rising sun. Build on the experience of the past, but do not live in it. Let every day be a new day.

One of the vital questions of the school was, How can the church function so that the spirit of Jesus Christ can permeate the whole life, economic, industrial, political, religious?

If the church is to so function, we must recognize the personal and group responsibility of a Christian who is a citizen. We must as individuals make application of the principles of Jesus Christ to all problems of life. We have offered the principles of Jesus as a solution to our problems; we must now apply them. When we begin to live as Jesus lived, the "Mission Fields" will disappear, for we'll demonstrate the spirit of Christ to those with whom we come in contact. All barriers of hate, injustice and greed will be done away with, and we will live together in Christian fellowship. The most significant discovery in new Home Missions is that the frontier is no longer measured in terms of geography, but in terms of human need, of isolated and under-privileged communities wherever found.

From time to time I'll talk to you of the Mission School, but before closing my lesson to you I want to say a few things regarding the work of our Conference. I want each individual and each auxiliary to know that the splendid work done during the first and second quarter of this year is appreciated.

Just a little "excerpt" from a letter from Mrs. Ina Davis Fulton, our Council treasurer: "Your reports for the first and second quarters have been received and I am delighted to notice an increase over the first and second quarters of last year. The Mississippi Conference has indeed done a wonderful piece of work in the last two years, and you and your women have been so loyal and true in spite of floods and other conditions that make financial conditions hard."

With these encouraging words let us gird ourselves anew for the great task which we have in hand, and during the third quarter make our ten per cent increase in our regular work, that is, in our dues and pledge, that we may have the obligation well in hand and set ourselves to the making of a worthy Jubilee thank offering during the fourth quarter.

I cannot express too warmly my appreciation of the splendid work that is being done by our zone leaders. By your efforts the missionary program has been brought to the door of every woman.

Let us busy ourselves enlisting Jubilee members, and organize Jubilee societies during the remainder of the year. These are to receive special recognition at our next annual meeting.

Send the account of your meetings to Mrs. Janie Drake Cooper, Church Hill, Miss. As a Conference, we are most fortunate to have her in charge of our woman's page in the Advocate.

Let our aim and purpose be, "The Whole Church Missionary."

Yours for co-operation,
MRS. L. W. ALFORD.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Miss Ella K. Hooper, of Houma, Educational Director of the Standard Training School held at MacDonnell Wesley House, writes: "If the ultimate purpose of these schools is to enrich the lives of our leaders, to give vision and inspiration for service, then I feel that we can say we had a school of very high quality and well worth the cost. We want to begin now to work on plans for the next school in order to enlarge the work and arrange for a much larger number to take advantage of the courses and the other inspirational features. We feel that we are about ready in the MacDonnell School to try having the Training School while the regular work is in session. This will give our pupils and all the teachers the benefit of the good things that are here during the Training School and perhaps be an added attraction to outside students."

Rev. Clem Baker, Conference Superintendent of the Little Rock Conference, writes: "Upon my return to the office this morning I find your letter, also one from Brother Moerner, regarding the Shreveport and Monroe Schools. I have written Brother Moerner that I will go to Shreveport, and I am ready to go to Monroe as soon as I hear what course you want me to teach there. I had a great trip out West, and came home feeling one hnndred per cent better. With love and every good wish."

Hon. T. W. Holloman, superintendent of the Sunday school at Alexandria, Conference Lay Leader, writes from Lake Junaluska: "Had a great Conference here." We are informed that Mrs. Holloman is to get her Gold Seal Diploma at this session of the Ladership School at Junaluska.

Three days in the Baton Rouge District.

Saturday night I left Alexandria en route to Amite by way of New Orleans. Between trains in New Orleans Sunday morning I got in touch with the District Secretary, Mr. J. H. Carter, who is interested in every feature of Sunday school work.

On arrival at Amite I reported at the Sunday school session and found the local leaders ready for their Training School, which was to open Sunday afternoon with a registration and classification session. The pastor, Rev. O. L. Tucker, had written me to preach for him at the 11 o'clock hour.

Many of the co-operating schools sent representatives to the afternoon session. Dean and Mrs. R. E. Smith came with the Hammond delegation, Dean having preached there in the morning. Dr. Briscoe Carter, of Ponchatoula, led a good delegation from his church. The first class period was on Monday night.

Monday morning, in company with the presiding elder, we visited points in interest of the school, including Kentwood and Mount Hermon. At Kentwood we had a pleasant visit at the parsonage with the Rev. Wm. Schuhle and family. Mount Hermon was in the midst of a revival, condncted by Rev. Harry S. Allen, of Macon, Ga. The pastor is Rev. A. A. McKnight. At the noon hour we were guests at the old country home owned by two generations of Alfords. The present Mr. A. A. Alford is the son of J. A. Alford, whose home has been noted for its hospitality to Methodist ministers. Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences are both glad to claim "Alfords."

On Tuesday morning we left Amite after enjoying hospitality in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Stewart, of Amite, for Baton Rouge, in company with Brother Cain. He had two of his pastors on the sick list, whom he wished to see en route to Baton Rouge, the pastors at Greensburg and Clinton. We reached the parsonage at Greensburg and found the faithful pastor, Rev. J. S. Rutledge, out visiting the sick. It had been thirty-two years since your writer was in Greensburg at a district conference in 1896. Rev. R. W. Tucker was the presiding elder at this conference. On Sunday morning Rev. C. W. Carter preached one of his great sermons, "The Resurrection of Jesus Christ." Brother Rutledge reported at the parsonage before we left. His doctor thinks he will be ready to take up his usual work soon. He and Mrs. Rutledge have put their three children, Glen and his two sisters, through college, Glen a graduate of the university at Baton Rouge, and his sisters of Silliman College at Clinton.

While in Greensburg the presiding elder pointed out where the faithful Sunday school superintendent, Brother W. T. Holland, lived. His many friends are rejoicing over how well he came out of his recent operation at the sanatarium, which inclnded amputation of one of his limbs above the knee.

We arrived at Clinton parsonage about 10:30 a. m., and found Brother B. D. Watson, who had a case of "summer flu," slowly convalescing. We found an interesting family of four children, two boys and two girls, ages from two to thirteen years.

From Clinton we went to Ethel, reaching there in time to enjoy noon hospitality in the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Price. The writer was pastor at Ethel during his senior year at Centenary College in 1896. Ethel, Clinton, and Jackson are planning for a Cokesbury Training School for September. We hope they will have one of the best ever held in our Conference. Rev. J. H. Bowdon and Rev. A. K. McLellan will be members of the faculty.

We reached Baton Rouge at 3 p. m., leaving immediately for Alexandria after spending three active days in Baton Rouge District.

The presiding elder, Rev. L. W. Cain, is making a great Sunday school presiding elder. We appreciate the many courtesies shown the writer during his recent visit.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Mrs. George Baker and Rev. George Baker taught classes at Love recently. Program of Work was placed and the school has faced the task of teaching religion to all the people. Programs for the observance of Childhood and Youth Week were ordered for Love and Coldwater. The Sunday School Board cannot command men and money to do all the teaching that is needed. Pastors and others will have to do the bulk of the teaching. When a man has more than he can do, then the Board should lend a helping hand and supplement the labors of the pastor. It is possible to teach as much and as vital religion in a week as it is to preach religion for the same length of time. The truth is, the teaching of religion to those who are Christians will accomplish more good than most of the preaching. The joy of teaching is as great as that of preaching; the results of both processes are needed. The power of the spirit is back of the teacher the same as the preacher.

Programs for the observance of Childhood and Youth Week have been ordered for Ackerman and Wier by Brother Northington; programs have been ordered for Coldwater and Love by Mrs. G. A. Baker. Letters are being mailed asking the men to order these programs. As our supply is limited we can send only about a half dozen to each school. There is a program for the small school and one for the larger school, both are excellent. It will require but little work to prepare these programs for effective service. We can send a large poster for advertising the services when it is requested. Order without delay. You know it takes time and money to write and write. If you desire to see your work move forward use every means offered. The observance of Childhood and Youth Week will put life into every phase of church work. The men who have tried it are enthusiastic over the results.

Listen, men. Sunday School Day programs have been sent to 200 schools. We have heard from 119. The workers have done the work and they trust the superintendents and others to back us up in this work of training teachers and others to help do the work. I wish I could find out why some of our people object to the observance of this one day for the benefit of the local schools and all the schools of the Conference.

Checking up time is at hand. We mean to visit all schools possible to check up to see what progress has been made during the past twelve months. The instruction and training given in the Sunday school stimulates and aids every phase of the work of the kingdom. The more and the better the teaching, the higher type of Christian living. What we read determines what we think, what we think determinees what we do, and what we do determine character. We have the destiny of souls in our keeing. What are we doing to determine the destiny of all those we are not teaching?

Please order your literature early in September so the teachers can prepare for the new lessons. Order a set of the Cokesbury Record books so your school can keep accurate records. The secretary-treasurer book is the best ever been made.

CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH WEEK.

Pertinent Questions Answered.

By Mary Skinner.

What is the purpose of Childhood Week?

The chief business of boys and girls is growing; the chief concern of Christian adults is that boys and girls may grow reiigiously. The purpose of this special week observed annually in October may be stated as follows:

a. To challenge all adults to make the religious development of boys and girls their chief concern.

b. To develop a consciousness of needed changes in conditions hindering Christian living for boys and girls.

c. To improve conditions, and increase the facilities that will promote their Christian development.

d. To set in motion definite plans for self-improvement, and for more adequate provisions and programs for boys and giris everywhere.

"For their sakes we dedicate ourseives."

2. Why is October selected as the time for observing this week?

With October the "New Year" in the Sunday school begins. The teacher who will have a new group of pupils, the superintendent who has new teachers and pupils, the Sunday school superintendent who has visions of making this year better than all former ones, and parents who realize that cooperation between home and church means better understanding of their mutual task find that the observance of this week at this time is the best introduction to the work of a new year.

3. Who in the local church is responsible for the observance of Childhood and Youth Week?

The selection of a particular week in October and the appointment of needed committees is the duty of the Workers' Council. Any teacher who recognizes the value should feel the responsibility of bringing it to the attention of the superintendent in order that necessary plans may be made in September.

4. What is the difference between Childhood and Youth Week and Children's Week?

There is no difference in purpose and plan. The name has been changed to inciude consideration of aii children regardless of age.

5. Do parents have a part?

Both parents and teachers will plan for self-improvement and for better mutuai understanding in order that the home and church school may provide an integrated program of religious education.

6. Do children have a part?

No. The week is observed entirely by adults. Mothers do not observe "Mothers' Day;" neither do boys and girls observe Childhood and Youth Week.

7. What is supposed to occur during the week?

a. A worship service for adults on Sunday morning.

b. Home visiting by all teachers through the Intermediate Department.

c. A public meeting for adults (may be at one of the church service hours if the pastor desires.)

d. Recommendations for improving conditions, or for some plan looking to bettering opportunities for the religious education of boys and girls in the home, church, and community presented and adopted by the adults and plans made for achieving them. This is called the "Forward Steps."

8. What are some Forward Steps?

a. Paint, repair or make more attractive the building, or any part of it.

b. Secure funds for needed equipment, workers' library, etc.

c. Organize training classes.

d. Parent-Teacher Councils or study groups.

e. Concentrate on improving worship services.

f. Provide for week-day activities.

9. What leaflets and program helps are available?

a. Leaflet: "Purposes and Plans."

b. Poster.

c. Program pamphlet for the large school.

d. Program pamphlet for the small school.

(All of these are available without cost from the Conference Sunday school office, 401 Millsaps Building, Jackson, Miss.)

10. How generally is this week observed in our church?

The number reporting in 1927 was 319 with a conservative estimate of at least 300 more not reporting.

The mere announcement that a local church is observing Childhood and Youth Week lifts to the fore its most important task. No occasion is more easily observed. It will initiate or promote a spirit of co-operation and self-improvement and set the pace for a year's work on a higher plane. Permanent but unmeasurable results will be secured in terms of religious growth for adults as well as for boys and girls.

FROM BROTHER MOHLER.

Dear Dr. Carley: Please print enclosed letter from one of the Sunday school officials of the Shady Grove school, Ethel charge. This is one of many letters received at this office expressing appreciation and approval of our Cokesbury work. Since our last Conference we have gone into about seventy communities, enrolling more than fifteen hundred adults and about 900 credits. The response and co-operation given us by local workers in behalf of our Cokesbury schools have been marvelous.

Your brother,

E. G. MOHLER,
Extension Secretary.

Letter.

"Dear Brother Mohler: We were very fortunate in having Miss Maudie Lee Caraway with us last week as teacher of our first Cokesbury School. Many of our people were quite interested in this work, there being forty on roll and twenty-five receiving credit.

"Our Sunday school has met once since the training school, and all present could readily see evidence of new life and enthusiasm. At this meeting some of the things we were told to do were done, viz., meeting on time, electing assistant officers and teaching and planning for our first Workers' Council. We are going to keep on working and make our school bigger and better for the Lord. We thank Miss Caraway for coming and the Sunday School Board for sending her to us."

DISTRICT LEAGUE INSTITUTE H5LD AT CARROLLTON, MISS.

Dear Advocate: We take this method of letting others know of the very interesting and helpful District League Institute held here at Carrollton on Aug. 29.

Miss Margaret Bryan, a local Leaguer, conducted the devotionals, using as her Scripture lesson I. Cor, 13, "Love That Steadies the Alm."

Mr. Stanley Armstrong, of Memphis, noted gospel singer, led the singing and favored us with a solo.

Miss Katherine Bryson, our Field Secretary, met with us and gave us two very inspiring talks on "Hitting Center with the First Department" and "The Standard Epworth League."

Other helpful talks were, "Hitting Center With the Second Department," by Mrs. Roy Evans, of Greenwood; "Place of Junior Epworth Society in the Church," by Mrs. J. T. McCafferty, of Rulevilie; "Hitting Center with Fourth Depatment," by Mr. Floyd Weeks, of Indianola; "Hitting Center With Business and Council Meetings," Mrs. Ashmore, of Carrollton.

The Carrollton Leaguers served a very bountiful lunch.

The Institute proved so helpful that we made it one of the aims in our policy to meet quarterly if possible.

Best wishes to all interested in League work, I am,

Sincerely yours,

MRS. S. E. ASHMORE,
District Secretary.

MINDEN DISTRICT UNION LEAGUE MEETING.

On Sunday afternoon, Aug. 26, the Ever Ready Union of Minden District met in the church at Minden. A most interesting devotional program was rendered, Miss Eris Monzingo leading.

The meeting was then turned over to Mr. Paul Cassels, Union president, for business: Roll was called, five Leagues being represented, as follows: Sibley, 6; Bethel, 10; Haughton, 11; Springhill, 5; Plain Dealing, 1; Minden, 26. Two committees were appointed—electoral and name committees, it being thought best to rename the union, and the time having come for election of new officers. The name was changed to the J. O. Y. Union, standing for "Jesus first, others second, and yourself last." Officers elected are: President, Miss Eris Monzingo, Springhill; vice president, G. G. Nelson, Plain Dealing; secretary Mr. A. B. Farris, Springhill; treasurer, Mrs. Hoyt, Haughton.

Offering was taken, after which the meeting adjourned to meet again Sept. 16 at Bethel church. All present then retired to the Sunday school room, where cooling refreshments of sandwiches and lemonade were served by Mrs. Drew Dial and helpers.

We were pleased with the success of this meeting due to the fact that it was the first meeting of the union since the oratorical contest in May. Since that time one chapter which had been disbanded has reorganized, and another prospect is in view. Great things are being planned for the J. O. Y. Union, and our prayer is that we may do much, and do all for the glory of God.

MARY SEARLES,
District Secretary.

TO THE LEAGUERS OF LOUISIANA.

Dear Leaguers: I wonder if I might not steal a little of our Field Secretary's thunder by writing a letter to you through the columns of the Advocate?

First of all, I want to express my appreciation for the wonderful trip to the Junaluska Assembly which you so generously voted to give me at our June assembly. I would really have enjoyed it to the very fullest extent if I could have tucked all of you in my satchels and pockets and then have released you to scramble out over those beautiful mountains and drink in the beauty and inspiration of Lake Junaluska.

The assembly this year was the "Finest Ever," so the officials say, The classes in methods and the leadership courses were taught by outstanding leaders and experts and were highly instructive and beneficial, while the inspirational talks by Dr. S. D. Gordon, of "Quiet Hour" fame, and Miss Bertha Conde, on "Spiritual Adventuring," were worth the whole trip over and over again. Dr. Guthrie, of New York, spoke at the platform hour, bringing each evening a vivid, compelling message, given with a sympathy and understanding for young people that only Dr. Guthrie could have. Vespers, different from ours, out under the sky on the edge of the lake, with the purple mountains in the distance standing like sentinels over all, had an appeal that drew you and gripped and held. At night under the stars, and in the shadow of the great illuminated cross prayer groups were formed, with Brother B. Frank Pim guiding and leading with the devotional talks he so aptly applied to the prayer groups gathered about him.

That is not all: short hikes, long hikes, games, parties, boating—almost every kind of recreation—made Junaluska a playground; yet with that ever atmosphere of Christian fellowship, inspiration and helpfulness that made it a mountain top of Spiritual Experience.

There were five of us who made up the delegation from Louisiana: Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Grambiin and children; Anna Pharr Turner, of Shreveport, Hi League Superintendent of the Conference; Rosa Langford, of Monroe, and myself. I am sure that they are all ready to say with me that Junaluska is hard to beat.

But for fear that the editor or Elizabeth may think that this is too long to be called just "thanks," I am going to say only this one thing more: Don't forget to write me about your recreational problem. You know I am ever ready to help and serve you.

Leaguerly yours,

VIOLET W. JACKSON,
Conference Fourth Department Superintendent.

REPORT OF CHAS. ASSAF, FOR THE MONTHS OF MAY, JUNE, AND JULY, 1928.

May 2 to 15: With Rev. W. C. M. Baggett, Foxworth, Miss. During the meeting almost every night we had altar prayer: several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration; 8 people joined the church by profession of faith and Baptism; 2 infants baptized.

May 19 to 28: With Rev. Murray Cox, Kreole, Miss. We had a good revival in the Pecan school house. During the meeting 51 people joined the Orange Grove church by profession of faith and baptism; 12 infants baptized; a Sunday school to organize; several people at the altar for prayer during the services.

June 2 to 11: With Rev W. W. Moore, Meridian, Miss. We had a good meeting at Meridian. During the services several people at the altar for prayer; 13 people joined the church by profession of faith and baptism; 1 infant baptized.

June 16 to 29: With Rev. W. W. Murray, Coalville charge. We had two meetings, at Fayard Chapel and White Plain church; 11 joined the church by profession of faith and baptism; 3 infants baptized by Brother Lewis Fayard; two Sunday schools to organize in both churches; several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration.

July 1. With Rev. E. D. Hutchinson, Beauregard, Miss. We had two good services on the charge; several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration.

July 3. While in the city, I met a man on the street; after we talked with him he gave me his and his wife's church membership for the Galloway Memorial church. I gave it to Rev. H. S. Spragins, P. C., who went with me to see them. We found the wife at home and she decided to have the children baptized.

July 8: With Rev. E. W. Wedgeworth, Americus charge, Lucedale, Miss. We had two good services, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. During the services we had altar prayer—several people at the altar for prayer and reconsecration.

July 21 to 30: With Brother Wedgeworth in a meeting at Salem church. We had a good meeting. During the services 6 people joined the church by profession of faith and baptism; 6 infants baptized, and several people at the altar for prayer.

In every meeting most of the people came to the altar for the prayer and reconsecration. Most of them also promised to have prayer in their homes.

Several visits were made in every meeting to the people's homes, especially those who never attend church. After I talked with them, most of them came to the church and attended the services and most of them joined the church. We made several visits to the Syrians and all the other foreigners, and the Lord has been blessing me in His work.

Services, 79; joined the church, 91; infants baptized 24; Sunday schools to be organized, 3.

Union College, Uruguayana, Brazil, reports more students for the present year, which began in February, than ever before in the history of the school. New rooms for the director and his family and a new kitchen, all of which have been badly needed, are now going up. In a recent series of evangelistic services in Union College, every student in the advanced group publicly expressed a desire to follow Christ.

There's peace in the household guarded by Castoria. Peaceful sleep for Baby. Uninterrupted rest for Mother. For a few drops of pure Castoria will quiet any fretful infant. Or put the little one back to sleep when there's an upset during the night.

Parents, don't try to do without good old Castoria! It isn't fair to the baby, and it makes things hard for you. You can't give Baby medicine meant for grown-ups—or shouldn't! Castoria is the solution. It is always safe. It always does the work. And although it acts as swiftly as an opiate or a narcotic, it contains neither. Castoria is purely vegetable. Give it whenever there's constipation, colic, diarrhea.

No less than five million modern mothers have come to depend on Castoria, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Get yours today; don't wait for some night when it's needed, and the drugstore is closed!

Run-Down, Nervous, Appetite Gone, Lady Shows Great Improvement After Using Cardui.

Waterloo, S. C.—"I took Cardui at intervals for three years, and have been in good health since last fall," says Mrs. Noble J. Hayes, who lives near here. "My improvement after taking a course of this medicine was really remarkable.

"I am much stronger and can accomplish so much more work now. My weight increased twenty pounds, and my color is fresh and good.

"For a long time I had been feeling poorly. Some days I dragged around the house and had not enough energy to do my housework. I worried a lot about myself. I did not seem like myself, and my nerves were all on edge. I did not sleep well, and my appetite left me.

"I found Cardui to be an excellent tonic. After I had taken it a few weeks, I began to pick up and to gain in weight and strength.

"Now I am in fine health. I have recommended Cardui to many of my friends, and shall continue to do so."

For over 50 years, Cardui has been used with success and recommended by thousands of women for weakness and similar ailments. Try it for your troubles! At all drug stores. NC-192

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

For Wounds, Sprains, Cuts, Sunburn, or Scratches, and after Shaving.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE DIMMING OF IDEALS.

True greatness is conditioned by the ideas and ideals that govern life. No man can be great without great ideas and high ideals. The real test of a man is not what he does, but what he thinks and the goal to which he aspires. Great deeds spring from great ideas and high ideals. The life that is inspired by the one will eventuate in the other. The only sure way to produce great lives is to implant in them great ideas and high ideals.

One of the most pathetic figures in the world is that of the man who began life with high ideals but in whose heart these ideals have grown dim. It is a tragedy that, in the midst of the cares and hardships and temptations of life, the upward pull of the high and holy should grow weak under the weight of the mean and low. The fogs of opportunism and expediency dim the light of principle; and the life that was launched on the great ocean, headed toward a wonderful port, becomes content to beat along the shore, carrying the small traffic of insignificant commerce. All is well as long as our ideals are right.

THE GOVERNMENT IN THE LIQUOR BUSINESS.

The most astounding feature of the suggestion of the Democratic nominee for the presidency of the United States for the control of the liquor traffic is that the States should go into the liquor business themselves, manufacturing and selling alcoholic drinks to the consumer. This is a strange doctrine to put forth at this stage of the fight against the liquor evil and in this day of advancing civilization. Every citizen is a partner in the State's business. Millions of citizens of the United States have fought the liquor traffic as the enemy of all that is good when the traffic was wholly in the hands of private individuals. The suggestion now that the State itself should go into the business is an affront to the moral sense of these millions of citizens who have brought about the national prohibition law. The Volstead Act may be modified some of these days and the Eighteenth Amendment may be repealed—but the Government is not going into the liquor business on its own account.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

The Annual Conferences this year will vote on a measure adopted by the General Conference at Memphis, but referred to the Annual Conferences on constitutional grounds. The measure provides that a delegate elected to the General Conference must be a member at the time of holding the General Conference of the Annual Conference that elected him. To us, this seems so reasonable a thing that we cannot conceive of its not receiving the necessary majority to enact it into law. The principal argument urged against it is that it will tend to destroy our connectionalism. To us, this argument has very little force. In the history of the church there have been only a very few cases where the delegates to the General Conference were not members at the same time of the Annual Conference by which they were elected. With the exception of these few cases, custom now makes usual what the proposed law would make necessary always—and we do not see that our connectionalism has suffered. It is also said that the bishops, under this law, could control the clerical membership of a General Conference by transferring them to other Conferences after their election, thus causing them automatically to lose their General Conference membership. The proposed measure provides that in case a delegate-elect to the General Conference should be transferred, thus losing his membership in the General Conference, the vacancy shall be filled by the alternate next in the order of election. Thus a Conference would always be represented by a delegate elected by itself. It seems to us that the measure is a meritorious one, and we doubt not but that it will be adopted.

THE APPEAL OF THE ORPHANS.

No matter what our reaction to other appeals may be, we can never be unsympathetic or hard-hearted when the cry of the orphans rings in our ears. Our two orphanages in Louisiana and Mississippi are caring for approximately four hundred dependent children. These children, as wards of the church, must be fed, clothed, and educated. It takes a good deal of money to do these necessary things—things that are the very minimum of our obligation to these helpless deserving ones. If the church were poverty-stricken, we might wonder if it had properly assumed such an obligation; but the church is not poor, and these children must be cared for. Therefore, we should find it one of our chief joys to furnish the resources for this beautiful service of helpfulness. "Harvest Day" has been appointed as the time when the needs of our orphans shall be presented to all our people and an opportunity given them to respond to this most worthy and appealing cause. We have no doubt as to the response—we are calling attention to it now, in the midst of many things to be done, lest this important one be overlooked. The needs are great, and "Harvest Day" this year should be marked by a most liberal offering for the support of these little ones.

NO BLAME FOR THE CHURCH.

The whole Christian world will sympathize with the Southern Baptist Church in the distress brought upon it by what appears to be the dishonesty of a trusted official—the absconding of the treasurer of the Mission Board with a large amount of money. We have not the slightest doubt but that some cynical opponents of the church will roll this incident as a sweet morsel under their tongues and blatantly proclaim against the hypocrisy of church members. Sensible people know very well, of course, that it is no reflection upon the church as an institution when one of its members goes wrong. Such a lapse is always in spite of the teaching and influence of the church and not because of it. As a rule, though, sensible people do not find fault with the church.

"IN THE MIDST OF LIFE—"

The thoughtful man will never forget one thing—in the midst of life we are in death. Nobody has any kind of guarantee that he will draw one breath more than the one that sustains him for the moment. Life is uncertain—death is sure. This does not mean, however, that a man should be always perplexed, confused, moody, morose, unhappy. It does not mean that he should be sorrowful, or fearful, or rebellious. It means just one thing—that he should always be ready to hear the great summons and face the bar of judgment. Death is not a terror when preparation has been made for it. It is really nothing more than an incident in the course of a life. It is an incident of tremendous significance in that it marks the crossing of the line of destiny; but it is only an incident. The man who has made peace with God and always stays at peace with Him is always ready for death no matter when it comes. Blessed is the man that gets ready and stays ready!

THE PROHIBITION ISSUE.

In spite of repeated declarations of politicians to the contrary, it is now so plain that prohibition is an issue in the pending presidential campaign that the wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot mistake it. Trained political observers all over the nation are not hesitating to say that it is the paramount issue. It is impossible, therefore, for the voter to make up his mind as to how he will cast his ballot without taking this great moral issue into account. Let no man be deceived—a vote in this election is a vote for or against prohibition, whether it is so intended or not. Other issues may determine a man's vote—and many good men will be controlled in their voting by other issues—but there is no escaping the "wet" or "dry" question.

HOW TO GET WHAT YOU WANT.

The wealthy Western Senator, when asked to state the rules of success in life, replied that they are few and simple: "When you want a thing, go after it—and bring it back with you." Easier said than done, perhaps. But the Master, thinking of the wants of men, gave a rule that is practicable and invariably successful when followed. Speaking to his eager listeners, he said: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The senator was speaking of money—but the Master was speaking of manhood—and manhood is worth more than money.

PROHIBITION IN ITS FIRST AND WORST DECADE.

By Rev. Chas. C. Jarrell, D.D.

When it became clear to the American people that the saloon was rapidly increasing the liquor habit, and that it was doing this by making new recruits from the younger generation, the saloon was doomed. The Eighteenth Amendment was the effort of the nation to destroy the power of the saloon to ensnare new recruits.

War-Time Prohibition Blocked by Brewers.

Douhtless some think National Prohibition was a political accident left over from war-time prohibition. The truth is, war-time prohibition was blocked by the United States Brewers' Association and other liquor organizations, so that it did not take effect until July 1, 1919. (National Prohibition became a part of the Constitution Jan. 17, 1919, to become effective a year later). The liquor forces, true to form, did their best to prevent war-time prohibition, although beer was destroying potentially 11,000,000 loaves of bread a day, so needed for war-time efficiency. While the Lever bill (with war-time prohibition attached) was pending, President C. W. Feigenspan, of the United States Brewers' Association, "loaned" (without interest) to a well known editor the money to buy the Washington Times. (See Senate Investigation 4, pp. 9-10, quoted by Prof. Fisher: Prohibition at its Worst. Page 9.)

Prohibition Not an Accident.

National prohibition was not a political accident. By 1914, nine States had passed prohibition laws. In the next four years twenty-three more States abolished the liquor traffic within their borders. After the Eighteenth Amendment was submitted for ratification, forty-five States in rapid succession ratified the Amendment. When New Jersey ratified, only Connecticut and Rhode Island remained silent. No other of the nineteen amendments has received the affirmative votes of so many States as has the prohibition amendment. If after all this, certain parts of the nation were not fully prepared for the change, the best and the only way to prepare them now is by enforcing the law. How has prohibition worked in this first and worst decade?

What Are the Facts.

Has it suppressed the saloon?

Has it lessened the use of alcohol?

Has it caused new recruits among drinkers to fall off?

Has it benefited the nation hygienically, economically, and socially?

I believe I can show that it has done all these things. But for the efforts of certain States and cities to "nullify" the law, the results would have been vastly more beneficial. The present conditions of imperfect enforcement of the law are deplorable and in some places intolerable. We do not take issue with the Moderation League in deploring such a situation; especially in New York, where the State repealed its enforcement law, which was as far as the State could go toward "nullifying" the Federal Constitution. We do take issue with the whole family of so-called Leagues when they say the law has utterly failed or that it cannot be enforced.

False Claim: More Drunkenness.

These Leagues and their newspapers have taught multitudes to believe that we have more drunkenness now than before prohibition. What are the facts?

In New York.

In New York City, the wettest city in the nation, so-called, convictions for drunkenness for the first offense dropped from twenty-four per 10,000 population in 1914 to six per 10,000 population for the year 1925. That is, prohibition has in a marked degree limited the power of the saloon to make new recruits. These facts were secured by Prof. Fisher from Finger-print Bureau, City Magistrates' Court, New York City. This is the great fact to be remembered about prohibition: recruiting for the army of habitual drunkards is falling off.

New York "Hog-tied" by Tammany.

And this, in New York City, where the Old Guard of the liquor traffic entrenched in Tammany succeeded in "hog-tying" enforcement by the repeal of the Mullen-Gage State Enforcement Law. Tell it to the world in letters tall as a town that even in New York City prohibition has succeeded in weakening, if not breaking, the chain of tradition by which the alcohol habit has for ages bound the generations together in the tragic drag toward hell. First offenders dwindled to less than a third of pre-prohibition days and old offenders diminished by more than one-half. Thus the main contention of wets collapses at the start. We are winning the war against alcohol, and the wets know it. As bootleg liquors have a higher degree of toxicity than the old "good liquor" (by 10:1), it would appear that a larger fraction of drinkers get drunk and therefore that there has been a still greater reduction in drinking.

Mr. Shirk's Figures.

The Moderation League allowed their director, Mr. Stanley Shirk, to lay diagrams and statistics before the Senate sub-committee (April 5-24, 1926) which crumble at the first touch of a trained statistician like Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale. Mr. Shirk's diagrams are misleading, and the sources of his figures unreliable. But even with the figures furnished by Mr. Shirk, Prof. Fisher analyzes his tables and shows that in these 349 cities studied, the arrests for drunkenness are much below the old level; that drunkenness is less than half what it was.

Buckner's Wild Guess.

Mr. Emory Buckner, United States District Attorney in New York, told the Senate sub-committee that illegal diversion of industrial alcohol reached 60,000,000 gallons a year. Dr. J. M. Doren, Chief Chemist, Bureau of Internal Revenue, proved how wild was the Buckner guess; and presented facts to show that the present illegal diversion of industrial alcohol was not over 14,000,000 gallons a year, or from eight to nine per cent of pre-war consumption of beverage alcohol. Dr. Fisher thinks it is less than five per cent of pre-war days.

The Wet Nutmeg.

Connecticut was wet; it did not ratify the Amendment; and it never sends a dry Congressman to Washington; yet Dr. Fisher shows from figures of seven cities reported by police departments that probably three-fourths of pre-war drunkenness has disappeared in Connecticut.

Pennsylvania State Improved.

A survey of six Pennsylvania cities by Prof. Fisher shows that outside Philadelphia, drunkenness is probably less than half what it was in pre-prohibition days and that it has decreased considerably even in Philadelphia.

Bay State Gets Better.

Prof. Fisher had official figures from 357 cities in Massachusetts from which to reach his conclusion that two-thirds of the drunkenness of that State has probably disappeared. The figures from twenty-nine cities in New York State were studied, with a population of over seven million. Dr. Fisher shows that drunkenness has been cut to probably less than a third of what it was; while in New York City it would seem that four-fifths of drunkenness has been eliminated.

Drinking in the Colleges.

We have been told that drinking has increased among college students since the Volstead Law passed. Again I ask: What are the facts? There is not space to quote the statements that lie before me. Frederick S. Jones, former Dean of Yale College; E. Fay Campbell, Yale Y. M. C. A. Secretary; Chas. C. Clark, Professor of Romance Languages, Yale; R. P. Angier, Dean of Freshmen, Yale; James R. Angell, President of Yale, all state that drinking at Yale decidedly decreased after prohibition. Two hundred college and university heads in a Literary Digest questionnaire agreed in disclosing the beneficial effects of prohibition on student bodies and on youth in general. The conclusion is: There are fewer drinkers than there were in the days when there were only one-third the present number of students.

Juvenile Delinquency.

Delinquency is another phase of the youth problem. Anuual reports of the Children's Court of New York City show that juvenile delinquency in New York City has been cut in half since Prohibition. This much is sun-clear: New recruits in the army of alcoholics have rapidly decreased since prohibition. We are winning the war against alcohol, and the wets know it. They fear nothing so much as prohibition. The saloon has been suppressed; a chasm has been cut across the drink tradition; the raw recruits of King Alcohol's army are being reduced in number. What next?

Does the Nation Want Liquor Back?

The charge is being made that a minority put the Eighteenth Amendment in the Constitution; and that the sentiment of the country is overwhelmingly against prohibition. What are the facts? Those who oppose prohibition with the immoderation of the Moderation League exaggerate the extent of non-enforcement and also the amount of sentiment against the law. Any one who will make his curve cover two centuries will easily see tremendous growth of prohibition sentiment. It is a far cry from 1678 when fifty-one and a half gallons of wine were consumed at the funeral of a minister's wife in New England, and from 1664 when the Virginia Assembly sought to curb clerical drunkenness, a far cry, I say, to the present military aridity of the Protestant clergy of America. One hundred years ago a town in Massachusetts with 1,800 population consumed in a year 10,000 gallons of rum. We are surely winning the war against alcohol, and the wets know it. When the successor to Senator James M. Reed takes his seat in the Senate he will be a dry, whichever party wins in Missouri. Again and again at the polls the wets have found out how dry this country is. Taking prohibition as we have it in its first and worst decades, what have been its effects on the nation?

Hygienic Effects of Prohibition.

Let us consider first its hygienic effect. Figures are now available for the first six years of national prohibition; and they show reduced disease and death from alcoholism. The figures of the British Central Board of Control of the Liquor Traffic (1913-17), Lord D'Abernon, President, afford convincing data to the same effect. Figures taken from United States Census Bureau, from Hospital Statistics, from Records of Board of Health, New York City, have convinced Prof. Fisher that prohibition has largely reduced deaths from alcoholism, alcoholic insanity, and deaths from cirrhosis of the liver in New York City, New York State and Connecticut and other wet States, in spite of imperfect enforcement of the law. Dr. Haven Emerson, Columbia University, told the Senate committee, 1926: "My profession is the study of the causes of preventable diseases and how they may be prevented, and this is the first practical evidence we have ever had of the astounding effect of making alcohol relatively inaccessible, on the mortality of the country." This is what was to be expected. E. L. Fisk, M.D., publishes in his book on "Alcohol, its Relation to Human Efficiency and Longevity" (36, p. 33), the mortality figures of forty-three life insurance companies in occupations where alcohol figured as a hazard, with this comment: "These figures indicate that saloon-keepers have a death-rate higher than that of underground mine foremen; that brewery foremen, maisters, and the like have a death rate higher than electric linemen, glassworkers, city firemen (laddermen, pipemen, hosemen), metal grinders or hot-iron workers, although there is nothing in the brewery or saloon business per se that is at all hazardous or unhealthful, aside from the possible temptation to drink and its collateral hazards." The mortality among moderate drinkers is high, and partly for the reason that they do not remain moderate; they tend to become immoderate drinkers. The verdict against alcohol is in. It was reached by scientific processes; and this is a scientific age. Shirk, Maguire, Pearl, "et al," will not be able to reverse such a judgment, nor resist the conclusions of the laboratory nor the analyses of the trained statisticians.

Alcohol a Poison.

The reason back of all this is apparent: alcohol is a poison. Liver, kidney, brain, and other organs of moderate drinkers show degenerative tissue-changes due to the (so-called) moderate use of alcohol. These facts are attested by such (real) scientists as Bastedo, Muller, Laitines, Rubin, Fillinger, Weinberg, Brooks, Crile, Cabot, Denning, Hindelang, Gruenbaum, Alexandross, Benidict, Emerson, Neumann, Netchnikoff, Dodge, Aschaffenburg, and Kelly. A host of German university professors bear witness to the injury to the German people from the alcohol poisoning due to beer drinking.

Rigid laboratory experiments demonstrate that the amount of alcohol consumed in the so-called moderate drinking of beer or wine lowers vitality and decreases efficiency.

The man who drinks one glass of beer is one-glass-of-beer drunk. Prohibition is in the interest of public health. It represents the greatest hygienic experiment in history,and is one of the most successful. We are winning the war against alcohol, and the wets know it.

Economic Effects of Prohibition.

Has prohibition benefited the nation economically? Mr. Hoover says it has. Professor Carver, of Harvard, says it has; Henry Ford says it has; Mr. Carrodini says it has; Professor Farnum, of Yale, says it has; the late Warren S. Stone, Grand Chief, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, says it has, and adds: "There are some people who labor under the delusion that they are going to have the prohibition law modified or abolished. Some one should wake them from their Rip Van Winkle sleep. I wish they could go with me for thirty days as I travel over this broad land and see the homes being erected everywhere, note the accounts being opened in savings banks, see the families out together in parks, recreation, and community centers, children well fed, with shoes to wear, and warm clothing, going to school; see prosperity, happiness, and sunshine where formerly there were only squalor and misery. All this is a result of prohibition. We are not going back to the old condition of things with their misery, want, and poverty—never again. Prohibition has come to stay."

General Evangeline Booth published in the Saturday Evening Post, several months ago, the story of the sensational improvement since prohibition in conditions among the poorer classes of New York City.

Professor Fisher shows that "real" wages ran on a level from 1892 to 1919. Then "real" wages were lifted (1920) to a new level 28 per cent above the old level, and stayed there. Professor Fisher estimates that the economic gain from prohibition yearly is not less than $6,000,000,000, not counting any savings in cost of jails, almshouses, asylums, etc., or any savings from reducing sick and death rates.

Prohibition has been of economic benefit because it has replaced a parasitic industry with constructive industries. Prohibition is the greatest economic experiment in history and one of the most successful.

The Cry of Personal Liberty.

Why cry "Personal Liberty!" in the face of all these advantages? The personal liberty of the husband to drink takes away the personal liberty of his wife to eat and of the children to be well born, to wear shoes, and to go to school.

"License they mean, when Liberty they cry." The personal liberty argument in all its phases and with all its so-called "Leagues" means little more than a clumsy camouflage for the license of liquor dealers and brewers to restore to public tolerance their outlawed parasitic traffic.

Summary.

What then is the situation as we close the first decade of National Prohibition?

1. Prohibition has suppressed the open saloon, reduced drinking and the diseases and death due to drinking, and has slowed down the march of new recruits into the drink-mill. This has been true even in the so-called wet States, where sentiment was least favorable to the law.

2. Prohibition has resulted in a large net gain to the nation: morally, hygienically, economically, and socially.

3. Conditions of enforcement must be improved.

4. The so-called modification schemes are impossible because, first, they are undesirable, as they involve some form of the saloon. This saloon (under some new name, of course), if not under government control, would quickly revert to the old open saloon. If under government control, it would vastly increase the sales and consumption of liquor, as in Canada to-day. Modification schemes are impossible, second, because they all involve violation of the Eighteenth Amendment, or they involve some form of repealing the Eighteenth Amendment, which is out of the question, as thirteen States could block such a move.

5. All that the wets can hope to accomplish is increasing laxity of enforcement, leading to nullification; and this is debauchery of the Constitution. If any State should bring upon itself intolerable conditions because of "nullification" of the Constitution, shall the Nation therefore be robbed of the beneficial effect of this vast beneficial advance?

6. The only way out is forward, that is, fuller enforcement, accompanied by education.

The claim that you cannot make people moral by legislation is a half-truth; the statement that you cannot make people sober by legislation is more than a half-lie.

Enforcement will cure disrespect for law, and this law honestly enforced will so advance the nation in all its life as to lead the Old World to follow. American prohibition will then go down in history as ushering in a new era in the welfare of the human race, in which accomplishment this nation will take just pride.

The South in History.

In the modern advance toward Prohibition in America, the South led the way forward. In the crisis now upon us, God grant she may not lead the way backward.

God give us men,
Tall men, sun-crowned;
Who live above the fog,
In public duty and in private thinking.

THE PULPIT AND POLITICS.

By Rev. James H. Felts.

Whatever cheapens the ministry de-vitalizes the church. Jesus drove the money changers from the temple. Any intelligent minister may properly deliver his soul on the sacredness of the ballot or the fundamental principles of Christian citizenship. In so doing he will need to study men as well as measures, and be much in prayer.

No pastor should be penalized because of his calling. Nor should any church have her sacred altars converted into political shambles. We lost heavily during the world war. In the name of patriotism we allowed our churches to become in many instances, centers of propaganda voiced in language offensive by men whose coarseness was excused because of what they represented.

The church furnishes a place of prayer and devotion for all kinds and classes of people. They come with assurance of sympathy and help. When they find strange fires burning on the altar and listen to other than the language of Zion, the spirit of worship is lost. There are no substitutes for the gospel of Jesus. Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde have no rightful place in our pulpits. In proportion as the preacher projects himself and his pulpit into the politics of this country, spiritual values are lost.

To say that a sane and saved man whose intelligence is equal to that of the preacher, often even more marked, needs the preacher to tell him how and for whom to vote, is a sad confession of the inadequacy of the gospel. If our Christ is not sufficient, we may rest assured that purely political activity on our part will not greatly help the situation.

In New Testament days was heard "a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in daily ministrations." A conference was held. Result? "Wherefore, brethren, look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom, whom we may appoint over this business." * * * It is not reason that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables. But we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and the ministry of the word." This met the approval of all. Stephen, Philip, and others were chosen. If our ministry must figure in political party broils and contentions, by all means let us do it through selected laymen of known piety and wisdom.

We pastors have been complaining loud and long that we are burdened by purely business details, collections, drives, and the like. Many of us have been pleading for a return to our high calling. Yet because there has been injected into a quadrennial political campaign a prohibition issue in a platform of many issues, we propose to carry the fight into our pulpits regardless of the effect on our work as ministers. And some of us are saying, "All problems are religious problems," and are pleading for "corporate and collective salvation."

If these two premises are true, we should preach only a social gospel, and enter every local fight, dabble in every question betokening differences of opinion among men, strip ourselves of all claims to a special call to the ministry, and make our churches centers from which there radiates a pot pourri of influences, the least of which would be spiritual.

The late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, as charming a personality and as forceful a speaker as ever shivered a lance with an enemy or raised a battle cry against sin, fought the Hon. Jefferson Davis to a standstill, campaigned in Mississippi in a moral battle of giants successfully, and led the prohibition hosts to a signal victory. Who so bold as to accuse him of taking his pulpit into politics? It was a fight independent of party lines. It was in harmony with the pronouncements of his church. He himself said, "Ministers have no part or place in party politics." "The Church, as such, can never ally herself with any political party, though every plank in its platform be in accord with the Sermon on the Mount." Nor has the church he loved and gave his life to, ever entered the arena of party politics even by indirection.

This much is certain: It is one thing to stand for prohibition, fight for prohibition, vote for men for office who are in sympathy with prohibitory enactments and the enforcement of law; it is quite another to enter politicai conventions, make political fights, challenge the leaders of political parties to debate issues on the "stump," become inmeshed in all the bickering and strife, charges and countercharges of political warfare. Right now we have the unhappy spectacle of a divided church, and sharply divided locai charges. We even have pastors and official boards arrayed against each other, and flocks practically without a shepherd.

To my way of thinking, such procedure hurts the very cause we desire to help. If that party leader for whom thousands of Southern men and women will refuse to vote should be elected, he will owe a vote of thanks to some of his enemies.

Ours is a called and sent ministry. We believe we are called of God to preach his gospel. We are ordained and sent out to "devote ourselves wholly to God and his work." We have charge of churches wholly dedicated "to his service, for the reading and expounding of his holy word, the adminstration of his ordinaces, and for ali other acts of religious worship." Happy is the man who so gives himself to this ministry as even approximately measure up to his high calling.

MEMOIR—REV. FOUNTAIN A. TOWNSEND.

Rev. Fountain A. Townsend, an honored local preacher, was born in Montgomery County, Miss., Nov. 24, 1847, and departed this life Monday, Aug. 27, 1928. For many years he had made his home with his nephew, Mr. C. A. Townsend, who lived on his plantation near Salem church, twelve miles east of Winona. For the past two years the family have lived in Winona, and it was here that Uncle Fountain, as he was familiarly called, closed his eyes upon the scenes of this world and went to be with the angels. Brother Townsend's father moved to Montgomery Count, this State, from the Carolinas in 1834. His family was of good Methodist stock. A number of preachers have come from this familiy who have adorned the profession. Uncle Fountain was licensed to preach about sixty years ago. What a wonderful record! He was a man of fine mind. He knew the doctrines of Methodism and loved the worship of her altars. He belonged to the old school who trusted the simple faith of Christ and was content therewith.

Brother Townsend was the preacher's friend and adviser. He has befriended and advised many a young pastor. His home was the circuit rider's stopping place. Though he was never married himself, he opened his home to the preacher, where he found rest and peace. He frequently preached for the people of his home community, and they invariably heard him gladly. He made a rich and lasting contribution to his church and community.

Except for a few years spent in Arkansas, Brother Townsend spent his whole life in Montgomery County. Here he desired to be buried that he might rest beside many relatives and friends who had preceded him to the grave.

His funeral was held at Salem, where he had so often worshiped. The services were largeiy attended, giving unmistakable evidence of the high esteem of his neighbors and friends. Revs. Mellville Johnson and J. R. Murff assisted the writer in the last sad rites. May God give the church more good men like Uncle Fountain.

E. S. LEWIS.

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY IN CANAAN!

July 21, 1928, marked a quarter of a century since the Lord sweetly, blessedly, knowingly, and Scripturally sanctified me. It has been twenty-five years of precious victory, fullness of joy, genuine heart peace, and a wonderful feliowship with him who "suffered without the gate that he might sanctify the people with his own blood."

On this particular birthday I undertook to preach twice at Caseyville camp meeting, fifteen miles west of Brookhaven, where the Great Depositum of Methodism has been held forth before the great multitudes, year after year, for fifteen years and the end is not yet!

Twenty of the twenty-five years have been spent as a member of the Mississippi Conference, and I thank God for the souls here and there in both Mississippi Conferences who have been converted and sanctified (and some have been called into the ministry and are making good) under the humble efforts of these years.

I ask special prayers of those who are really interested, that I may continue faithful unto death and then have an abundant entrance into the everiasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ!

"Satisfied with Him,"

J. A. WELLS.

AN EARLY PRESIDENT OF WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Rev. J. P. Lee, a Canadian minister, became the second president of Whitworth College in 1860. In that year the college enrolled about eighty students, and graduated one senior. The efficiency of the administration of Dr. Lee was enhanced by the personality and accomplishment of his wife, who was also a Canadian. President Lee, himself, was so amiable a man that his students remember him as a kindly, agreeable president. The class of '61, the second year of his administration, numbered four. They presented to Dr. Lee a gold-headed walking cane because of their appreciation of him. But in the same year President Lee resigned his connection with a Southern institution because of the war, and went to California. There he died, years later, at the age of ninety.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT GROUP MEETING.

Hawkins Chapel, near Brookhaven, Miss., was host of the Central Group meeting of the Brookhaven District on Aug. 28, 1928.

The meeting was called to order by Rev. P. D. Hardin, pastor of the church at Brookhaven, who is chairman of this group. C. H. Strait was elected secretary.

Rev. L. J. Snellgrove led the devotional and gave an earnest talk on "The Place and Work of the Holy Spirit."

Rev. J. M. Metcalf made a talk on the "Benevolent Claims," and brought out many good thoughts on the worth of the Methodist doliar. He gave some statistics and quotations that were very helpful indeed.

Rev. C. H. Strait spoke concerning the circulation of Religious Literature and urged that we make our literature more interesting, and suggested that we try having some one from each charge send in a report monthly. Dr. B. F. Jones spoke on the same subject very ably.

The hour having arrived for the 11 o'clock sermon, Dr. G. F. Winfield brought a vsry fine, soul-stirring message that was enjoyed by all.

We then adjourned for lunch. There was a table standing ready, just outside of the church, with fried chicken and other good things to eat spread thereon and prepared by the ladies of this community, who know how to fix good things to eat. We soon found ourselves eating hurriedly on account of the rain.

The time came for the afternoon session, and Brother Hardin asked Rev. B. F. Lewis to conduct the devotionai and to talk concerning his work at the Orphans' Home. He spoke very encouragingly concerning the work of the Home, and urged that we all remember the second Sunday in October as Work Day.

Brother Curtis Youngblood, the lay leader for the Brookhaven District, made a talk concerning service for the Kingdom of God. He stressed service as being the expression of our gratitude and love for God.

Brother M. L. Everett made a talk concerning how to interest our young people in religious literature.

Brother Ernest Linton gave a report on the work done at the locai church.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, our presiding eider, was asked to come forward and conduct a round table discussion, trying to remove the obstacles that would keep this from being the banner year for the Brookhaven District.

Brother Hardin took charge, and a resolution of thanks was made by Brother L. J. Snellgrove for the splendid day that we enjoyed at Hawkins' Chapel.

THE HOUMA STANDARD TRAINING SCHOOL.

The fourth session of the Houma Standard Training School, which closed Friday, Aug. 24, was a very satisfactory one. Though the enrollment was mailer than had been anticipated, other features of the schooi contributed to make the results greater than ordinary. The sessions were held, as usual, at the MacDonnell French Mission School. The out-of-town delegates, both instructors and students, were entertained in the school dormitories. This afforded intimate contacts between the student body and the instructors, giving the former challenging contact with the strong personalities of these great leaders of the church.

In this mission territory religious leadership is thrust upon many who are all unprepared for the peculiarly difficult tasks that confront them, and the isolation makes it less easy to get the needed vision and inspiration, so we are more than ordinarily appreciative of the spirit that prompts such teachers as Dr. and Mrs. R. E. Smith and Rev. and Mrs. D. B. Raulins to give long, hot August days and evenings in unselfish service to the people here. Our own pastor, Rev. B. H. Andrews, who taught one of the courses and was chairman of the Board of Managers, contributed no little to the success of the school.

Nine Sunday schools were represented by the student body, and, since many of these work in several different communities, the influence of the Training School will be greatly muitiplied. Estimating the value of the school, not by the number of credits issued, but by new impulses for service, higher ideals and standards, renewed power, and, best of all, a closer, more vitalized walk with the Master and an awakened desire to fit oneself for truer service in the kingdom of God, we can unhesitatingly say that the school was a real success.

ELLA K. HOOPER.

NOTICE.

On September 1, 1928, Miss Doris Alford became the Elementary Superintendent of the Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board. We trust that those who need heip in this fieid will call upon Miss Alford and use her.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

HOME-COMING DAY AT PACHUTA, MISS, SEPT. 23-28.

We are glad to say to the former presiding elders, pastors, members, and others that have been interested in Pachuta church and charge, that we now have a fine brick church just completed in Pachuta, and we extend to you a most hearty welcome to be with us the fourth Sunday in this month. The editor is invited also.

Pachuta charge bids fair to be a choice circuit in the Meridian District. Salem church has been remodeled and a new piano installed. McGowan church has been reworked, painted inside, and a new carpet put in. Adams' Chapel has been recovered and new windows put in. Pachuta has a new, modern brick church, well equipped, and a new parsonage adjoining the church property.

This is a fine people to serve. We have a number one presiding elder, and—Come to see us.

Your brother,

R. A. ALLUMS, P. C.

"EVERYBODY'S FRIEND."

"Everybody's friend!" That is the name that was given to the Rev. W. B. Burke, for forty-one years a missionary to China, on the eve of his sailing for his fifth furlough to America in July. This testimony to Mr. Burke and his great work for China was made by the Rev. J. W. Cline, D.D., one of the outstanding Southern Methodist missionaries to China, and for many years a close friend of Mr. Burke.

"In Sungkiang he is considered the First Citizen of the city," declares Dr. Cline. "Here on the eve of his departure for America all manner of functions have been going on amongst all kinds of people for these last weeks to show him honor and appreciation. Few men have made themselves felt and needed in a community as he has in Sungkiang in all the years he has lived and worked there. I doubt very much if any missionary among us has left China at any time with such a 'send off' by the whole community. Yesterday I was talking to a well-informed Chinese of his going and of the good will he had in Sungkiang. We remarked upon the city-wide feeling of friendship for him. This Chinese gentleman said it was not only remarkable for a foreigner to have such a hold on the community, but it would be equally so for a native Chinese to have such an influence. All honor to Burke for the lasting work he has done here in his quiet, friendly way. In Sungkiang he is everybody's friend."

As a climax to these honors came the erection of a memorial pavilion built by Mr. Burke's friends, in memory of the great work done by Mr. Burke for the protection of the women and children of Sungkiang during the civil war which swept that section of China in 1923. The memorial tablet which hangs on the walls of this pavilion, when translated, reads as follows:

"Rev. W. B. Burke, American missionary, is a man of high ideals who has rendered a great deal of service to China. He has been in Sungkiang for many years and is friendly to all whom he meets. The most important deed he has done was the helping of thousands of people in the time of the civil war between Kiangsu and Chehkiang in the autumn of 1923. During September and October of the twelfth year of the republic war broke out. Unfortunately Sungkiang's position made this city the focus of the dispute. The inhabitants of the city were in dread and fear, and many of them moved to Shanghai. In an attempt to defend the city, Mr. Lok Kwe-Liang, one of our leaders, declared: 'Sungkiang is in danger. If all of us should move away who would defend our city?' Then he visited Mr. Burke and asked him for aid. Mr. Burke responded in a most generous way. He called his friends together and established an institution as a shelter for the women and children. They elected Mr. Burke as president and Mr. Lok Kwe-Liang as vice president. In a short time flocks of people came and every one was provided with food, sleeping-quarters, and medicine. Mr. Burke and his friend also organized a committee of investigation and a committee for burying the dead. Everything needed during war times was organized. During the whole critical time the most dangerous event happened when the Chehkiang troops were evacuating eastward and the Fuklen army was coming in from the west. Hundreds of boats sailed up and down the canal outside the city; armed soldiers marched through the streets; and the firing was continuous. At this time of danger the mayor fled. There were several groups of troops entering the city, and orders came from different heads so that confusion and a great tumult prevailed. The merchants stopped their business; the soldiers were crowded in the streets; and the rogues, taking advantage of this opporunity, did many harmful things. During these days of difficulty Mr. Burke and Mr. Lok were busy in the streets doing services for the people. They asked the military leaders to punish the rascals and control the soldiers. They also tried to help and comfort the people who suffered. In ten days order was restored.

"Mr. Lok is a native of Sungkiang, and it is no wonder he did what he could to defend the city and help his people. Mr. Burke is just a foreigner here, but he saw the urgent need and acted with promptness even at great risk to his personal safety. His unselfish nature and courage are admirable. After these troublesome days the government rewarded Mr. Lok for courage and uprightness, but he said that this reward should go to Mr. Burke, and the government consented. But such a small reward cannot repay his great service.

"It must be remembered that during the period of the Hung Yang rebellion in the Tsing Dynasty, Li Vung-Soong asked the American General Frederick Ward to come and relieve Sungkiang, which he readily did. For this we pay respect to him even to this day. Now Mr. Burke is also an American gentleman, and he has brought the Spirit of God's love and has sacrificed for the sake of brotherliness. His service has been even greater than that of General Ward, so we, the people of Sungkiang, who have received this favor, have built this pavilion in Mr. Burke's honor, not only that we may show our own respect and appreciation, but that we may show his merit clearly to generations yet to come."

IF WE HAD EYES TO SEE.

One of the very great and important lessons that we ought to learn from Jesus Christ as he walked with men here upon the earth is the lesson that enables us to see and appreciate the goodness and fine quality that live in the hearts and lives of many of the people who are about us. It is true that Jesus had some hard things to say about some of the men of his time, and his verdict did not always agree with the popular one, but the striking thing about him was not his harshness of judgment but his kindliness. Every man had a chance with him, and if we can read the incidents of his life aright there was many an individual in Palestine in his day in whom he saw a soul of goodness and beauty, and that no other person had ever dreamed of seeing. It must be that it is good for us to be as he was in this matter.

It probably is true that there are some people in the world who are worse than they seem to be, but it certainly is true that there are a whole multitude who are very much better than they seem to be. That the soul of beauty and attractiveness in many a life does not reveal itself to every chance passer-by may be due to many causes rather than to the one that there is not such a soul of beauty and attractiveness to be revealed. There are some ugly traits about nearly every man—some very unattractive things, the results of bad upbringing or crippling habits or even of some of the more incidental things in life—that we admit are inconsistent with the soul of beauty within; but so often these things but mask and disguise that soul of beauty, they do not destroy it. Everywhere, walking our streets and hyways just as they walked the streets and byways of Palestine in Jesus' day, there are saints and heroes and lovers of the beautiful and the good, walking behind masks that no one ever seems to have the wisdom or grace to penetrate.

To have the gift of penetrating these disguises that Jesus had, and seeing in men's hearts and lives the goodness that is all covered over with unattractiveness, the goodness that often is still only a mere possibility and is merely struggling to be, is a great gift and one to be sought for as men seek for hidden treasure. Many of us can bear testimony to the fact that it was because some one saw in us a very incipient gift or grace and called it into vigorous being by their faith that we have ever been able to achieve anything. What could we not do to pay back that service if we only had Jesus' way of seeing the goodness and graces in other men!—The New Outlook.

HAVE YOU READ?

"Christ at the Round Table," by E. Stanley Jones, the world's best known missionary, who recently refused to be a bishop that he might "walk with Christ in India?"

"A Daughter of the Manrai," by Madam Etsu Sugimoto, now a professor in Columbia University, who describes in this book her own girlhood in a Japanese home of the better class?

"China, a Nation in Evolution," by Dr. Paul Monroe, of Columbia University, who sees a great nation evolving from the chaos now prevailing in that country?

"Drums in the Darkness," by John T. Tucker, who under this picturesque title gives a vivid account of the progress of missionary work in Africa?

"Mother India," by Katherine Mayo, the book which so vividly depicts the great human need in India that it has created a furore over all the world?

"Catholicism and the American Mind," by Winfred Ernest Garrison, a calm and serious study of Catholicism and its adaptability to American life?

These boooks and other bearing on home and foreign missions and world problems can be borrowed free of charge from the Book Service Department of the Board of Missions, Methodist Episcopal Church, South. They belong to the traveling library service that has recently been inaugurated by the Board for the benefit of ministers and church leaders throughout the denomination who wish to be better informed on missionary topics, world problems, and kindred subjects. The only requirement made of the borrowers of these boooks is that they shall be read carefully and returned promptly.

The books in these little traveling libraries are all related to some phase of the subject of missions. The subject, however, is liberally interpreted, including such topics as History, World Problems, Travel, Sociology, Comparative Religions, and similar subjects. The books have been carefully selected from the publications of outstanding publishers of religious works throughout the United States. They are for the most part recent publications, though a few standard volumes of an earlier date have been added.

Ministers and religious leaders throughout the denomination interested in this free library service should write direct to the Book Service Department, Board of Missions, Doctors' Building, Nashville, Tenn.

The little Methodist Sunday school at Ypres, Belgium, has only six pupils. Other children have come to the Sunday-school from time to time, but as soon as this fact has become known in the Catholic day school which they attend, difficulties have been made by the Catholic clergy with the parents of the children. Threatened with loss of their positions or some other form of reprisal, the parents have forbidden the children to go to the Methodist Sunday school.

HUMAN JUDGMENTS.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

"Crucify him! Crucify him!"

This brutal and bloody demand of Pontius Pilate by the populace is amazing and appalling. It is the cry of that people whose sorrows and sufferings and deep spiritual needs had wrung Christ's heart and among whom he had gone about tirelessly doing good, and only good. And they are the same people concerning whom his enemies had declared but a few days before, "The world has gone after him." And now they are clamoring for his death.

No wonder Pilate, the judge, promptly and earnestly asks of them, "Why? What evil hath he done?" But stolid and heartless and boisterous, "They but cried out the more, saying, 'Let him be crucified.'" Reasons they have none, but their demand for Christ's death is but more insistent and clamorous.

It was not strange that the hypocritical ecclesiastical Jewish leaders, who had been so openly exposed and denounced by Christ, and whose official positions had thereby been so weakened and hazarded, should for envy and hatred deliver him up to Pilate with the demand for his execution. Their false characters, their unworthy exercise of authority and their determination to maintain their places of supremacy at any cost committed them to this course.

But the people—the people for whom Jesus had always showed the utmost love and compassion, whose diseases he had cured, whose infirmities and afflictions he had healed, whose demon-possessed he had delivered, whose dead he had raised to life, whose sins he had forgiven and whose hearts he had comforted and cheered—why are these people so brutally and so lustily clamoring for his crucifixion? They have beheld the transparent beauty of his life, they have felt and rejoiced in the unselfish ministry of his love and have witnessed his wonderful miracles of power which only God could perform. All this ought to have held their gratitude and devotion.

But their leaders have charged that he made himself the Son of God, the Messiah, and was therefore a blasphemer. So, in spite of what they have seen him to be and have received from his blessed hands—in spite of the fact that his life, his teachings and his works all emphatically declare him to be the Son of God and their Messiah, the stupid populace accepts the false and malicious verdict of those who have a grudge to avenge, and the clamor of the people wins for his foes.

Poor, weak, depraved humanity! Conscious of its own tremendously larger capacity and tendency to evil, it is easier for it to believe the false evil report of the finest life they had ever looked upon than to accept the evidence of their own senses. Their consciousness of their own depravity makes them the easy cat's paws of the malicious and lying lusters for the blood of Christ.

It is ever thus. A woman may live as pure as any angel of light, but let the foul tongue of suspicion whisper its black lie in the night and, in spite of all her cleanness and beauty of life, as that report is passed from lip to lip the judgment of those who know they could so much easier fall than remain steadfast in virtue is against her. And these make up the majority.

A man may be ever so clean, self-sacrificing and magnanimous, but let the voice of base ingratitude impugn his motives and charge him with unfairness, though there be no other basis than that he declines to be despoiled and victimized, and in the minds of the masses, so conscious of their own capacity for the ignoble, the charges pass current without investigation.

How pitiful, yet how true, that the verdict of the people is but the register of their deep consciousness of what would be easiest and most likely for them to do under similar circumstances. The little and selfish and designing man has no standard by which fairly and justly to appraise that one who is generous and noble. Hence it is not to human applause that true men must look for their crown and recompense, for they will be disappointed. It may be astounding, but it is the verdict of history as well as the statement of inspiration that "all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." (2 Tim. 3:12) The recompense is higher and truer—the approval of God and one's own enlightened conscience.

One of the supreme tests of character is found in one's attitude to evil reports.

Louisville, Miss.

IS IT PRACTICABLE?

Dear Dr. Carley: As perhaps most people in the State know by the papers, I was relieved of the chaplaincy of the State penitentiary here, after serving 20 years and 6 months.

These have been wonderful years to me, and what I have seen and observed in the causes of crime would fill a book of many pages.

The cause of most crime is sin. There are a few crimes committed, some very brutal, by insanity, and some others by feeble-mindedness.

But the main cause is sin. And there is but one real cure for crime in its prevention, as well as in its cure, and that is religion.

Most of the penitentiaries of the country are full, and not all the offenders caught. But they do get caught, except where crime leagues with the officers, as seems apparent in many places.

Now that I am out, what shall I do?

For many years I have had a consuming desire to go out in the highways and wayside places and preach religion as a prevention. Is it practicable?

I have stood at the bottom of the Niagara Falls on two different trips North, in attending sessions of the Prison Congress, and seen the waters come tumbling over. I said this is the way of the victims of crime. Would it not be better to go up the Niagara (river of crime), and try to hail at least a few before becoming too late? But the way never opened.

Is it too late now?

I could certainly relate the vicious ways of crime, in a very "hostile" manner, as Brother Davies aptly puts it in his last Safety Signals. By the way, if Davies had my observations here for the last twenty years, he could write some safety signals. His articles are rich and timely, but with my experience his flag of warning would be all red, indicating danger.

Shall I return to the pastorate at Conference, or could I be sent out as a Conference evangelist, on my own expense, or on my merits, to make a trial? Would any take heed? Would any be reached?

I am well aware that one of old wanted a message sent to his brothers, that "they come not to this place," and the reply was, "they have Moses and the prophets, let them hear them." Would that answer fit the case now? I invite discussion. What does the Editor think?

WHAT JESUS CHRIST HAS MEANT TO ME.

By Rev. Paul Scherer, D.D.

He has meant God to me. Vividly, insistently, with complete satisfaction, he has meant God.

Nobody else in my life has ever meant God just as he has meant it. All of us, I suppose, meet God for the first time in those faces that look down over us when we are children. In those hands that pass so coolly, softly over our brows, for the first time we meet God. It is the best ideal we have of him, that love that stoops over us, until Jesus Christ becomes a reality in our lives. There is something in his face akin to that which was in those other faces, and he lifts that ideal far up beyond; as far as you can reach and farther, until the highest thing you can say of God is that he is like Jesus.

Now to me that is a mystery, but it is a fact. Why should I find in the Jew one before whom my whole soul is willing to bow itself down, content to worship, wanting to go no farther? I say, why is that? Explain it as you like, but it is a fact that I have found in him and through him all the God I want. I can say nothing less.

All that I know of God, I do not say I have learned it from Christ, but I have seen it in Christ. And he has meant to me a certain kind of God. Then, too, nobody ever knew how far God could go. What an unspeakable gain it was when the world found out that God would do anything to find one living soul, if only that soul would claim sonship with him through Christ!

He showed men that in himself. He brought them up out of their trembling with one word ringing in their hearts, and the radiance of that word was on his face. Do you know what that word was?

I remember once reading of a Roman emperor who was riding in a triumphal procession with all its pomp and glory when suddenly from the crowd a child broke out. A soldier sprang forward, and other soldiers stopped the disturbance.

"Go back," they said, "go back! He is your emperor."

The child looked up into their faces, and seeing no look of recognition said to them:

"He is your emperor—he is my father!"

That is the difference that Jesus Christ has made in humanity's thought about God. He has made that difference in my thought by putting there what humanity has always wanted to find.

They say that Helen Keller's mother used to bend over that little cradle where the deaf and dumb child lay in her living tomb and sob out her anguish, trying to get that child to look at her with some semblance of recognition.

"Helen," she would say, "don't you know I love you? Your father and I would do anything for you. We would work our fingers to the bone to make you understand."

I wonder if that isn't what Jesus has been doing?

All the while Helen was probably thinking, if she was capable of thought at all:

"Why doesn't this person speak to me? Why is she given to such silence? Who is she?"

I wonder, those of us who have not heard God nor seen him, I wonder if God has nevertheless not spoken, and appeared? I have both heard him and seen him in Jesus Christ.

The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth!—Record of Christian Work.

IN BUNHILL FIELDS.

(1628-1928.)

John Bunyan was buried in Bunhill Fields, the non-conformist burying ground in London. Here lie also the bodies of Daniel Defoe and Susanna Wesley.

Here sleeps the Dreamer, 'mong plebeian dead.
Ah, little in his troubled days they wist
He was a poet or psychologist;
And though old Plato he had never read,
Life's richest lore with tears he husbanded—
Yea, nature gave a shining lamp to him,
Which down the hall of years its rays has shed,
While many an earthly torch has long been dim.

And since our way with trials is beset,
As theirs he saw in that divinest dream
With hill, snare, fiend, fire, flood, to Canaan's land,
He shall in countless hearts high thanks beget,
For he shall help o'er that estranging stream
Whose murky waves no human bridge has spanned.

The Home Circle.

THE CAMEL.

The camel, at the close of day,
Kneels down upon the desert plain
To have his burden lifted off
And rest again.

My soul, thou shouldst to thy knees
When daylight draweth to a close
To have the Master lift thy load
And grant repose.

Else how canst thou to-morrow meet
With all to-morrow's work to do
If thou thy burden all the night
Must carry through?

The camel kneels at dawn of day
To have the guide replace his load;
Then rises up again to take
The desert way.

So thou shouldst kneel when daylight dawns
To seek thy Father's loving care;
Assured that he had no load too great
Will make thee bear.

WHEN PATTY FOUND A CHUM.

Patty Drew walked past the new house where a family had just moved in. It was the only house near her home, and she was thinking how nice it would be to have neighbors and maybe—O maybe a chum!

All at once she stopped and her heart felt very queer. On the door was a sign—a red sign—and the black letters said, "Scarlet Fever."

"O dear!" cried Patty, running in to mother. "Now, if there is a chum, I can't see her for ever so long!"

That night the paper said: "We are glad to welcome Mr. Wayne Williams and his family to their beautiful new home on Riverside Drive, but we are sorry to record the illness of little Marian. We trust the small invalid will soon be out."

Days will pass and weeks fly by, so one day Patty stopped short again at something she saw at the new house. It was a small, pale face, but it smiled down at her from an upper window. The hair was cut short, but it would grow again. Patty waved a greeting, and a weak little hand was raised for an instant. Patty raced home to tell her mother.

"Why, it was almost like really calling on her, motherly!" she cried happily. "Our hands said 'Howdy!'"

After a little she came to her mother with a new idea. "Oh, mother, if Marian is well enough to sit up, I can write to her and send her things, can't I?"

"Why, yes. How nice that will be," mother agreed. "But, of course, you know it wouldn't be safe for her to answer."

"No, I'll just imagine her letters. That will be fun, too."

"And you must send her only things that can be burned, you know."

"O, yes, that's what I meant—paper dolls and some of my picture books and things like that."

Many things traveled to that upstairs room during the weeks while Marian was getting well. Then there came an exciting message—a big heavy, square envelope just like the invitation mother got sometimes.

"Dear Little Miss Patty—Will you please come to a party for two under the magnolia? It will be at 3 o'clock. Marian is well again now, and will be so glad to see you. Your grateful friend, Mrs. Williams."

"May I dress up like a real party?" begged Patty. And on went the dainty white frock.

She found a bright rug spread under the great magnolia tree that was full of lovely, big satin flowers. And on the rug there was the cutest table with the whitest of cloths and pretty cups and bowls.

But Patty stopped short. There was a boy sitting here. "Where's Marian?" she asked in a disappointed tone. "I think you meant the party was for her and me, Mrs. Williams."

The boy chuckled as if he just couldn't help it, and Patty liked him on the spot. "I'm Marian," he said, "and the party is for us." Patty stared, giggled—and then how she laughed!

"And I sent you paper dolls, and my celluloid baby, and stuff to make dresses for it—Oh, Oh!" Marian joined her gay laugh. "I wish I could show you those dressess. It was all such fun! I felt like—like a masquerade party, you know. And I'm going to play dolls with you and house and school, and you're going to run and jump and climb and play ball with me. Why, mother and daddy lived next door when they were little, and they say it's lots more fun to be chums than two boys or two girls."

"I just believe it will be!" cried Patty happily, as she sat down to her custard smothered in whipped cream.—Beulah Rose, in Presbyterian of the South.

SUCH A JOKE!

He was a new boy, and we didn't like him very well. Maybe he was too good. Anyway, he was always studying in school time, and he had such a sober look that we just named him "Old Solemnity," and let him alone.

He scowled his forhehead into wrinkles when he studied, and he had a fashion of reading his history lesson rolling bis eyes round to see where the places were on the map till he did look funny enough to make anybody laugh. Dick drew a picture of him on his slate one day, and the fellows nearly went into fits over it.

At recess we left him to himself. You see, there were enough of us for our games without him, and we didn't believe he would be much good at playing. He used to stand and look at us, and he looked pretty sober sometimes; but we didn't think much about it.

One morning Ted brought a big orange to school. He was always bringing something, but this was more than common; we didn't get oranges very often. He had it all wrapped in paper; but he promised to divide it with Dick and me. Then he showed us something else—a big potato he had cut into a likeness of Tom's face. Tom was the new boy, you know; and it really did look like him. It was the shape of his head, with a knob on one side for a nose; and Ted had scored queer little lines in his forehead, and given the mouth and eyes just the right twist. Just then the bell rang, and we hadn't a chance to show it to anybody else; but Dick said: "We'll put it on a stick and pass it round at recess. My, but Tom will be mad!"

Ted rolled it up in paper—"so it's fine features wouldn't be rubbed off," he said—and dropped it into a drawer under the seat, where we kept our pencils and traps generally. After we had been busy over our books a little while, another idea struck him, and he whispered to me: "Say, let's slip that into Tom's pocket, where he'll find it at recess. We will tell the boys, so they'll be watching, and it will be the biggest joke out. Dick can manage it."

So I told Dick, and he slipped his hand into the drawer behind him, and when he got a chance dropped the bundle into Tom's pocket. We three hardly dared to look at each other for fear we'd laugh aloud. But that was every bit of fun we got out of it; for the minute recess came before we had a chance to tell any one, Tom rushed up to us with his face like a full sunrise.

"I'm ever so much obliged to you fellows, for I just know you are the ones that did it," he said. (And I hadn't thought he could talk so fast). "It was real good of you, and I mean to take it home to my sister Sue. You don't care, do you? She's sick, you know."

There he stood, holding up our nice big orange! Dick had made a mistake in the package; and we knew pretty well who had the best of the joke. We'd have made good models for potato heads ourselves just then for we all stood and stared for a minute with our mouths open.

"Why, we didn't," began Dick; but Ted gave him a pinch that stopped him.

"We hope she'll like it," said Ted, grand as a prince. Ted isn't selfish anyway. "Is Sue the little lame girl I've seen at your house?"

So Tom told us all about her—I suppose he thought we must be interested, or we wouldn't have given the orange—how the scarlet fever had left her lame, how worried his mother was about it, and how he was trying to help all he could. We did get interested, sure enough. We put that potato where nobody saw it, and we got into a way of bringing some little thing for Sue nearly every day after that. We like Tom first-rate now; he is tiptop when you get to know him. I never told anybody but grandmother how we came to get acquainted, and she laughed and said: "A good many people we dislike, dear boy, would look very different to us if we took the trouble to be kind to them."—Sunday School Advocate.

PUMPS AND PEOPLE.

Joe burst into the kitchen and dropped his pail. "Well's dry," he announced. "I've pumped and pumped, and no water comes."

Uncle Len, waiting for Agnes to get breakfast, rose and laughed genially. "Not quite a country boy yet, are you, Joe? There's plenty of water in the well, but the pump's dry. When that happens you have to pour water down to get water up. I'll show you." He took a dipperful from the pail by the sink and went out with Joe.

Presently Joe returned with a brimming pail of fresh water. "What else have I got to do?" he asked Agnes shortly.

"There's the wood-box," she answered in the same curt tone.

"Sure, there's the wood-box," muttered Joe, "and after that the porch to sweep and after that something else. It's nothing but jobs all day long." He stamped out to the shed.

"I should think Joe might see," said Agnes to herself, "that this new life is harder for me than for him. I work without stopping for him and Uncle Len day in and day out, but Joe never says a word of thanks or affection. I don't believe he loves me at all."

She filled the pitcher from the fresh pail, and just then she remembered Uncle Len's words. "There's plenty of water in the well, but the pump's dry. You have to pour water down to get water up!"

With the pitcher in her hand Agnes stood gazing across the fields to the hills beyond. Was that the trouble, a dry pump? Perhaps the well was full of brotherly affection, and all it needed was a little sisterly love poured down to bring up a brimming pail.

Joe came back with his arms piled with wood, which he dropped into the wood-box.

Agnes put down her pitcher, curved her mouth into a genuine smile at the thought of her experiment and crossed to her brother. She put an arm around his neck and kissed him. "Joe," she said, "you're such a comfort. I don't know what I'd do without you!"

Joe wriggled free, but the flush on his cheeks was not all embarrassment at the unusual caress. "That's nothing," he said; "you do lots more than I do, Agnes. You're all to the good."

"I love you lots," Agnes said with a soft laugh.

"Give me a dish and I'll pick you some strawberries for breakfast," Joe offered, and went off, whistling.

Uncle Len, who had heard it all, nodded his wise old head. He knew a good deal both about pumps and about people.—Youth's Companion.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. J. B. Mitchell took up his work at Rayne Memorial, this city, on the first Sunday in September, after a vacation spent in Florida.

Rev. and Mrs. Andrew J. Boyles, New Augusta, Miss., announce the birth of a daughter, Mary Virginia, on Sept. 5. Blessings upon the little lady!

Mrs. R. C. Grace, widow of the late Rev. R. C. Grace, of the Louisiana Conference, is visiting relatives in Louisiana. Her home is in Bisbee, Ariz.

We learn from press dispatches that Dr. Edmund D. Soper, dean of the school of religion at Duke University, Durham, N. C., has been elected president of Ohio Wesleyan.

Dr. N. E. Joyner, Louisiana Conference Secretary of Education, was in New Orleans the early part of the week in connection with the great cause in which he is engaged.

The "Methodist Messenger," bulletin of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., has made its welcome appearance after the usual summer vacation. It is a useful publication.

Rev. G. P. Fikes, of Alton, Mo., in renewing his subscription to the Advocate, says: "Everything goes well with us here in our church work. We shall have a full report for Conference, Oct. 10."

Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, our pastor at Morgan City, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. He had come to the city to place a small blind child in an institution.

In a note to the business office, Rev. W. N. Ware, pastor at St. Clair, Mo., says that he has had a good year at St. Clair, in the St. Louis Conference, and that he is expecting to be returned for another year.

Rev. A. M. Martin, of St. Martinville, La., paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. He had brought one of his children to the city for an operation for the removal of adenoids.

Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Lee, of Throckmorton, Tex., parents of Mrs. B. C. Taylor, were guests at the Louisiana Avenue parsonage recently, enjoying a visit to Rev. and Mrs. B. C. Taylor and to their fine new grandson.

We record with sorrow the death of Mrs. Alice Coleman Oates, widow of the late Rev. Q. A. Oates, at her home in Verona, Miss., on Aug. 24. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing loved ones and friends.

Acording to announcement from Randolph-Macon Woman's College, the students this year will number 831. Of these, seventeen are from Louisiana and eleven from Mississippi. Virginia has the largest number, with 210.

Mrs. W. F. Roberts, wife of Rev. W. F. Roberts, Ida, La., accompanied by her mother, Mrs. J. H. Bradford, Sr., and Miss Lily Bradford, were visitors to New Orleans this week. They honored the Advocate office with a call on Monday.

According to official announcement, thirty-three States were represented in the attendance at the Lake Winona Bible Conference this year. The largest number of Methodists in the history of the institution, many of them from the South, were in attendance.

We learn from the Lincoln County Times, Brookhaven, Miss., that Dr. and Mrs. B. F. Jones recently had the pleasure of having all their children except one with them for a visit. The occasion was all the happier by the presence of the grandchildren also.

Rev. J. L. Greenway, pastor of the Kingston Methodist Church, Laurel, Miss., gives us the news that Bishop U. V. W. Darlington will hold services in the First Methodist Church, Laurel, beginning on Sept. 20. Kingston and the West Laurel church will co-operate in the meeting.

The Publishing House announces the new Cokesbury Hymnal, which will soon be ready for distribution. We think the old Cokesbury is the best book of its kind we have ever seen—and it is claimed that the new is much better. It is to be sold at a reasonable price, too.

"The Silent Preacher," bulletin of the Winnfield, La., Methodist church, of which Rev. C. C. Wier is pastor, in its issue of Sept. 3 gives a sketch, with picture, of Mr. P. K. Abel, who has been a member of the church at Winnfield for fifty years. The interesting sketch was written by Mr. R. W. Oglesby.

Rev. John Brandon Peters, pastor of the First Methodist Church, this city, has returned from his vacation, spent in Virginia, and resumed his work. First Church is undergoing extensive repairs and embellishments which will make it one of the most beautiful churches in the city when completed.

All correspondents of the Woman's Missionary Societies should send their communications direct to Mrs. Janie Drake Cooper, Church Hill, Miss., who is editor of the missionary page in the Advocate. Communications sent direct to the Advocate office will be forwarded to Mrs. Cooper, which will cause loss of time.

The Emory University Glee Club returned from its European tour a week or two ago. More than one hundred concerts were given abroad, and the organization received high praise from impartial critics. A New Orleans boy, Lawrence Chaffee, is president of the club, and a Mississippi boy, James Pollard, of Greenwood, is one of the bassos.

Rev. L. W. Smart, of the Waterproof charge, Louisiana Conference, says, in the Tensas Gazette, in which he conducts a church page: "We have presented the Conference claims to all the congregations on the charge and have met with a hearty response. They have promised to make this a one hundred per cent year. We are glad to hear this."

Rev. J. L. Jordan, local preacher, Biloxi, Miss., is making an extended visit to Oviedo, Fla. In writing to have the address of his Advocate changed, Brother Jordan says: "I cannot get along well without it. I have been reading the Advocate from young manhood. Next Sunday (Sept. 9) I will celebrate my eighty-second birthday." Blessings upon him!

Rev. Robert A. Cross, Jr., who expects to receive the degree of Bachelor of Divinity from Emory University next summer, is spending his vacation at his home in New Orleans. While here he is collecting material for his thesis, "The History of Methodism in New Orleans." Brother Cross is serving as pastor of the Newton circuit in the North Georgia Conference.

A writer in the Central Methodist, giving an account of the meeting at Camp Kavanaugh recently, says: "Some of the world's gratest preachers have preached at this famous old camp ground during its fifty-three-year history, but, without discrediting them in the tiniest degree, I am convinced that Kavanugh never heard greater preaching than that of Dr. E. R. Smoot. * * * Dr. Smoot is indeed a great preacher and we wish Kentucky could have him all the time."

Miss Ellison, for the past eight years head resident at St. Mark's, this city, has been transferred to Tampa, Fla., where she will work especially among the Cubans. Miss Nettie Stroup comes from Spartanburg, S. C., to take Miss Ellison's place at St. Mark's. The first meeting of the City Board of Missions after the summer vacation was held on Monday evening of this week, at which time Miss Stroup was presented. Miss Ellison wrought well at St. Mark's, and the interest and prayers of many friends will follow her in her new field of labor.

From the Durant (Miss.) News of Sept. 5: "Dr. C. M. Chapman, former pastor of the Methodist church of this place, was warmly welcomed by his many friends on a visit which he made to our town last week. He was in good health, and jolly, and every one appreciated his happy smile of former days. He filled the pulpit at the Methodist church in Lexington at the 11 o'clock service Sunday, and the evening service at Durant. The Doctor says that he is not preaching politics but that he has a very firm and abiding conviction on the course he will pursue in the presidential election in November."

The following editorial appeared in the Houston (Tex.) Post-Dispatch of Aug. 26 in connection with the death of Mrs. Thomas D. Wier, mother of Rev. C. C. Wier, of the Louisiana Conference: "In the death of Mrs. Thomas D. Wier, Houston has lost a splendid citizen, and the mother of a fine family. Mrs. Wier had resided in Houston nearly thirty years. Like many another Texan of sterling character, she hailed from Alabama, living the early years of her life in Louisiana before finally taking up her residence in Texas. Her noble traits are exemplified in the lives of her children, and her memory will live long in the hearts of a wide circle of friends."

Rev. Percy Vaughan, Ellisville, Miss., writing under date of Sept. 8, says: "The revival at Pleasant Hill, Yazoo circuit, closed two weeks ago, with quite a number expressing a sincere desire to live more consecrated lives and do more for the church. Twenty-one names were added to the church. This was a splendid spiritual meeting. All the people attending the meeting said they were greatly benefited. The same can be said of the meeting at Carter, which closed last Friday night with five additions. The pastor's salary was raised $100 at this point. They all love their pastor and his wife, and are a fine people to work with."

The Western Methodist Assembly, at Mount Sequoyah, Ark., has just closed the best season in its history. It is estimated that 16,500 people visited the Assembly during the summer, the Epworth League conference having the largest attendance, with over 400 from 22 States. The total income from all sources was $16,334. A budget of $25,000 has been fixed for next season, which will include running expenses, repairs, and insurance. Rev. Sam Yancey, the superintendent, will visit the twelve supporting Annual Conferences this fall to represent the Assembly and to request that a "Mount Sequoyah Day" be observed throughout the patronizing territory. The Louisiana Conference representatives on the board of trustees are Dr. Geo. S. Sexton, Dr. Briscoe Carter, and Mr. J. G. Palmer.

We take the following interesting item from the "Monthly Bulletin" of the Campti charge, Louisiana Conference, Rev. P. O. Lowrey, pastor: "At our recent quarterly conference Rev. K. W. Dodson told of a beautiful church that had just been built at Heflin, on the L. and A. Railroad on T. J. Holladay's charge, as the result of a lead taken by a Brother Thomas, who had $400 of his tithe money that he proposed to put into a church building. Two others—Dallas and Louie Pace—joined him, and put in like amounts from their tithes. Then as other tithe money accumulated they each doubled these amounts, and others came in, and as a consequence, as an act of consecrated directing of that that already belonged to God, at a cost of some $3,000, a beautiful church with eight Sunday school rooms, manufactured seats, aisles and pulpit carpeted with noiseless cork matting, and delco electric lighted, all ready to worship God, was built and no begging done, no crazy quilts made, and no soup sold! Thus it is when God's way of financing his church is followed."

MEETING, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference is called to meet at the First Methodist Church, New Orleans, at 10 o'clock a.m., Tuesday, Sept. 25. The purpose of the meeting is to consider the educational situation of the Conference, with special reference to the Conference Educational Bond Issue, and to take such action as may seem wise. Bishop Warren A. Candler will be present. All the presiding elders, all the chairmen of other Conference Boards and all others interested are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

H. T. CARLEY, Chairman,
Louisiana Conference Board of Education.

NOT ALONE THOUGH ALONE.

The fine discovery that one may be "never less at leisure than when at leisure, nor ever less alone than when alone," has been voiced again and again both in the world of antiquity and in the world since then.

There are people who need to be warned against the dangers of solitude, but not the majority. The greater number of us are rather in danger of so "immerging" ourselves in the hurly-burly of the world's "busyness" that we cut ourselves off from the opporunity of gaining life's greater and better gifts, even from the desire to do so.

There are three things exceeding good that solitude gives. It gives a chance to think things out—to discover whether one's life has meaning or not, and, if it has meaning, whether it is the meaning one wants it to have. It gives a chance to get acquainted with the books—those nobler books—that one has put off for years, and to begin the tasks one's fingers have long itched to get at—these being things that make one never less at leisure than when at leisure, and never less alone than when alone. And it gives a chance at last—at last—to lift up one's heart and soul above the lesser satisfaction of companionship with the meager, to the pregnant joy of realized companionship with the all enforcing Eternal Spirit.

THE METHODIST CHURCH AT BROOKSVILLE, MISS., REV. SEAMON RHEA, PASTOR.

What has been found by one and another and another, by multitudes of men altogether, is that there comes an awareness of a Presence who is no less real because he cannot be seen or heard. Even as there are sounds in the air that our ears cannot catch, though the finer senses of other creatures catch, them, so in many ages and in diverse religions there have been men and women who felt an awareness of which coarser sensibilities were unconscious. As Helen Keller can he conscious of, and enjoy, music through vibrations to which the feet of the hearing and seeing people around her are insensihle, so these people are conscious of a correspondence, not felt by others, with a Life that is the source of their human life.

If such power—the power of such spiritual apprehension—is possihle, is there anything that will help to the gaining of it? Rufus M. Jones tells us that one of the greatest debts he owes to his upbringing is in consequence of the religious culture that came from the habit of silent worship each morning as soon as breakfast was over. That, he says, made that "habit of turning the mind from outward things to an attitude of love and confidence toward an invisible presence" as natural to him as breathing.

Two things characterized those moments of which Doctor Jones speaks so lovingly. One was silence. The soul was deliberately turned away from the husy matters that must soon occupy the day. There was not even reading or audible prayer to break the silence into which each soul was bidden to go for calmness and strength. And in addition to silence there was meditation, so that the soul might find its way to "that interior hush where the human spirit touches the skirts of God," to take the beautiful expression used in another part of the book.

In this case there was companionship in silent worship, and such companionship may be a help. But, whether in association or in solitude, the essential thing is the habit of opening the soul to awarenss of the divine Companion, and concentration upon the thought of that companionship. —Winfred Rhoades, in the Congregationalist.

AN EVANGELISTIC SINGER AVAILABLE.

Dear Brother Carley: I have already given facts about my meetings; but I wish to state here, in the interest of Mr. Lamon Napper, of Dubach, La., who was licensed to preach at the district conference (Ruston District), Brother Napper is a gospel singer; sings sweetly and does effective work with young people. He has had special training for evangelistic singing. I know him personally, and know him to be a very fine Christian young man and can recommend him for evangelistic singing and a worker among the young people.

I would he glad if he could be kept busy all the time.

Yours fraternally,
Gilbert, La. J. C. PRICE.

PROSPECTS AT WHITWORTH.

The 1928-29 session of Whitworth College opens September 18 with an increased enrollment. Prospects for a happy and successful session have never been brighter than for the coming year. Students have registered from some of the finest homes in South Mississippi, Louisiana, and Tennessee. The following girls are daughtera of ministers in the Mississippi Conference. These young ladies will make a large contribution to the school life in general: Katimae Campbell, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Campbell, McComb; Mildred Davis, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. A. J. Davis, Prentiss; Frances Decell, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Decell, Jackson; Elizabeth Leggett, daughter of Rev. anl Mrs. J. T. Leggett, Vicksburg; Kathleen Schultz, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. C. RESOLUTION.

Whereas, Almighty God in perfect love and wisdom has, in her ninety-ninth year, called SARAH ELIZA HOWE to come up higher; and,

Whereas, Mrs. Howe was one of the founders and charter members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Crawford Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Vicksburg, Miss.;

Resolved, That this Society has lost in her a member of such beautiful Christian character and of such innate refinement and culture that she was an inspiration who greatly endeared herself to all.

Resolved, That we extend our deepest sympathy to her dearly loved daughter, Juliet Harmon, and to the other dear ones who cared for her so tenderly.

Resolved, That we spread a copy of these resolutions on the minutes of this Society and send a copy to the sorrowing family, one to the press, one to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and one to the Missionary Voice.

Signed: Delta McLaurin, Jennie Lane Dyer, Agnes T. Rehse, Committee.

BROTHER DICK FULLER was born Sept. 14, 1839, in Georgia, moved to this State with his parents in 1847. He volunteered to serve in the Twelfth Louisiana Regiment, Company E, at the first of the war, and served faithfully to its close; so another old soldier has fallen. He was married to Miss Margaret Emlee Mitchel, Feb. 18, 1866. To this union were born eight children, and there are sixteen grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren. His wife preceded him ten years ago to the glory world. Brother Fuller was a man of great faith in God. He loved to read his Bible and converse about heaven. The day before his going he called his children and complimented them for their faithfulness to him, and told them that he had just been viewing heaven, and said: "I will soon be in the glory world." He passed away without a pain or struggle on Aug. 23, 1928. His remains were laid to rest in the Henry cemetery. His funeral was conducted by Rev. J. E. Napper, and was witnessed by a host of friends.

HATTIE CELESTE VICKERS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Davis, was born at Americus, Miss., July 28, 1882, and died at Montrose, Miss., March 8, 1928. On Aug. 28, 1907, she was united in marriage to Rev. D. E. Vickers, then as now a member of the Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and at that time pastor of Oak Street Methodist Church, Biloxi, Miss. To this union were born three daughters, Eleanor, Jessie, and Margaret. Mrs. Vickers joined the Methodist church when a child, and was a devoted Christian. She spent much of her time in church services, especially in Sunday school, Epworth League, and Woman's Missionary Society work. She was ill for two years before her death; for months, she knew no hope of recovery, still she felt no fear and was cheerful and perfectly reconciled, knowing that everything was best as God willed. She talked to many about being ready to go, and often discussed her passing away with her children, to whom she was devoted, and planned with them and her husband their future after she was gone. Mrs. Vickers is survived by her husband, three children, three brothers, and one sister.

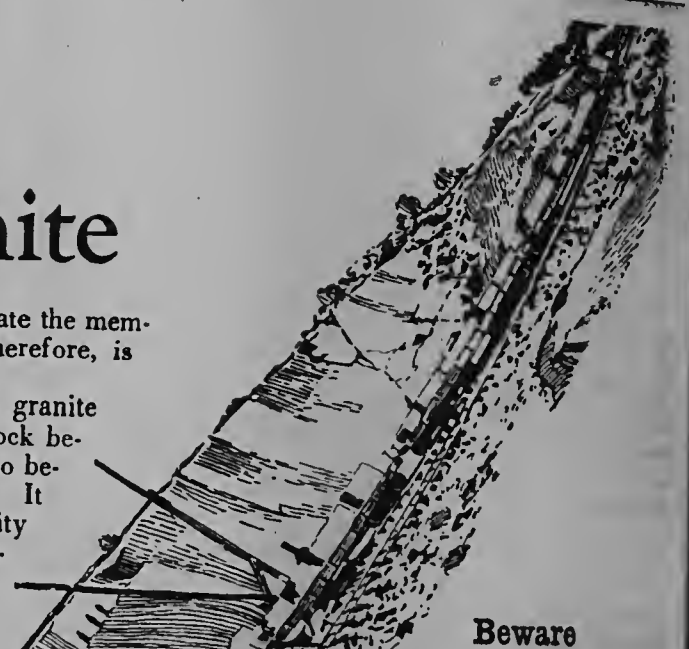
Ledge vs. Boulder Granite

The purpose of a monument is to perpetuate the memory of the dead. An all-important factor, therefore, is its permanence.

Beautiful Winnsboro Granite is a true granite unaffected by the processes that disintegrate rock because of its protection from the elements, due to being deep in the earth in vast ledge formation. It has retained all of the strength and durability accomplished by the union of its beautiful crystals while molten millions of years ago.



Winnsboro Granite

"The Silk of the Trade"

therefore, will last many, many years longer than monuments cut from other granite. Its flawless beauty, stalwart strength, and great durability make it the ideal memorial granite. It possesses wonderful contrasts in shades and shadows. Thus, inscriptions cut on Winnsboro Granite Memorials can be read with greatest ease.

Beware of Boulder Granite.

A boulder is a piece of granite which has become detached from the earth stones, ages ago, and has been left on the surface exposed to the elements. The smooth round edges of boulders show that the stone has begun to disintegrate. Such stone is inferior, having partially lost its vitality, becoming more brittle and tending to crumble though having a fair appearance. It naturally sells at a lower price, but if you get a monument of boulder stone, you have a stone which has already started to rot. It is well to remember, "The sweetness of low prices never equals the bitterness of poor quality."

Typical Granite Boulder.

Be sure that "Winnsboro Granite" is specified in your contract for monuments. Like other high quality materials, there are many inferior substitutes, which resemble this granite on causual examination, but do not possess its lasting qualities and permanent beauty.

Have your monument dealer furnish you with a personal guarantee from the quarries that the monument you purchase is cut in genuine Winnsboro Granite.

The certificate of the quarries is signed by B. H. Heyward, Treasurer and General Manager, whose signature insures genuine Winnsboro Granite. A facsimile of this signature is reproduced below.

Those who have not read "A Missionary Sees It Through" in the Literary Digest for Sept. 1, 1928, will find it worth while to look up this short article.

It is with deep regret that we note the announcement in the Advocate of the death of Miss Daisy I. Ferguson, missionary teacher to Brazil, Miss Ferguson was sent out in 1925 by the Mississippi Conference Missionary Society. It is hoped that a sketch of her life will be furnished for publication on this page.

Letters from Miss Lois Cooper tell of a happy visit to our mission school, Colegio Buenavista, Havana, Cuba. While there, Miss Cooper made a talk in our mission church in theory. In this talk, she took up and answered each charge made against our Protestant missionaries in the article entitled, "Christianity in China," by Moore Bennett, in the August number of the Atlantic Monthly. We hope one of our missionaries from China will write an answer to this article for a future number of the Atlantic. Miss Cooper and Miss Laura Mitchell left Cuba on the 15th of August. They went by way of the Panama Canal, and write of the great interest of the Canal Zone. On the 31st of August, they sailed from San Francisco for their respective fields of service—Japan and China.

Zone No. 2, of the Columbus District, met in Macon, Aug. 23, 1928, with a large number present. Mrs. L. S. Adams presided, and Miss Mary Lillian Peters, of Mashulaville, conducted the song service.

Devotional was conducted by Mrs. W. S. Mullins, with prayers by Mrs. Tyson and Mrs. Gerdine.

Minutes were read by Mrs. J. C. Bush, and approved by those present.

The roll was called and a collection taken. Mrs. W. S. Harkins, of Macon, stated that this collection would be used to send a Negro woman to Holly Springs for special training, to do country work.

Mrs. Bell, of Shuqualak, gave an interesting paper on "Jubilee Auxillary Societies."

Mrs. Gerdine, of Macon, chose as her subject, "The Children." She stressed the need of early religious training. Her talk was an inspiration to those present.

Mr. Starks, from Philadelphia, Miss., gave a beautiful solo, "Ready." He also told the history of this song.

Mrs. Henry Adams, of Salem, made a very interesting talk. Her subject was the young people. She expressed forcefully the necessity of setting good examples for the young people of the nation.

The District Superintendent of Bible Study, Mrs. Howorth, of West Point, spoke of the necessity of reading four books of the "Bookshelf," in order to reach the Standard of Excellence. The bookshelf was explained in full.

Salem invited zone No. 2 to meet with them at an early date.

CONCERNING CHILDHOOD AND YOUTH WEEK—AND ELSE.

Material for the observance of Childhood and Youth Week is ready. Miss Doris Alford, our new Conference Elementary Superintendent, is ready to send this material, free of charge, to any school wishing to have the observance, that will ask for the material. The material includes program pamphlets, leaflets on purposes and plans, and attractive posters. If you wish for your program to include a pageant, there are several very attractive ones, and Miss Alford will be glad to send these, too. Every District Elementary Superintendent is working to attain the goal set for her district, and will be glad of an opportunity to co-operate with the school in her district in promotion of this Week.

Already requests are coming in for material. This is most encouraging, and indications are that the observance will be the best we have ever had. Year before last, thirty-two schools reported the observance, and last year there were forty reports received, and we feel sure others observed the week. We have set our goal for seventy this year, and trust that we have your co-operation in reaching it. To those schools who have observed it have come rich returns, in which we hope you will share this year.

The purpose and plan of the week are fully explained in material that is available to you. You and your school should look forward to the opportunity of dedicating one week in October to a consideration of the needs of the childhood and youth in your church, and to the responsibility of the church in meeting those needs to the fullest extent of its ability.

As I leave my work as Conference Elementary Superintendent I am glad to have the privilege of introducing to the people of the Mississippi Conference Miss Doris Alford, who will be my successor. Miss Alford is the daughter of Rev. L. F. Alford, a graduate of Millsaps College, holder of a diploma in Religious Education, and is well equipped by training and personality for her work. I am sure you will all love her and welcome her into the Conference service. I wish to express to my friends the sincerest appreciation for the many kindnesses shown me during the two years of my work as Conference Elementary Superintendent.

A BRAND-NEW PARSONAGE.

I had the honor, at the time of the League Assembly at Hattiesburg, of being the first guest in a brand-new parsonage. Never having been in a brand-new parsonage before, it was a double pleasure.

The Methodist people of Mount Olive, Miss., and Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Carter are to be congratulated on having built the model parsonage. To me, it is a novel and interesting thing to see the parsonage one of the loveliest homes in town. It is beautiful, has all modern conveniences, and is a comfortable house to live in. The sleeping porch is a great feature. Three sides being composed of windows, it is always a cool room.

Another interesting thing is that the parsonage is finished and furnished completely—no details left to be done later. The garage is being built now, and the lawn being prepared for the planting of winter grass. There is already a concrete walk from the steps to the sidewalk.

All praise to the Mount Olive Methodists and the preacher in charge.

A GREAT MEETING AT GLENMORA, LA.

The joy of every reporter is to report something really notable as well as unusual. So this scribe has a line on a truly great event in the shape of an old-time protracted meeting conducted in the spacious auditorium of the Glenmora Methodist church. The pastor was assisted by Rev. Leon I. McCain, of Minden. The pastor constituted himself choir leader of a splendid band of singers, plus the hearty response of the great congregations assembled. Brother McCain did the preaching, and he spoke with power in so much that many heard the gospel call and gave their hearts to God and united with the church—coming twenty-four by baptism, nine by vows, and nine by letter, making a total of forty-two, with a number to follow.

A number of the older citizens of the town, both Baptists and Methodists, say it was the greatest meeting they ever saw in Glenmora.

The meeting was on twelve full days, and the attendance was fine from beginning to end, and the power and presence of the Spirit were manifest throughout. To God be all the praise. Aug. 19-30, inclusive, will be remembered by many as a notable period in the life of Glenmora Methodist church.

There are times when all a mother's love can't soothe a fretful baby. No way of telling just what's wrong, yet something must be done. Castoria time! A few drops, and Baby has dropped off to sleep. Yet this marvelous means of quieting a restless infant is utterly harmless. There is not one ingredient but what all doctors know and approve, and would let you give your baby every day in the week. In fact Castoria is a purely vegetable product. Gas pains, constipation, even diarrhea can be dispelled in this same manner. Castoria is older than you are, but physicians still say "nothing better for babies." An old-fashioned remedy if you count its years, but parents are old-fashioned who still raise babies without its aid! And at least five million modern mothers keep it handy day and night, for twenty-five million bottles were bought last year! Buy yours now; don't wait until you need it.

Sunday School

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

A Standard Training School is to be held at Greenville, Sept. 23-28. The following courses are offered: "The Teachings of Jesus," "Story-Telling in Religious Education," "The Christian Religion," and "Intermediate-Senior Department Administration." There are ten schools within reach of Greenville. Class work will begin Sunday, Sept. 23, 3 p. m., and Monday, 7 p. m., thus throughout the week, closing Friday night.

Rev. C. A. Parks, Aberdeen District Superintendent, has announced institutes to be held at Nettleton, Sept. 27, and at Calhoun City, the 28th. The workers who take part and those who attend are sure to receive much help from these meetings. The teachers will get to examine copies of the new Cokesbury Record Books, get suggestions on the observance of Childhood and Youth Week, and on Promotion Day.

Let the teachers who read this notice make out an accurate list of all supplies needed the next quarter, and give the list to the secretary, that he may order the literature needed. The order should go to the Publishing House not later than the 15th of the month. This is important. The superintendent will make no mistake in ordering the new Cokesbury Record Books. See advertisement in the Workers' Council.

It will be well for the pastor to check up his school this month and then call for an approved checker in October to go over the work for final report. It requires extensive and accurate knowledge of the scheme of religious education to check a school correctly. If it is not done accurately, the checking may do more harm than good. The standards of the Sunday School Board are higher than the standards of any other department of church work. They mean something more than mere "child's play." Think of it, a low standard is worth but little.

We are on the home-stretch. It will pay to do much praying. We need to see the face of him who sitteth upon the throne; we need his power to organize our inner natures, and his strength to enable us to go over the hard places. The devil is in all places; the Holy Spirit is omnipresent and all-powerful, he is able to deliver and give victory. Our record for the year is not all it should be when we consider our resources, our machinery, and our equipment. "Lord, teach us to pray as John taught his disciples."

What may be the results of Childhood and Youth Week?

1. Every home visited.
2. A large congregation to hear the message.
3. A new appreciation of the worth of our own children and young people.
4. A Forward Step in behalf of these children and young people.

Are these objectives worthy of the effort we are called upon to put forth?

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Mr. W. A. McKennon, Educational Director of the Shreveport School booked for Oct. 7-12, writes: "Now the courses are decided on, and will be as follows: 'Bible,' Dean R. E. Smith; 'Principles of Teaching, or Pupil,' Mrs. R. E. Smith; 'Sunday School Management,' Rev. Clem Baker; 'Junior Lesson Material,' Mrs. G. R. McDonald; 'The Home in Society,' Mrs. John A. Rice."

"The Workers' Council met last night and set Sept. 16 for observance of Sunday School Day at First Church, and we will undertake to raise the $300 and get it to Brother Mayo in time to use it early in October."

Mrs. T. E. Brunning, superintendent of the Sunday school at Fitzgerald, in the New Orleans District, writes: "Enclosed please find check for $2 for our Sunday School Day offering. We are very late getting this out, but we have had so many setbacks we could do no better. We had a lovely little program. As our Sunday school has only nineteen members, with old folks, teachers and all, our contribution is very small. Wish it could have been more."

New Orleans District has thirty-three Sunday schools, and the records show Fitzgerald is the twentieth school to report with a Sunday School Day offering this year. The goal for this district is an offering from each school.

Dr. John W. Shackford, of Nashville, General Secretary, writes: "The progress of the Sunday school work in our church, I think, is primarily due to the fact that hitherto we have been able to keep our feet on the ground while we have been open to new truths from any quarter, and to the fact that this whole movement in our church has been one of co-operation and mutual helpfulness on the part of the General Board and the Conference Board representatives."

Dr. C. D. Bulla, of Nashville, Associate Editor of Dr. E. B. Chappell, is at this time in Alexandria, teaching the course on "Evangelism in the Sunday School." Many of the local leaders in the Alexandria school are in his class, including the presiding elder, Dr. A. S. Lutz. The other teachers in the Alexandria School are: Prof. W. C. Hall, of Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Tex.; Mrs. G. R. Guerrant, of Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. Cleanth Brooks, of Alexandria.

This school is much larger than last year, and has a promise of being the best of the seven sessions of the school.

The writer spent Sunday and Monday, Sept. 2 and 3, in the Lake Charles District, at Lesville and De Ridder.

We visited the Sunday school at Leesville and found the Leesville Methodism had just closed a splendid revival. The local leaders of the Sunday school, Rev. A. L. Parker, pastor; Mr. H. H. Cudd, superintendent, and Mr. George Ferguson, secretary, were much interested in their Standard Training School, which was to open at De Ridder, Sunday night.

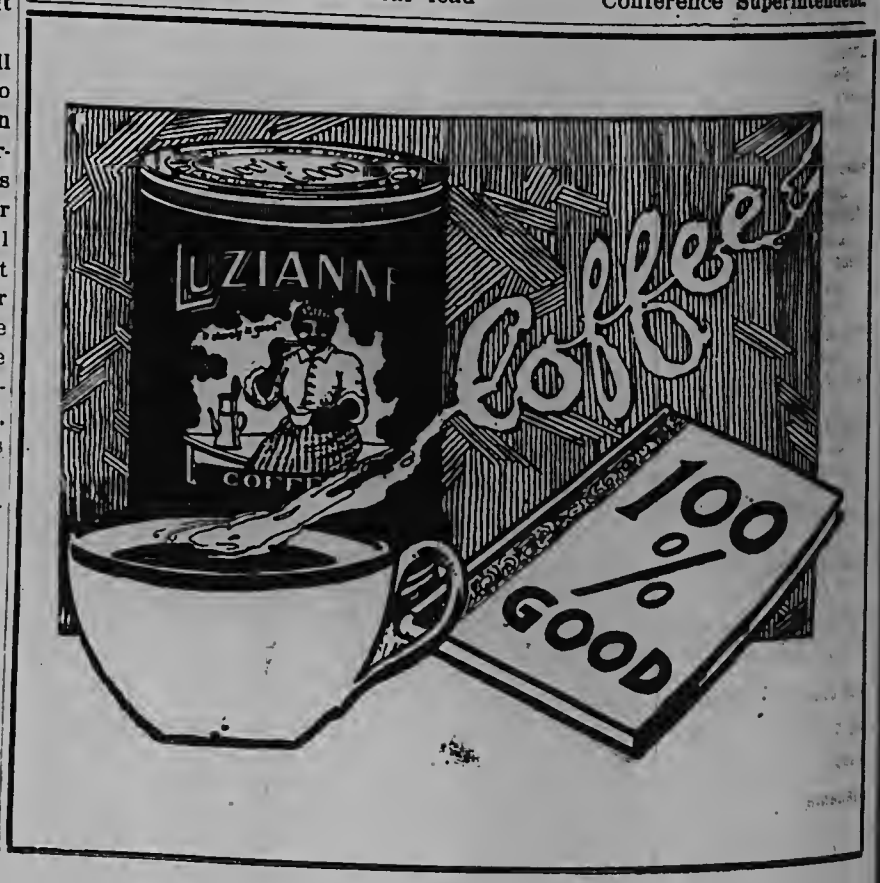
Prof. P. J. Rutledge accompanied me on the Leesville trip and enjoyed his visit to this interesting little city. We enjoyed noonday hospitality at the parsonage.

We reached De Ridder for the opening the third annual session of the Training School. The Educational Director of this school was Prof. W. C. Roaten. The attendance at this school the first night was not as large as last year, but all the classes were well pleased with their instructors. Rev. W. L. Doss had the "Bible Course;" Prof. P. J. Rutledge, "Junior Lesson Material;" Miss Anna Ruth Nuttal, "Worship;" and Mrs. J. A. Bays, "Religious Education of Young People."

Your writer enjoyed hospitality in the parsonage during his pleasant visit at De Ridder. The pastor, Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, is hard at work to bring up a fine report from this interesting city to the Annual Conference.

Rev. Marlon S. Monk, of Monroe, writes: "Three out of four instructors for the Training School, Oct. 14-19, have been selected. The three courses are: "Bible," "Stewardship," and "Sunday School Organization."

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.



MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

When you read this our Standard Training School at Hattiesburg will be in session. Pray for us that it will be a great and good school. I am hopeful that we will have more than 100 units of credit.

Our next school will be at McComb City. We trust we can get 75 credits there. We are trusting that we will have a rallying of the forces such as we have never had. There is a great work for us here and I hope we can enter in.

Natchez school starts Sept. 23. This school is run in connnection with the Presbyterians. We hope we will have good success.

On September 30 the school at Capitol Street will be held. We are hoping we will have the best school ever this fall.

Children's Week is next month. Please make your plans for observing it and send us in your request for material. We want to have the largest observance of Children's Week we have ever had. The field is needy. May we enter in.

If every school which had observed Sunday School Day up to this time last year would do so immediately and send in an offering no larger than the one last year, we would be approximately $500 ahead of our last year's figures.

Forty-five Sunday schools that sent in mission money last year have sent in no money so far this year. This is a great loss, both to the Board and to the local school. Nothing will mean as much for the spiritual development of the local school as a vigorous missionary program.

Pray for the work and the workers.

JOHN C. CHAMBERS.

8 RECORD-BREAKING MONTHS!

Greatest August in Willys-Overland history—68% gain over last year!

NOW August has added its sweeping plurality to Willys-Overland's impressive total for 1928. Eight consecutive months have broken every record for the corresponding months in all of Willys-Overland's 20-year history.

Last month 68% more people bought Whippet and Willys-Knight cars than in August, 1927—a gain of more than two-thirds!

Experienced motorists are quick to appreciate the superiority of the Whippet Four, with its many engineering advantages never before brought to the light car field;—the Whippet Six, the world's lowest priced Six, with 7-bearing crankshaft and other costly car features;—and the Willys-Knight Six, which now, at the lowest prices in history, brings the unmatchable smoothness, silence, power and operating economy of the patented double sleeve-valve engine within easy reach of thousands of new buyers.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: With the month of September here we should be ready to enter into our League program with a new determination to put our very best forth. Vacation time is over, school opens, and most of us are ready to stay at home for a while. Of course that means that your Field Secretary is ready to leave home and pay you a visit. Before many months have passed I hope to have reached every League in the State. If our State office does not have a record of your organization, that means that I may not have the pleasure of visiting you and assisting you in any way possible to perfect your League program. Won't you please send your new list of officers to Box 260, Alexandria, if we do not already have them.

I'm sure that by this time you have all learned the glad tidings, that Julia McGowan won first place in the Oratorical Contest at Mount Sequoyah. You can imagine how proud I was of her, as she had such strong competition. She goes to Nashville on the 17th of this month to compete with the winners from the Eastern Assembly for final honors. Many of you remember Tommie Strange, of Ardmore, Okla. Tommie won second place and will also go to Nashville. My earnest prayer is that Julia will put forth all her strength and ability at Nashville and put Louisiana first with honors.

In my last letter I told you of the beautiful Assembly grounds at Mount Sequoyah and of those who attended from our Conference. We had a most delightful time as well as beneficial. I trust that we have a much larger representation next year.

From Mount Sequoyah I went right on to Lake Arthur, where the Lake Charles Leaguers gathered on the banks of that beautiful lake in a five-day camp Efficiency Institute. The beauty of the Lake Arthur camp grounds is beyond my description. A more attractive spot cannot be found anywhere if one really desires to have the beauty and power and God's handiworks revealed in nature. As we gathered on the wharf, just at sunset, to hold our vesper services, and watched the sun, like a ball of fire, slip behind the horizon, we could look behind those tall cypress trees and see the full moon climb into the sky. As we gazed into the heavens we seemed to see our Master say, "God's in his Heaven, all's right with the world."

The resolutions presented at the close of the camp contained an expression of thanks to those who helped to make our institute such a success. I must say that the consecrated young people of Lake Charles District cannot be surpassed anywhere. It was through their prayers and earnest efforts that the camp came to pass. Merle and Elsie Whitman, of Lake Charles, worked untiringly on the preparations, and every Leaguer joined in in doing K. P. work in the kitchen. Even the boys proved to be efficient dish washers, and finally learned how to set a table.

We had forty-five to register for work, and presented thirty-four credits toward Christian Culture Diplomas. The camp life was great, and the conduct of the young people could not have been better. Several Leaguers outside of the district attended, and they are anxious for us to invite them back next year.

Several weeks ago, while at home, I had the pleasure of attending the Jonesboro Senior League. May I boast of my howe town League and say that they are certainly doing a wonderful work. The pastor, Rev. J. F. Dring, is about the best Leaguer on their roll, so that accounts for a large degree of their success. Jonesboro also has a Hi League and a Junior Society, with splendid counsellors directing them.

Our summer workers have completed their time out in the State, and I feel most grateful to them for the constructive work they did in the rural and small town Leagues. They report that they gained a great insight as to conditions over the State, and their determination to be real Leaguers is greater than ever. May I thank those Leaguers that assisted these volunteer workers in their program.

The Rustou Senior League sent in the best name for our monthly news sheet : "Louisiana League Life," has been accepted by the editor as the name to be used. Watch for the news sheet in your local chapter.

Very sincerely,

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE EPWORTH LEAGUE ASSEMBLY.

The seventh annual assembly of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League held at the State Teachers' College, Hattiesburg, Aug. 20-24, 1928, was, we believe, in many respects the most successful yet held in our Conference. Our delegation was not quite as large as we had anticipated, but for real work accomplished we probably excelled any other assembly held.

Our Dean had gotten together one of the best faculties we probably ever had, and each one was well versed in the subject being handled; and our Leaguers were loud in their praise of the teachers they were working under. We do not know the exact number of credits issued just now, but practically one hundred per cent of those registering for class work earned their credit certificates carrying two units each.

An added feature of our assembly this year was the section for Hi Leaguers; Miss Berta Nall, Superintendent of Hi Leaguers, had worked out a fine program for her Hi Leaguers, and they conducted an assembly all their own, holding classes in the Science building of the college, following practically the same schedule as the Senior section. Mr. Truman Lewis was dean of the Hi League section,and he, too, had secured a most excellent corps of teachers. Over 60 Hi Leaguers were awarded credit certificates on their Hi League diplomas, and went back to their local chapters full of enthusiasm, ready to put into practice the things they had learned while at the assembly. Dr. J. W. Mills, of Houston, Tex., was our platform speaker, and proved to be one of the best we had ever had the privilege of listening to. Dr. Mills captivated the young people as well as the older ones from the very beginning, and he led us into new paths of thought, and taught us how to better serve our Master.

Brother Ripley, of Memphis, Tenn., came to us to represent the Central Office, and was a great help and inspiration to our assembly; he is a well posted Epworth Leaguer, and proved to be at home in any department of the work.

An attractive feature of the work was our singing, in charge of Brother Stapleton, of Jackson, who organized, on short notice, one of the best male quartets we most ever heard.

We closed out Friday evening with one of the finest consecration services—in the minds of many of those present—ever held in our Conference, when twenty-seven fine young people offered themselves for definite service in God's kingdom. It was truly a gracious service, in which the very presence of God could be felt.

The president and authorities of Teachers' College did everything possible to make our stay pleasant, and they certainly succeeded wonderfully well. Prof. Cook, and Mr. Woods, the college secretary, saw to it that we got everything we needed or desired; we were not crowded in the dormitories, thereby making it much more comfortable and pleasant for us, and the dining room fare was excellent, the meals being wonderfully well prepared and served. Prof. Cook deserves a great deal of praise for the kindness to us, and we appreciate it very much. In addition to the fine provisions for our comfort, he entertained free every pastor who came to the assembly, a kindness that will not soon be forgotten.

Our "Play Time" this year was well organized and most efficiently handled by Miss Doris Alford, who by much wise planning and preparation was able to teach our Leaguers the real spirit of play and the place it has in our four square plan of work.

The Leaguers of Hattiesburg and State Teachers' College were splendid in their efforts to get the visiting delegates started off right, making them feel at home and helping them get placed in the dormitories, etc., on arrival.

DIZZY, NO APPETITE

Since Taking Black-Draught This Man Is Eager For His Meals and Feels Much Better.

Harrisburg, N. C.—Mr. M. F. Fink, of this place, says: "It must have been fully twenty-five years ago that I began taking Black-Draught regularly. It wasn't so long after I married.

"I was in town one day, and while talking to a friend I stooped over to pick up something. When I straightened up, I felt dizzy. I spoke to him about this and how I had not felt like eating.

"My friend told me to take some Black-Draught. I knew my mother had used it, and so I bought a package. When I got home, I took a good, big dose, and the next night, another. In a few days I felt much better. I was hungry and the dizziness was gone.

"A good many times I have had this dizziness and a bad taste in my mouth, or headaches, and then I take Black-Draught and get better. I do not have to take it very often. We buy from five to seven packages a year."

Thedford's Black-Draught has been found to relieve sick headaches in thousands of cases that were due to constipation. Containing no mineral drugs, it acts gently, yet surely. Try it. NC-193

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Epworth League

Wednesday was election day in the assembly, and judging from the officers nominated by the electoral commission, that body must have been much in favor of prayer prior to their final selection. Their report included: Mr. S. Truman Lewis, of Hattiesburg, president; Miss Lucie Mae McMullen, of Jackson, secretary; Mr. Ralph Nall, Petal, treasurer; Miss Dorris Alford, of Jackson, Era agent and director of recreation.

Mr. Lewis is one of the most able young men our Conference has ever produced. An Epworth Leaguer almost from his infancy; a young man with deep convictions and courage to stand by his convictions regardless of the cost. It has been our privilege to know and love him nearly all his life; having worked with him, played with him, and prayed with him. We have together climbed some rugged paths when the going was not as on flowery beds of ease, and he has been a great inspiration and help in those times of trial. We have at times traveled the smooth joyful paths together, when to be in his company was a pleasure indeed. Never at any time during all these years have we known him to swerve from what he believed to be the right course. We predict for the Mississippi Conference Epworth League one of its most successful year's work under his leadership, for we know Epworth Leaguers will find it a pleasure to co-operate with him to make it such. Miss McMullen is known to Epworth Leaguers all over our Conference as one willing to make any sacrifice for the sake of the Epworth League work.

Ralph Nall, to use his own words, which we believe literally true, will do his job or get out, and knowing Ralph as we do, we predict that he will do it.

Miss Dorris Alford needs no introduction to any Leaguer in our Conference, and we all know that there will be nothing left undone to make her department a success.

Now, Leaguers, let every Epworth Leaguer in our Conference earnestly pray that God will direct our officers, then pledge God and these officers our undivided support; if you do that, nothing can keep us from having a wonderful year's work.

And may I, your retiring president, thank each one of you again and again for your kindness and co-operation during my term of office. You have been wonderful, and it was by your co-operation that we had the little success that we did have. I appreciate more than I can ever tell the kindness shown me. And especially do I appreciate the gift presented me on the last day of the assembly, and I treasure it highly because I feel that it came from hearts full of love and appreciation for the service I tried to render; feeble as my efforts were, I believe you realize that I was giving you my best. So I thank you.

Remember to pray for the Weems, and we shall do our best to remember you. May God bless you is our prayer.

How To Get HEALTH and How To Keep It

If the reading of this article teaches you only this one lesson about your own body it may be worth more than millions of dollars to you; for of what use is money without health, or after you are dead?

The lesson is this:—"Keep your system pure and you will have health and strength to gain and enjoy happiness, success and length of years."

But you may ask:—

How Can I Keep My System Pure?

That is not a hard question to answer, for physiology plainly teaches you that your liver, which is larger than any of your other vital organs, has the special work of purifying your blood and thereby your entire system and of keeping it pure and healthy.

How Does the Liver Purify?

Physicians tell us that the liver has several functions, one of which is to manufacture a greenish-yellow, bitter fluid called the bile, which, between meals, is stored up in the gall-bladder, but after each meal is poured out into the intestines. The bile is purgative and antiseptic or prophylactic. In health, it is your bile that makes your bowels act regularly and freely every day,—it is Nature's only purgative. It is your bile that keeps your bowels pure, sweet, clean and free from fermentation (gas) putrefaction and decay. Remember that germs do not thrive where there is fresh bile and there can therefore be no fermentation to cause gas, nor putrefaction or decay to produce poisons or toxines. Also, as bile is Nature's purgative, there can be no constipation if the bile is flowing naturally and freely from the gall-bladder into the bowels after each meal.

But when the bile becomes stagnant and stops flowing freely, your bowels stop acting regularly and the contents become a foul, stagnant breeding bed for the germs of fermentation (gas) decay and disease. These poisons, (called toxines) are gradually absorbed into your blood and circulate all over your body, poisoning, irritating or inflaming your brain and nerves, your muscles and joints, your heart, lungs, skin, kidneys, bladder, spleen and every vital organ of your body, including your liver, stomach and bowels. Your doctor calls this "intestinal toxaemia."

Functions of Gall-Bladder

In 24 hours your liver secretes about 25 to 30 ounces (5 to 6 teacupsful) of bile, which flows through millions of minute canals, or ducts, uniting to make a large tube which empties into the gall-bladder, as creeks and rivulets unite to form a river that flows into a lake. Your gall-bladder is a hollow muscle that serves the double purpose of a reservoir and a pump. Its functions are similar to those of the urinary bladder. About two hours after eating, when the food is passing from the stomach into the intestine, your gall-bladder should begin its peristaltic contractions, thus pumping the bile into the small intestine where it is mixed with your food. Bile is also a very important digestive fluid, aiding in the digestion and absorption of fats and oils. But that is too long a story to relate here.

Nature's Danger Signals

When your car gets out of fix you can tell it. It is the same way with your bile. Nature gives you warning—not by words, but by signals or symptoms. Your doctor recognizes these danger signals and you also should know them and instantly heed them. It may save you much pain, serious illness and perhaps, big repair bills.

When the bile becomes stagnant in your gall-bladder and is dammed back into your liver instead of flowing freely into your bowels you, sooner or later, begin to feel some of the following symptoms:—Your breath may become heavy or foul, your tongue coated, a bad taste in your mouth, your food (and tobacco) lose their natural flavor, your food does not agree with you; you may have heartburn, gas, or fluttering around the heart, dizziness or blind spells; you may be troubled with belching or frequent passages of gas from the bowels: the gas "balloons" your bowels and presses so hard on the kidneys that it gives you pain, soreness, stiffness in the small of your back over your kidneys, making you think you have kidney trouble; at night the gas in your bowels presses upon your bladder making you get up frequently, thus breaking into your sleep. In the morning you are tired instead of refreshed. Gradually your health is injured. Your complexion becomes sallow, muddy or yellow—your skin may be disfigured with liver spots or pimples; dark rings may appear under your eyes, you may become sleepless, restless and irritable or blue and melancholic. You may have frequent colds or dull headache; your bowels stop their free, full and natural action; you have constipation, fermentation, gas, putrefaction and self-poisoning or "intestinal toxaemia," as the doctors call it. High blood pressure, with headache and swooning spells, may result from continued neglect.

How to Make the Bile Flow

But when the bile stops flowing freely, how can we start it up again? The answer is: Take Calotabs at bedtime and drink water freely the next day. This formula represents the best thought and experience of the best physicians in every civilized country in the world. No other purgative will do. If you take oils, salts, cascara, or the many other simple-laxative syrups, powders and candy laxatives, you are merely wasting valuable time. They only make you feel better for a day or two. They do not remove the cause, for they do not promote the flow of the bile which is Nature's only purgative and intestinal antiseptic. When you take Calotabs you know that you have taken a real, doctor's medicine. It cleans you out thoroughly. Every inch of your twenty-five foot canal, including your stomach, small intestines and large intestines, is thoroughly cleared and washed clean and pure and your bile is flowing freely. Next morning your system feels purified and refreshed and you are feeling fine, with a hearty appetite for breakfast. Eat what you please and go about your work;—there is no danger, for Calotabs are perfectly safe and create no habit, except the habit of healthy bowel actions.

What Are Calotabs—How Do They Act?

Calotabs are composed of a thoroughly purified and refined calomel combined with assistants and correctives. The calomel increases the flow of the bile from the gall-bladder into the intestines, and also serves as an intestinal antiseptic. Every physician knows that no other medicine can take its place; there is no such thing as a substitute for calomel. The assistants act like salts, washing the calomel out of the system and preventing its accumulation and any possibility of danger. The correctives settle the stomach and bowels, preventing nausea, sickening and griping effects. Calotabs, (and water) therefore, give you the combined effects of calomel and salts without the nauseating, sickening, griping and dangerous effects of either.

The medicine chest of every home should be supplied with Calotabs, one of the most important of all family medicines, for it is needed in many cases of sickness, and, if used promptly, may prevent many cases of serious illness.

Avoid disappointment by refusing imitations and substitutes. Your druggist can supply you with genuine Calotabs if you insist. For your protection, Calotabs are marketed in original packages only, bearing the copyrighted trademark. Family package, containing full directions, only 35 cents.

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1928. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

A MODERNIST INDICTS MODERNISM.

By Bishop Warren A. Candier.

What is called "Modernism" has heen the vogue among a certain ciass of theologians during the last twenty-five years; but the reaction against it has begun.

The matter is as it has been many times before in the history of Christianity.

The liberalism which has heen current under the name of "Modernism" is not modern at all. it were better called "ancientism;" for all its destructive principles were proclaimed by Celsus, an Epicurean philosopher of the second century, whose heretical tenets Origen refuted so effectually that the teachings of Celsus cannot now be found except in the quotations made from his writings by Origen.

Then in the third century came Arius, revamping heresies which had appeared in the previous century and winning a great following until overcome by Athanasius and condemned by the Council of Nicaea. Periodically these noxious forms of liberalism spring up, flourish for a season, and then wither away.

However the forms may vary in some aspects as the circumstances of time and piace may affect them, they are always marked by two controlling characteristics: they always attack the authority of the Holy Scriptures and assail the Person of Christ, in one way or another.

But their assaults upon these impregnable stronghoids of faith always fail, although for a season they seem to he successful, and thereby deceive many unlearned and unstahle souls. Generally speaking, they rise and fall within the limits of a half century.

The liberalists of the iast fifty years have been quite truculent and boastful. But now these arrogant and aggressive knights of Doubting Castle have begun to douht the strength of their fortress and to question the value of their cause.

This reaction against Modernism began in Germany about ten years ago, and it is now beginning to appear in the United States.

An instance of this turning against "Modernism" is an article in the Congregationalist by Rev. William Henry Spence, D.D., a man who has been rather conspicuous as a "Modernist."

Of course, Dr. Spence does not condemn without qualification the school of thought to which he belongs, nor does he fail to strike the opposing "Fundamentalists" several lusty hiows. But he brings charges against Modernism, or rather makes confessions for it, which are fatai to it.

He is a minister of the Church of Christ at Dartmouth College, an institution founded by the generous gift of Lord Dartmouth, who was a nobleman converted by the preaching of John Wesley and who founded the college in the New World to prepare missionaries for work among the North American Indians.

At Dartmouth was educated Daniel Webster, who, notwithstanding many imperfections in his life, was never a liheraiist in his helief. But Dartmouth has been for some years past a distributing depot for Modernism, and Dr. Spence has been an active participant in the propaganda while pastor of Christ Church.

But now he publishes an article under the caption of "A Modernist's Criticism of Modernism," in which he turns guns on his erstwhile comrades. The drift of his criticism will appear by some excerpts from it.

Of the effect of liheralism on certain of the educated classes Dr. Spence says: "The acquisition of the Liberal viewpoint has meant, for great numhers of them, a lessening of ioyaity to the church and the forsaking of its altars." Their iiberalism, he declares, "has chiiled their religious enthusiasm and caused them to abandon the house of prayer."

Dr. Spence notes also that iiheralism has had deteriorating effects in the realm of religious experience and morai life. He says that as a pastor watches, "the cooiing of religious ardor, the loosening of the grasp on religious realities, the progressive and easy-going tolerance of unethical practices, the increasing negiect of the means of grace, and the blurring of conviction through pride of intellect, in one after another of his parishioners, and in his intimate friends and fellow-clergymen; he is tempted to say now and then, adapting the words of Festus: 'Much iearning hath made thee apostate.'"

Again he says: "When one thinks of what the old faith in the Bible did for our fathers and mothers and the kind of family life it inspired them to create, one feeis less and less inciined to swagger over the fruits of the so-called modern view of the Bibie." Then he goes on to say that it is necessary "to find something to give us what the Bible gave them—the feeling of security in a trouble-ridden world, clearness and definiteness of religious convictions, the accent of authority in our testimony of religious experience, and a firm, sure hold of faith in Christ—or else liberalism will yet become the great apostasy."

But it is pertinent to inquire, in this connection, if Dr. Spence, with the aid of ail the "Modernists," can find any faith-inspiring substitute for the Bihie? With all their claims to superior ability, honesty, and learning, they ought to have found by this time some adequate substitute for the Bihle, which they have so constantly and superciliously discredited. But confessedly they have not found, nor have they been able to make, a hetter Book than the Bihie for the hringing of light and iife to men. Why not?

Matthew Arnold, who was a liheralist, has given the answer to the question. He said: "To the Bible men will return; and why? Because they cannot do without it. Because happiness is our being's end and aim, and happiness helongs to righteousness, and righteousness is reveaied in the Bible. For this simple reason, men will return to the Bibie, just as a man who tried to give up food, thinking it was a vain thing and he could do without it, would return to food; or a man who tried to give up sleep, thinking it was a vain thing and he could do without it, would return to sleep."

Why shouid men discredit this indispensable food for the soul, or seek by microscopic criticism and analysis to create distrust and distaste for it?

One of the most striking passages in the articie by Dr. Spence is what he says concerning the utter sterility of the ministry of "Modernist" preachers. He shows that they turn few, if any, souls from sin to saivation, speaking thus pointedly:

"How often do you find a Modernist preacher proclaiming the good news of salvation that really makes had men good? Are not Modernist preachers usuaiiy laboring to get men to change their ways of thinking rather than their ways of living, and are not liheral laymen more concerned to see the propagation of ideas rather than to win men to the Christian experience of God? Yet sin is just as rife as ever. Multitudes of men are stiil 'going to the devil' whiie our religious conventions pass ringing resoiutions for the abolition of war and other social iiis, or affirm their soiemn right to accept the theory of evoiution, or proclaim to ail the world what it already knows—the singuiar giory of the Piigrim Fathers."

While liberalists never tire of deciaring that creeds are worthiess because it makes no difference what a man helieves, they direct their preaching to no other ohjective than the change of the thought of their hearers. Hence their raucous calls for "free thought," about which Dr. Spence says most truly that "freedom of thought tends to become ahsence of thought."

Of the fact that iiberalism concerns itseif with the merely intelectuai to the exciusion of the spiritual, Dr. Spence speaks as foilows:

"Protestant liberaiism tends for the most part to make its churches centers where people gather to hear somehody talk about reiigion. The standard of vaiue is purely intellectual and subjective. The chief aim is to give proper information about God and man, a right understanding of the application of religion to iife, and to promote sociai weifare. Ali of which is essentiai. All true worship must eventuate in truer conceptions of God and his ways with men, and, aiso, in fruitful service for humanity. But instruction and exhortation are not enough. What the souls of men need more is a rebirth of feeling, a complete orientation of the spirit, an immediate experience of awareness of God, an enguifing of the finite consciousness in the Infinite.

"This experience comes hest when one joins in communal worship. Let liheralism divest itseif of intelectual pride and join humbiy with those who, whatever their theological opinions, know how to adore. Though unabie to assent to the opinions, it can reverence the Infinite Mystery. Just as a learned astronomer might stand on a hilltop heside an unlettered shepherd and share with him the awe which the heavens inspire. Though sunderd far in knowiedge, they may become one in the attitude of wonder. Such worship is creative, and if iiberaiism will iead the way to the recovery of this lost art, it will save itself from dry rot and bring about the rehahilitation of Protestantism."

Much of what he thus says is quite true and most important; but he slops over at the last into liheralistic cant and sentimentality about "wonder" and "worship."

What sort of worship does one practice who rejects the God revealed through the Bible and gazes at the starry firmament with no definite knowledge of him whose giory the heavens deciare?

Worship apart from the true knowledge of God is superstition. Jesus taught the woman at Jacob's well that genuine worship and salvation were depenent upon true knowledge of God, saying of her and other Samaritans: "Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for saivation is of the Jews. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him. God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth" (John iv:22-24).

Truth is as essentiai to worship as is spirit; and no sweetish adoration born of a vague sentiment

EVENING PRAYER.

By William N. Roberson.

Through the day our hands have wrought
Tasks that love and duty brought;
Now the sun has left us all,
Where the shades of night do fall.

Worn and weary from our work,
Let thy love be in our heart;
May no tempter bright and fair
Lead our souls from thee afar.

May thy grace our strength supply,
Lest in sin we surely die;
When the evening prayers are said,
Watch above our humble bed.

Through the watches of the night,
Bring us safe to morning light;
If in slumber death should come,
Take us, Lord, to thy dear home.

—The Advocate.

A REQUEST FOR FACTS.

Dear Dr. Carley: Governor Al. Smith said in his acceptance speech: "If, with one hand on the Bible and the other reaching up to heaven, I promise the people of this country that 'I will faithfully execute the office of the President of the United States, and to the best of my ability preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States,' you may be sure that I shall live up to that oath to the last degree."

Governor Al. Smith has taken oaths of office before, and it occurs to me that it is but reasonable to check up on what sense of responsibility he has shown and what diligence he has exercised in the performance of the high obligations accepted by those former oaths of office. There are a great many of us with the spirit of the practical Missourian, who had to be shown.

The facts are of course accessible to the editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, so I am asking that you inform your readers just how the Governor's record in the past tallies with this pledge for the future.

Americans have had no little experience with politicians and political pledges. It will not be amiss to know the habit of Governor Al. Smith in such cases.

Thank you for the facts.

Yours cordially,

H. M. ELLIS.

Louisville, Miss., Aug. 31, 1928.

In response to the above request we give herewith the "Official Legislative Record of Al. Smith on Moral Questions," taken from "The Reform Bulletin," published by Rev. O. R. Miller, State Superintendent of the New York Civic League. This record is taken from Vol. 19, No. 28, issued for the month of August, 1928. As will be seen, the correctness of the references to the New York Assembly Journals is attested by affidavit by the Journal clerk.

"(All page references herein are to the printed Assembly Journals of the New York Legislature. We have 'introductory' (Int.) and 'Printed' numbers of bills. Our Senate has fifty-one members, the Assembly 150. To pass a bill twenty-six votes in the Senate and seveny-six in the Assembly are necessary.)

For the Year 1904.

"April 14 voted for the Cook bill, Assembly No. 2,003 (Int. 625), to amend the town local option law to make it impossible for the people to vote out hotel bars, p. 2,589.

For the Year 1905.

"April 12 voted for eight wet amendments to the Wainwright local option bill, Assembly No. 141 (int. 141), which amendments were introduced by Assemblyman Brooks; all of which were lost. On same day voted against the bill itself on final vote, and bill failed 73 to 60, p. 2,261. April 19 Wainwright moved a consideration of this bill and Smith again voted against it, p. 2,594. April 13 voted for the Freidel bill, Assembly No. 2,014 (Int. 1,128), requiring proof of two liquor law violations within the same license year before a liquor license could be revoked, p. 2,347; passed Assembly, died in Senate. May 5 voted for the Saxe bill, Senate No. 1,464 (int. 1,001), to allow saloons within 200 feet of a church, p. 3,489.

For the Year 1906.

"March 28 on second reading, p. 1,534, voted to recommit the Prentice bill, Assembly No. 1,320 (Int. 552), providing stricter regulations for hotels in order for them to get a liquor license under the old Raines liquor law, many of which places were not hotels at all, but simply assignation houses or houses of prostitution which had hotel liquor licenses; April 3 also voted against this bill as amended, Assembly No. 1,958 (Int. 552), p. 1,760, passed 88 to 34, nearly every 'No,' vote being cast by Tammany men from New York City.

"April 10 voted against motion to discharge Excise Commission from further considering the Wainwright local option bill, Assembly No. 1,539 (int. 466), providing local option for residence districts for cities and incorporated villages, p. 2,017. May 2 when this bill as amended, No. 2,400 (Int. 466), came up for advancement to second reading, Smith voted for the Schoeneck wet amendment to kill the bill, p. 3,034. Same day voted for Carnochan wet amendment to kill the bill, p. 3,035. Same day voted for the Gates wet amendment to kill the bill, p. 3,036. Same day voted for the Bird wet amendment to kill the bill, p. 3,037. Same day Smith introduced a wet amendment to kill the bill, p. 3,037. Same day voted for 20 wet amendments to kill this bill introduced by Assemblyman Cox, p. 3,039. Same day voted for the O'Neill motion to lay this bill on the table, p. 3,040. Lastly, on same day, after all the above wet amendments were defeated Smith voted against the bill on its final passage, p. 3,041.

For the Year 1907.

"April 4 voted against the Winters local option bill, Assembly No. 1,536 (Int. 673), p. 1,611. April 23 voted for the Ralston bill, Assembly No. 2,290 (int, 1,664), to allow saloons within 200 feet of a church, p. 2,397.

For the Year 1908.

"March 26 voted for the Hart anti-race track gambling bill, Assembly No. 1,532 (Int. 210); passed 126 to 9, p. 1,402. Same day voted against the Oliver motion to recommit this bill to the Codes Committee; motion lost 18 to 108, p. 1,400. Same day voted for the other Hart anti-race track gambling bill, Assembly No. 1,531 (int. 209), passed 126 to 7, p. 1,403. These bills defeated in Senate. April 8 voted for the Oliver bill to allow stores to open on Sunday, p. 1,788.

"May 27 (at Special Session of the Legislature), voted against the Green direct primary bill, Assembly No. 7 (Int. 7), p. 28.

"June 10 voted against the two Hart anti-race track gambling bills, Assembly Nos. 34 and 35 (Int. 29 and 30); passed, pages 60 and 62. (Question: Why did Al. Smith favor these anti-race track gambling bills in March and fight them in June?)

For the Year 1909.

"April 8 introduced a bill, Assembly No. 2,301 (int. 1,581), to amend the law prohibiting saloons nearer than 200 feet of a church or school building 'in the Borough of Manhattan (New York City), south of Fifty-ninth Street,' and voted for it April 26; defeated 37 to 73, p. 2,405. Same day moved to reconsider vote by which this bill was lost, p. 2,405.

"April 15 voted for the Conklin bill, Assembly No. 1,195 (int. 1,051), to allow saloons within 200 feet of a school building for a private school; defeated 43 to 68, p. 1,930. April 30 voted for this Conklin-Alt bill (Senator Alt having passed the same bill in the Senate and sent it over to the Assembly); passed 79 to 54, p. 2,800. The Assembly Journal, p. 2,800, when this bill was taken up said: 'On motion of Mr. A. E. Smith said bill was read the second time and ordered to a third reading.' Governor Hughes vetoed this bill, saying that 'the American saloon must never take precedence over the American school.'

For the Year 1910.

"April 5 voted for Assembly bill No. 844 (Int. 745), re restrictions of certain voters at local option elections; passed 123 to 9, p. 1,187. Vetoed by Governor Hughes.

"April 20 moved to postpone consideration of the Perkins anti-race track gambling bill, Assembly No. 1,252 (Int. 292); motion lost, p. 1,789. Smith then moved that the Assembly adjourn; motion lost, 53 to 70, p. 1,789. Next he voted for the Clark amendment to weaken this bill; amendment lost, 33 to 89, p. 1,791. Finally, on same day, voted against this Perkins bill; passed 92 to 35, p. 1,792. Immediately after this he also voted against the other Perkins' anti-race track gambling bill, Assembly No. 299 (Int. 291); passed 93 to 30, p. 1,792. April 26 voted against Gray city local option bill, Assembly No. 134 (Int. 134), p. 2,003. Same day voted for McGrath Sunday baseball bill, Assembly No.2,038 (int. 72), p. 2,008. May 11, voted against Governor Hughes' direct primary bill, Assembly No. 628 (Int. 584), p. 2,818.

"May 25 voted against the Conklin bill, Assembly No. 2,627 (Int. 1,516), making many amendments to tighten up the Excise law; passed 85 to 44, p. 3,390. One of the amendments was to reduce the number of hours that the saloons should keep open. Another of the most important amendmnts in this bill was subdivision L of section 30, which reads as follows:

"'L. It shall not be lawful for the keeper of a hotel, boarding or lodging house who also traffics in liquor thereat, or who sells or gives away liquor, to rent more than once a bedroom or other similar room between the hours of 9 o'clock in the evening and 6 o'clock in the morning or to allow any such room to be occupied by more than one party of one or more persons during that period, or to rent such room or rooms for the purpose of prostitution or to a woman known or reputed to be a prostitute...A register shall be kept containing the name and home address of each person occupying such room at the time of day or night when rented, which register shall be signed by the guest in the presence of the hotel keeper, room clerk, or other employee having charge of such register at the hotel office, or other similar public room, and not elsewhere. No such room shall knowingly be rented or assigned to a person signing a fictitious name or writing a fictitious home address on such register. Such register shall at all times be subject to the inspection of a special agent or any peace officer of the city, borough, village or town in which the hotel, boarding or lodging house in which it is kept, is situated.'..(Bill referred to by Wm. Allen White.)

"Also on May 25 voted against the other Conklin bill, Assembly No. 2,393 (Int. 1,518), to strengthen the Excise law and make it easier to enforce, among other things providing that a saloon keeper should be responsible for the law violations by his bartender, p. 3,401.

For the Year 1911.

"May 3 voted for the Goldberg bill, Assembly No. 1,640 (Int. 517), to allow saloons nearer than 200 feet to a church or school building, p. 1,725. Same day voted for the McCue bill, Assembly No. 619 (Int. 591), reducing from 300 to 200 feet the distance from saloons within which saloon keepers must get the signed consent of at least two-thirds of all the owners of building in order to get a liquor license, p. 1,727. May 9 voted for the Hackett bill, Assembly No. 1,231 (Int. 1,064), to have all liquor law violators in New York City tried by jury instead of by a judge; passed 78 to 46, p. 1,970. Vetoed by Governor Dix.

"May 17 voted for the Walker bill, Assembly No. 2,209 (Int. 1,077), to give brewers great power over saloon keepers; p. 2,380. Passed Assembly, died in Senate. Same day voted for the Fay bill, Assembly No. 1,978 (Int. 1,062), providing that a saloon keeper's bartender must be convicted twice in the courts within the same license year before the saloon keeper would lose his license; passed 76 to 44, p. 2,383, but died in the Senate. Same day voted for the Wagner bill, Assembly No. 2,056 (S. Int. 324), to reduce from two years to nine months within which prosecution of a liquor law violation must be started after the violation, p. 2,410.

"May 24 voted for the Hoey bill, Assembly No. 2,412 (Int. 283), requiring that a notice of a violation of the Excise law by a saloon keeper shall be given to him within thirty days after date of the violation, or he could not be prosecuted for the same; p. 2,604. Passed Assembly, died in Senate. Same day voted for the Jackson bill, Assembly No. 2,143 (int. 1,329), to seriously weaken and practically destroy the town local option law for nearly half of the towns of New York State; defeated 58 to 68, p. 2,613. Same day voted for the Walker bill, Assembly No. 2,051 (Int. 1,049), to increase the number of hours that saloons could keep open, p. 2,614. Same day voted for Boylan bill, Assembly No. 2,210 (Int. 1,059), to reduce from three years to one year, the length of time after one is convicted of a felony before he might secure a liquor license, p. 2,607. June 6 voted for the T. D. Sullivan bill, Senate No. 674 (int. 617), to allow saloons within 200 feet of a church, p. 2,978. Vetoed by Governor Dix.

"June 7 voted for the Washburn bill, Assembly No. 1,510 (int. 1,280), to change the penalty for liquor violations from fine and imprisonment to fine or imprisonment, and cutting out the thirty-day minimum imprisonment and reducing maximum imprisonment from one year to six months; passed 117 to 4, p. 3,018. Vetoed by Governor Dix.

"June 28 voted for McCue bill, Assembly No. 2,545 (Int. 1,247), weakening the liquor law with reference to issuance and limitation of liquor certificates, p. 3,465. Vetoed by Governor Dix.

July 19 voted against the Gray city local option bill, Assembly No. 354 (Int. 347), p. 3,942. Same day voted for the Long bill, Senate No. 1,539 (Int. 1,290), providing that the prohibition of liquor selling within one-half mile of any State hospital should not apply to a hotel license within one-half mile of State hospital, Kings Park, L. I., p. 3,991. Vetoed by Governor Dix.

"July 20 voted for the Gittins bill, Senate No. 2,178 (Int. 1,625), to repeal the Hughes anti-race track gambling law; defeated, p. 4,079, immediately after which the Assembly Journal says: "Mr. A. E. Smith moved to reconsider the vote by which said bill was lost,' p. 4,079.

For the Year 1912.

"March 25 voted for the Hackett bill, Assembly No. 1,195 (Int. 1,058), to take from the court of Special Sessions of New York City all liquor cases and try them only after an indictment by the grand jury of the county in which the crime was committed, p. 1,970.

For the Year 1913.

"This year Alfred E. Smith was speaker of the Assembly. The speaker seldom or never votes on any bill, unless one more vote is needed to pass the bill and he greatly desires its passage. There was no such close vote this year, therefore no record of his vote on any important moral measures. However, as speaker of the Assembly, to whom all important bills are referred before they are introduced or at least before they are advanced on the calendar, Speaker Smith by his helpful co-operation aided directly and greatly to pass the following bad bills:

"(1) Feb. 25 the Walker bill, Assembly No. 636, (Int. 616), to allow saloons within 200 feet of a private school, p. 681; lost in Senate. (2) March 25 the Walker bill, Assembly No. 1,948 (int. 509), to increase the number of hours the saloons could be kept open, pp. 1,520-21. Passed. Vetoed by Governor Sulzer. (3) March 26 McCue bill, Assembly No. 1,030 (int. 601), re definition of 'convicted' and 'conviction,' making it harder to convict a liquor law violator in New York City, pp. 1,621-22. Passed. Vetoed by Governor Sulzer.

"When the editor of the Reform Bulletin asked Governor Sulzer to veto the last two bills mentioned, he said: 'The saloons of this State already have too many open hours, and it is hard enough now to convict liquor dealers in New York City; I don't want to make it any harder. I shall veto these bills,' and he did.

For the Year 1914.

"March 19 voted against the Gillett local option bill, Assembly No. 819 (int. 777), p. 1,382.

For the Year 1915.

"March 25 when the Howard city local option bill, Assembly No. 1,394 (Int. 81), came up for advancement on the calendar the Assembly Journal, p. 1,446, says: 'Mr. Smith moved to recommit said bill to the Committee on Excise,' and he so voted, p. 1,447.

"March 31 voted against the Fish State Prohibition bill, Assembly No. 1,717 (int. 1,408), which bill provided for its submission to a State referendum vote at the general election in 1916, and not to take effect unless a majority of all the votes cast were in favor of it, p. 1,585.

"April 7 when the Preswick local option bill, No. 1,718 (int. 436), for the State University, city of Ithaca, came up for advancement, the Assembly Journal says: 'Mr. Smtih moved to recommit said bill to the Committee on Excise,' and the Assembly so voted, p. 1,883.

"April 24 Smith voted against Senate bill No. 2,146 (Int. 1,646), to increase by one-fourth the amount then charged for a liquor license; passed 82 to 48, p. 3,007.

"Three Governors Vetoed Smith Bills.—The above record shows that two bills Al. Smith voted for were vetoed by Governor Hughes; five bills Smith voted for were so rotten that even Tammany Governor John A. Dix vetoed them; two bills that Smith, as speaker of the Assembly, helped put through were vetoed by another Tammany Governor, William Sulzer!

"State of New York, County of Albany, City of Albany, SS.: William K. Mansfield, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he resides at Cohoes, N. S., N. Y., that he is the Journal Clerk of the New York State Assembly, that on Aug. 30, 1928, Rev. O. R. Miller, publisher of the Reform Bulletin, submitted to him final page proofs of the August, 1928, issue of said Reform Bulletin and that deponent has personally examined every page reference in said Bulletin to the various volumes in the printed Assembly Journal and found such page numbers, bill numbers and votes in said Reform Bulletin to be correct. FINE REPORT FROM SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY, SOUTHERN METHODIST UNIVERSITY.

A total of twenty-eight degrees, the largest number ever granted during a single year in the history of the institution, were conferred upon students of the School of Theology of Southern Methodist University during the past year, 1927-28. Of these degrees, twenty-four were Bachelor of Divinity, the other four being Master of Church Administration, of which three were conferred upon women. The degrees were granted at two distinct commencement occasions, sixteen of them—thirteen B. D.'s and three M. C. A.'s—in June; and twelve—eleven B. D.'s and one M. C. A.—in August. In addition, four students received Master of Arts degrees, majoring in Old Testament, Religious Education, and the Philosophy of Religion, subjects within the jurisdiction of the School of Theology.

The true significance of the figure twenty-eight degrees for the School of Theology in 1927-28 is more apparent when it is understood that during the closest competing year, 1926-27, only sixteen degrees in all were granted to theological students. Of these, fifteen were B. D.'s and one an M. C. A.

The past year 1927-28 is further noteworthy for Southern Methodist University in that it witnessed the largest attendance of A. B. students at the School of Theology in the history of the institution—eighty-one in all—there being twenty more A. B.'s enrolled this year than ever before.

As compared with what other seminaries are doing, this record of the Southern Methodist University School of Theology is considered a very excellent showing.

The list of graduates includes eight students from six States other than Texas: Arkansas, Missouri, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Idaho, and West Virginia.

HERSCHEL S. BURGIN.

ANOTHER GRAND DAY!

This day was at home! On Sunday, Sept. 9, Brother Henry Gatlin, our likeable and efficient presiding elder, preached a great evangelistic sermon at the 11 o'clock hour on "Walking With God." How this elder does preach!

Sunday afternoon he held our fourth quarterly conference at the same place (Bay Springs). I can say it with emphasis that I have never enjoyed a quarterly conference more since I came into the Conference twenty years ago. There has never been more constructive work reported at any quarterly conference where I was pastor, I feel sure. We reported two Epworth Leagues organized and doing fine work; reported the organization of a Wesley Brotherhood that was functioning right along. The financial reports were above the average and the spirit and interest of the whole affair was a gripping affair. Brother W. W. Nelson was able to attend this conference—the first one he's been able to attend this year. His many friends will be glad to know he's improving right along now.

On Sunday evening, Brother Fred Barnett, of Nashville, Tenn., was with us, and there's no way to describe his address on paper. Dr. S. A. Steel was preaching for Dr. Arthur J. Moore, at Travis Park, San Antonio, Tex., and Moore's fourteen-year-old boy got so enthused at Steel's preaching that he jumped up during the sermon and said, "hot dog!" I think I had the same feelings while Barnett was speaking that this boy had. Oh! it was great! After the address he had a few minutes with the Brotherhood, and these men received another treat that they cannot soon forget.

All and in all, Bay Springs had a red letter day Sunday, Sept. 9, for which I praise God and thank the officials and all who contributed in any way to make it so.

Thrilled with the "Home Run,"

J. A. WELLS.

The evangelistic campaign in the Brazil Annual Conference continues to make good progress. The time for the meetings was set for the cool and dry season, beginning in April and ending in September. Up to the end of June, 171 persons had given their names for church membership.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

By Rev. J. L. Decell, D.D.

The Constitutional Amendment to be voted upon by the 1928 Annual Conference is ambiguous and discriminates against clerical delegates, and should be defeated.

The proposed amendment reads: "If any representative elected to the General Conference ceases to be for any reason whatsoever a member of the Annual Conference which elected him (or her) in the interval of holding the General Conference, the alternate shall automatically take the seat in the General Conference in the order of their election."

"The interval of holding the General Conference." What General Conference? The regular quadrennial session, or a special session of the General Conference which may be called several years after the adjournment of the regular session? Suppose the clerical principal delegate remains "a member of the Annual Conference which elected him," serves in the regular quadrennial session and is transferred out soon after adjournment, and a special session is called two years afterward; who is to be a member of that called General Conference, the principal or alternate delegate? Paragraph 38 of the Discipline says: "When a General Conference is called, it shall be consituted of the delegates elected to the preceding General Conference, except when an Annual Conference shall prefer to have a new election."

It is obvious that the proposed amendment is limited in its application, for Paragraph 38 remains unamended and intact. Rule 8 (b) of the General Conference required that "Reports from committees recommending concurrence in proposed changes in the Discipline shall give chapter, section, and paragraph to be affected and the language as it will read when adopted." This proposed amendment grew out of Report No. 4 of the Committee on Itinerancy (See 1926 General Conference Journal, p. 239) which dealt exclusively with paragraph No. 33 having to do with the election of delegates.

Since there is no particular urgency in adopting the amendment, would it not be better to postpone the matter and correct the confusing ambiguity before it is written into the law of the church?

The proposed amendment discriminates against clerical delegates elected to the General Conference, and resolves itself into class legislation. A layman elected a principal delegate to the General Conference from the Florida Annual Conference may remove his residence from the State of Florida and live in Vermont and yet continue to hold his church membership back at the "old home church" in Florida and he is entitled to serve in the General Conference, whereas, a clerical delegate-elect may within a day of the convening of the General Conference be transferred from the Florida Conference and he is not entitled to be a member of the General Conference. He may be the best man for his Conference and one whom its members preferred, but as a delegate-elect he is barred from the rights and privileges which this proposed amendment accords to his brother lay delegate. If we must have such legislation, should it not disqualify a layman who moves his residence without the Conference bounds, as well as the clerical delegate who is transferred?

If there were special need for such legislation as is proposed in this amendment, certainly there is no justification for the church's writing so ambiguous and discriminating a law into the Discipline.

If the proposed amendment were specific and unequivocal, there would be no special need of passing it. Delegates are elected within a few months of the General Conference, and it is not probable that any man's memory should be so short or his convictions so unsettled as that he would forget his brethren in a few weeks' time.

The amendment should be defeated and thus avoid ambiguous and class legislation, preserve our connectionalism, and prohibit the possibility of Episcopal appointments changing the Annual Conferences' representatives in the General Conference.

AN UNUSUAL AND SUCCESSFUL REVIVAL PROGRAM.

Dear Brother Carley: Complying with a number of requests that have come to me, I am sending herewith an outline of the program and a brief report of the special revival services held in our church at Arcadia this summer.

The services were conducted by the pastor, assisted by Rev. and Mrs. James T. Harris, of Rochelle, who conducted the song services and the young people's vesper services, and by different members of the church who spoke on given subjects. The plan was unusual, so far as my experience has been, but the results were so wonderful that our people have said that they would not be willing to try any other plan for revival services. There are some advantages to such a plan: The lay members take a greater interest, and it eliminates the enormous expense that usually goes with a revival campaign.

The pastor preached on the following subjects: "The Need of a Revival;" "Sowing the Wind and Reaping the Whirlwind;" "Repentance;" "A Message to Young People;" "Show Thyself a Man;" "What Christianity Has Done for Women and What Women Have Done for Christianity;" "Difficulties That Can Be Surmounted;" "The Christian Home;" "Watch and Pray;" "Assurance of Salvation;" "Say It With Money;" "Be Ye Kind, Forgiving."

Preceding the sermons, brief addresses were delivered by lay members on the following subjects: "Do We Need a Revival?" by J. E. Currie; "Religion and Men," by W. M. Deas; "Religion in Practice," by George P. Goodwin; "Religion and the Bible," by Mrs. E. P. Woodman; "Religion and Music," by Mrs. L. M. Wimberly; "Religion and the Home," by C. M. White; "Religion That Witnesses," by B. F. Barnette; "Religion and Prayer," by Mrs. S. L. Cole; "Religion and Young People," by Mrs. Henry Galloway; "Religion and Business," by Joe S. Andrews; "What the Christian Religion Means to Me," by T. C. Johnson; "Religion and Money," by E. H. Fisher; "Religion and Church Attendance," by F. R. Taylor; "Religion and Courtesy," by Dr. H. D. Shehee; "Religion and Women," by Mrs. Floyd Madden; "Religion and Forgiveness," by Mrs. Eva Shehee.

The attendance was fine. Practically all the pews were filled at the morning services, and at night extra seats had to be provided. it was a wonderful revival. The church was revived, backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners were converted. At the closing service on Sunday evening, over three hundred people came as near to the altar as they could get in a full-surrender consecration service. I verily believe it was the best revival I have ever witnessed. There were eleven additions to the church. The meeting also resulted in the closing of places of business on Sunday that formerly had been kept

GLENDALE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH, JACKSON, MISS.

The above cut presents in some degree the appearance of our newest church building located on Bailey Avenue at Glendale Street in Mississippi's rapidly growing Capitol City, which, since the organization in November, 1926, in the Galloway School building, across the street, has developed a membership of 320, with all of the auxiliary organizations of our church active.

The building is of brick veneer, with adequate Sunday school facilities found in the eight class rooms, with additional space included in the basement, which, with portable partitions, is being used to provide for the continued increase in attendance. Including the lot, the property has been appraised by a local realtor at $33,500.

The corner stone was laid last November, during the session of the Annual Conference, by Bishop U. V. W. Darlington, assisted by Rev. W. M. Williams, President of the Annual Conference Board of Church Extension. The initial services within the new building were conducted on last December 11, at which time Bishops W. A. Candler and Collins Denny brought very helpful and inspiring messages to large congregations.

The first revival meeting was held in the early spring by Rev. W. J. Ferguson, which was a real success. A fall meeting is being planned, which will begin on September 30, for two weeks, with Rev. Dan E. Kelly as the evangelist.

The presiding elder, Dr. J. L. Decell, and the pastor, Rev. C. E. Downer, with a creditable number of loyal members and faithful friends, have labored heroically in attaining the desired goal thus far achieved in providing for a real need in building for and serving Methodism in one of the industrial sections of the city.

A very cordial invitation is extended by the pastor and congregation to all friends and strangers to worship at Glendale when the opportunity is afforded.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found an article giving a bit of history of the Woman's Missionary Society, written by Mrs. L. V. Hamberlin, corresponding secretary.

open. The closing of these places of business on Sunday was voluntary on the part of some and compulsory on the part of others. Very few places of business of any kind are kept open on the Lord's Day now.

Credit should be given Rev. and Mrs. James T. Harris for the faithful work they did in the song services and services for the young people. They are talented, and, above all, consecrated. Brother Harris also gave an address on his trip to the Holy Land.

The pastor also conducted the revival services at Mount Moriah, an afternoon appointment. There were fifteen additions to the church there.

Yours sincerely,

G. A. MORGAN, P. C.

INFORMATION FOR MEMBERS OF MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE INSURANCE GROUP FROM W. D. DAVIS, TREASURER.

Dear Brethren: As only a few of the members have paid their premiums for the second quarter, beginning Aug. 10 and ending Nov. 10, I am sure that most of you do not know when, or to whom, to make payments. All premium payments should be made to the undersigned, and premium instalments for the second quarter are now due, and have been due since Aug. 10. The amounts of premiums for the second quarter are given, as follows:

For $1,000 of insurance, $3.75.
For $2,000 of insurance, $7.50.
For $3,000 of insurance, $11.25.

If you have not made payment for the second quarter, I would appreciate receiving your remittance promptly, as I should remit the Equitable Life Assurance Society in advance.

Yours cordially,

W. D. DAVIS, Treasurer.

HOME-COMING DAY AT CARROLLTON AVENUE CHURCH.

Dear Dr. Carley: Sunday, Sept. 23, has been designated as "Home-Coming Day" at our Carrollton Avenue Church, New Orleans. It is the first Sunday after the reopening of the public schools, and the most of our people will be at home from vacations. We hope to have every resident member attend some service that Sunday.

We are glad that our work has held up so well over the summer. The Sunday school has fallen below 200 only once, and that a rainy Sunday. Prayer meetings have ranged from sixteen to thirty-five in attendance. All departments of work have kept busy.

The fall plans include some special days: Sept. 23, Home-Coming Day; Sept. 30, Sunday School Promotion Day; Oct. 7, College Students' Day; Oct. 14, Training Day, and Orphanage Day; Oct. 21, Survey Day; Oct. 28, Missionary Day; Nov. 4, Consecration Day; Nov. 11, Armistice Day; Nov. 18, End of Conference Year.

We will appreciate Methodist parents writing us of the coming of their sons and daughters to college, or to the city, for we are building up our young people's work especially just now, and their timely word will help us to get in touch with these young people.

We will also appreciate our own people, who read this, helping us attain our five goals for the fall:

1. To increase church and Sunday schoool and prayer meeting atteudance.
2. To complete our Conference year in full.
3. To enlarge our young people's work.
4. To survey our community.
5. Our goal all the time—to win some souls for Christ and the church.

BEER AND WHISKEY AT HOME AND ABROAD.

By William C. Allen.

Following my sixteenth visit to England it may be interesting to consider the temperance situation in that country and the reactions there from America.

In conversation with a leading London temperance worker I enquired when he thought the empire would undertake prohibition. He sadly replied, "Not for a long time."

On July 18, 1928, the ministry of labor reported that at that time there were 205,884 more unemployed persons than one year before. A labor correspondent of the London Daily News has this summer estimated that the total population on the poverty line, or actually below it, is between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 people. This is in a population far less than that of the United States. When we recollect the admittedly close relationship between intoxicants and much of the poverty of the world, we are almost agbast as we think of the economic prospects of hundreds of thousands of families in our beautiful sister country across the Atlantic.

Apparently whilst many of the humbler classes of Great Britain do not care about the future effects of intemperance, not a few leaders of the Labor and Liberal parties are keenly alive thereto. These men have been contending with the Tory party—now in power—because of the grip the last-mentioned organization has upon the protection and so-called regulation of the traffic in drink. This attitude of the Labor leaders has been evidenced during late debates in Parliament growing out of the proposal to reduce by one-quarter the licenses paid to the government by the public houses (saloons) of England. Philip Snowden, Ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer (Labor party), when contesting suggestions to help the brewers, stated that whilst it was true the consumption of drink had fallen since the war, the profits of the trade had risen from $10,000,000 to $24,000,000 per year. He proved that despite efforts to make it appear that the beer and whiskey businesses were "depressed," the profits on the turnover since 1914 had increased 200 per cent. "This," ironically exclaimed Snowden, "is the depreessed industry!" As over the world, so it is in England, you give the business an inch and it takes an ell.

If one glances through the financial columns of the London newspapers it may be seen that whilst not a few big concerns representing various industries have announced meager or no gains since the war, the beer and spirit businesses have almost invariably reported huge profits and dividends on the capital invested. These breweries and whiskey houses prosper on the habits and weaknesses of their customers, many of whom are in the lower strata of society.

Statistics comparing the arrests or convictions for drunkenness in England or her commonwealths with those in the United States are often misleading. I have seen men staggering or roiling into gutters, unsteady men and women guzzling and jamming the doors of the public houses just as they did in American cities forty years ago. Few seem to consider such sights worthy of notice. Such sights no longer obtain in the United States. The incisive replies to questions addressed at random to workmen on the American streets, the milk bottles and "full dinner pails" witnessed at the noon hour are all in striking contrast to experiences in other countries where even under government control intoxicants are used. Yet most English and colonial newspapers fail to publish facts as to the many successes of prohibition in America.

Apparently a majority of the English people desire to see a breakdown of prohibition in America. Many families in the peerage, rich members of Parliament, some great endowments and trusts derive a large part of their incomes from the traffic in intoxicants. It seems to be inevitable that many leaders of public opinion under such circumstances look leniently upon rum-running into the United States. This attitude is largely rooted in the belief that if prohibition is successful in America, it will be only a question of time when England, in order to maintain a leading economic position, must face the onward march of reform. Personal habits must then be changed, beer and spirit profits will be diminished. As far as can be seen—in spite of much propaganda to the contrary—the fact is gradually being recognized that whereas American workers have a wonderful variety of delightful soft drinks, save money and enjoy many home comforts, and keep clear-headed and efficient, their English brethren are often handicapped by drink. All the difference cannot be laid to prohibition, but a large part of it can be. If we are disposed to take a selfish view of the world-wide drink situation, the economic prospects of America seem very bright. But the true reformer in the United States does not wish to be selfish—his desire is to help humanity abroad.

Among the stirring advocates of temperance in England are Lord and Lady Astor. The former will go anywhere, preside at any meeting, lend the prestige of his great wealth and social position on behalf of the cause. Because of his untiring fight on the entrenched foes of temperance he has forfeited the notable political preferment which might have been his for the asking. Lord Astor is of American descent. His wife was a Virginian.

Returning to America this summer there sat near us in the dining saloon of the steamship Republic a family of German-Americans, consisting of the parents and five beautifully behaved children. One day the father talked about the coming presidential election. He claimed that prior to national prohibition about 20 per cent of the fathers' incomes in very many families had gone to drink. With prohibition a large part of that kind of expenditure had ceased. As a consequence many of the women of the United States have telephones, radios, cars, many other home enjoyments and happier home life. He argued that if only an implied setback to prohibition seizes the country a slow-coming but ultimate radical change for the worse in the position and pleasures of American women may be expected. He impressively emphasized his belief that the result rests with the women of America.

FROM EGG BEATER TO THE UNIVERSE.

A certain manufacturer makes a simple egg beater in sixteen parts. He says you can put those parts in a churn and turn them for a thousand years but you will get no egg beater by chance. It takes intelligence even to put this simple egg beater together.

The writer went to see the Ford motor works, and the car in its some four thousand parts came off the moving table under its own power. He did not conclude from the relative perfection of the machine that there was no mind behind it, but went in to see the inventor, to try to come in touch with the mind of the man behind the machine.

So, if he sees this vast universe, not a simple egg beater, or motor mechanism, but from each electron in its mathematical orbit, from each element in the periodic scale of its atomic weight, to the calculable motions of the heavenly bodies and the infinite sweep of the ordered universe as a whole, he can say with Darwin that "the mind refuses to look upon it as the outcome of chance that is, without purpose or design."

He is forced to seek to come to terms with this whole of reality, this source of life, this infinite and eternal energy, this cause or ground which includes truth, goodness, and beauty, the little flower, the mind of man, and Jesus of Nazareth. This reality must be great enough to include them all.—Sherwood Eddy.

MY BOOKS.

By Rev. J. L. Greenway.

My precious books, with you I dwell,
And read again those truths you tell;
To me you brought your golden store,
Of every age from every shore.

You are my friends, I love you dear;
Along the way you brought me cheer;
The best of earth by tongue and pen
Is mine to have and yours to lend.

In quest of truth, through you I've gained
What made me rich in heart and brain;
With generous hand you have sought to give
The thoughts worth while, the thoughts that live.

Some things you say I cannot see;
I think you're wrong, yet I may be;
But right or wrong, still let us be
As friends of old, and disagree.

Sometimes you've seemed a bit unkind,
Your abstract truths were hard to find,
Like precious gold hid far from sight,
I've had to seek with all my might.

But some of you were wondrous kind;
You brought me truth for heart and mind;
When burdens pressed and all seemed dark,
You eased the load and cheered my heart.

With you I've walked in distant lands,
And roamed mid ruins great and grand.
I've read the greatness of mankind
By that which they have left behind.

I've stood with you in courts of kings,
Mid pomp and power and pride of things;
Seen empires rise in strength of might
And fall mid ruins in a night.

With you I've stood on battlefields,
Mid roar of guns and clash of steel;
I've seen the ground made crimson red,
With blood of dying and the dead.

I've talked with men of every clime,
Of every age, their thought made mine;
Like ships which sail with cargoes rare,
These books are rich beyond compare.

I'd not forget the Muses' treat,
Who for me sang in lays most sweet;
Like babbling brooks or zephyr breeze,
Or sunny banks or shady trees.

Amid them all is one alone,
It giveth light and borrows none;
The Book of Life, it points the way
To endless bliss and fadeless day.

SEEN AT A GLANCE.

By Rev. R. S. Satterfield, D.D.

Bill Rogers says that all he knows is what he sees in the papers. Most of what I know about church matters is what I learn in glancing over the church papers. Friend, how do you preserve your self-respect and fail to read the church papers?

The editor asked for 1,020 new subscribers to the Baltimore Southern Methodist in a given time. They gave him 1,340. A lot of Methodists over in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and District of Columbia are piannning to preserve their self-respect. I venture to prophesy that there are thirteen hundred and forty other Southern Methodists in that territory who would gladly take the paper if the preacher would only tell them what a good paper Dr. Harris is making.

And do you know what has happened in Missouri, where Dr. C. O. Ransford is making one if the best papers in the church? The income for the past year of the St. Louis Christian Advocate has been $2,700 more than the previous year; the indebtedness is the lowest it has been at any time for eight years, except for a brief period in 1922, and the circulation is the largest it has been in five years. Come on, brethren, and let's circulate all the church papers. The day of their usefulness has not passed.

A bishop's son becomes a college president. Dr. John J. Tigert, who has been United States Commissioner of Education for seven years, has resigned to accept the presidency of the University of Florida. His father was Bishop J. J. Tigert, who died at Tulsa in 1906 from getting a chicken bone in his throat at the table of this writer, and his mother was a daughter of Bishop McTyeire. When Dr. Tigert became Commissiner of Education he succeeded Dr. P. P. Claxton, who resigned to become superintendent of schools in the city of Tulsa, Oklahoma, at a salary of $13,000, I believe. Dr. Claxton is a lifelong Southern Methodist. He is superintendent of the Sunday school of our Boston Avenue Church, Tulsa. It will not be easy for President Coolidge to find a successor to Dr. Tigert, who is an equal of the two great educators and church men.

Rev. A. M. Anglin, one of the younger and best trained men of his Conference, took ill and died suddenly on July 27. His widow is serving the charge, Wilson, Okla., until Conference. Mrs. Anglin is a bright young woman who has for several years gone forward with her husband serving and continuing to take college, pastors-school and standard training school courses. It is quite proper that she should finish out the year at Wilson. This is an example of progress made by Methodists since Samuel Wesley objected so emphatically to Susanna Wesley, his wife and the mother of John Wesley, instructing the Epworth Christians during his absence from home.

The reader of our church papers is impressed with the fact that this is not a year of outstanding revivalism, as had been hoped, but rather a year of political agitation, intensity of feelings and the waging of a real battle between the hosts of iniquity and the forces of righteousness. May this not prove to be the real revival that is most needed?

Mr. Tabb needed a wife; and so Mr. W. E. Tabb, from Georgia, and Miss Mary Taylor Myers, from North Carolina, on their way to be missionaries in Africa, stopped in Brussels, Belgium, long enough to get married. May they have a happy honeymoon and live and serve for many moons in that far-off, dark land!

Bishop S. R. Hay preached recently in our First Church at Stockton, Calif., where his son, Rev. Horace Hay, is a pastor. I believe only one other of our living bishops has a son who is a preacher. Rev. James Cannon III, a member of the Virginia Conference and a professor in Duke University at Durham, N. C., is a son of Bishop James Cannon, Jr. A son-in-law of Bishop E. D. Mouzon, Rev. J. R. Spann, is pastor at Abilene, Tex. Two outstanding brothers in the church are Dr. F. S. Parker, General Epworth League Secretary, and Dr. F. N. Parker, Dean of the Candler School of Theology, Emory University. Their father was Bishop Linus Parker. Dr. F. N. Parker is the only man in the church now living who was elected bishop but refused to be ordained.

The Texas Christian Advocate publishes an article from the British Weekly telling of the work of Dr. Campbell Morgan in the Los Angeles Bible Institute. Dr. Morgan makes his home in Los Angeles and lectures twice a week in the institute. He is engaged much of the time in extension lecture work. Dr. Morgan "wishes his friends to know that the institute has no link with ultra-Modernism on the one hand or with bigoted literalism on the other." Dr. Morgan is a world figure in biblical interpretation. He is an Englishman, reared in the Wesleyan Methodist church.

Mr. L. F. Sensabaugh, a son of a Methodist preacher who has long been a leader, has resigned as Superintendent of the Department of Sunday School Administration, General Board, Nashville, to become director of religious education in our great Boston Avenue Church, Tulsa, Okla. Mr. Sensabaugh rendered conspicuous service in developing the Department of Training Work of the General Sunday School Board, following Dr. J. W. Shackford, who laid the foundation and brought this department to a place of recognition in the church. He has also served well in the department of administration. His successor is Rev. O. W. Moerner, who surrenders the position of first assistant to Rev. J. Q. Schisler, Department of Training Work, to Rev. Horace W. Williams, who has been second assistant to Mr. Schisler. The two latter are Texas men, both graduates of Southern Methodist University. Each of them has shown his aptitude and fitness for the work they are doing in the department of training work.

I have just read the manuscripts for two new books to he used the coming year in our church work. One is by Dr. O. E. Goddard on evangelism, and the other by Dr. J. E. Crawford on stewardship for the whole of life. These books are timely, written in fine spirit, and will meet real needs. The first is the study book for the January-February period of special missionary culture, and the second is the standard book for use in Stewardship Year which is set for 1929 throughout the church.

The decision to alter and improve the large umbrella-shaped auditorium at Lake Junaluska at a cost of approximately $5,000 and rename it "George Stuart Memorial Auditorium" will surely meet with wide approval. Dr. Stuart had much to do with launching and developing the Lake Junaluska property. The beautiful summer home of this late churchman is one of the most attractive places at Juniauska. The General Board of Lay Activities has taken this property over and proposes to get it out of debt and turn it over to the church. That is just fine!

AN OUTLINE FOR US REFORMERS.

Follow the line of nature with me for a while and you shall, I am sure, enjoy the exhiliaration of its sudden bumps and twists.

You begin by watching a wrong, and then you define it and bring it out by setting it against a background of principles.

Then you get hot thinking of the injustice thus committed under your wary eye.

Then you fight to have it righted and feel very grand in thus taking up the cause of justice which, of course, wins; for not only is right the favorite cause of the Lord of Hosts, but also you happen to be the stronger, which is never a drawback in such affairs.

Then you find yourself so jolly in this position of power, which has enabled you to do the right thing, that you pass insensibly to the assumption that everything about you is right, so that right thoughts spring in your brain and right actions flow from your finger tips as a matter of nature.

Then you hear a murmur, hardly perceptible at first, and, when perceived, hardly comprehensible; for it comes from those you have freed, the victims of yesterday, who complain that they have but changed their kind of oppression.

Then you, strain your ears, and O horror! the oppressor now is you; at least, so they say.

That, of course, cannot be. How can you, the knight of liberty and justice, who took up arms to defend them, how can you . . .?

Of course it is unthinkable. Those people are foolish. They simply do not deserve the trouble you took on their behalf. The fact is, they do not know how to govern themselves.

And then it dawns upon you that there is nothing for it but to take matters in your own hand—until they are of age, at any rate— that is, until they show their wisdom by accepting your rule.—Salvador de Madaragg.

I saw an angel standing strong
And tall as hills that climb the sky;
His words were as a triumph song
Which, chiming, said, "Thou shalt not die."

KING JEROME AND THE GOLDENROD.

By Daisy M. Moore.

Jerome was king of all the flowers
A long, long time ago;
No king has ever lived indeed,
Who loved his subjects so.

He always bore a golden rod
As many rulers do,
And where he touched the earth with it
New flowers always grew.

The springtime blooms were gay enough
To bring the king delight,
And he declared the summer flowers
A gorgeous, cheering sight!

But when the August days came on
And flowers were short and few,
Jerome's round face smiled less and less
His kind eyes puzzled grew.

He was perplexed to see his flowers
Grow drowsy, droop and nod;
In his distress he tapped the earth
Unthinking with his rod.

Then up there sprung a host of blooms
To glow on every hand;
A thousand gleaming, golden plumes
Adorned the autumn land.

Small matter now, if some flowers slept
Above the browning sod;
Jerome's great heart was glad once more;
He called them Goldenrod.

—The New Outlook.

WHEN GRANDFATHER PLAYED "HUNT THE DEER."

Roger looked at the picture in his reader after he had read the story about William Penn and the indians.

"The Indians liked William Penn," he thought to himself "because he kept his promises. And they were kind to other Englishmen after that because they remembered this man's kindness to them."

"But I guess," the boy said out loud, "that most Indians were not like these. I'm glad there aren't any living near us now."

"What's that?" asked Roger's grandfather, looking up from his paper. "You don't like Indians?"

"Most indians are cruel, aren't they?" Roger went on. "Did you ever know any Indians, grandfather?"

"When I was a boy," began the old man slowly, "we lived near a large settlement of Indians. The children came to our school when they went to school at all. Indian boys like to hunt, fish and play in the open too well to be fond of going to school.

"No," mused the grandfather, "the Indians we knew were not cruel. They were kind people. And the children made fine playmates. Oh, how fast those Indian boys could run! That may have been the reason they liked to play running games so well. I remember one boy especially. He had a long Indian name that was hard to pronounce. So when he came to our school for a short time the teacher called him Joe. After that he was known by this new name.

"Well, this Joe could run faster than any of us. Not even the other Indian boys could beat him. So, whenever we boys would get together Joe would say, 'Let's play Hunt-the-Deer'."

"How did you play it?" asked Roger eagerly.

"Some sand was tied in a piece of red flannel," explained his grandfather. "The catcher carried that, and all the rest of the boys were deer until the catcher was able to strike them with his queer red ball. Each boy that was struck became a dog. Then he was to help catch the deer. Well, after all the boys but one had become dogs, it was a real deer hunt. And when Joe played, he was usually the one that was the last to be caught."

Roger's grandfather stopped talking for a minute and smiled to himself as he remembered something.

"Tell it," coaxed Roger, suspecting that it was a story that made his grandfather smile.

"I was thinking about one time, when I was the catcher in the deer hunt," began the old man. "There was snow on the ground that day, which made hunting hard work. As the deer started off ahead, I looked at the boy who wore a black fur cap with a tail fastened to the top of it. That was Joe. I decided to do my best to catch him that day. We didn't like to have Joe the last deer every time.

"Over the hills, through brush and across a frozen creek the deer rushed with me following behind. As the boys scattered, I kept that black fur cap in sight and ran straight toward it. Knowing I would need some dogs to help me, I threw the red ball at some of the others. I managed to hit two or three good runners.

"Well, the other boys were as anxious to catch Joe as I was. So they went as fast as they could, some going to the right and some to the left, that they might keep that black fur cap in sight.

"On and on Joe went, running like a real deer, it seemed to us. Then suddenly, as we followed through brush and over stones, that fast runner disappeared from sight. The dogs looked this way and that, pretending to scent the trail as real dogs do.

"By this time we were so tired that we had to rest a little while. Then we discovered tracks leading into some dense brush. We thought we had him cornered. But at that minute Joe darted out from the other end of the clump of brush and started off at full speed. As sly as a fox, he had crept into that brush to rest, and we hadn't discovered him in time to surround him. And now the black fur cap with tail bobbing up and down was far ahead.

Presently we planned to divide. Some of the boys were to cut across through the woods and the rest were to follow the regular trail.

"The 'dogs' who had cut across surprised Joe and made him run back and forth. He lost enough time in this way to allow us to catch up. With the red ball I rushed up and threw it at the fast runner. Being tired by this time, I guess I slipped in the snow as I threw.

"Missed!" cried some of the boys as Joe darted on. 'It hit his scarf, though.' The rule was that the deer must feel the sand ball.

"Over a little hill Joe ran. When we came to the top of it, he wasn't in sight. While we were looking around, we heard a 'Hi-yi' from behind, and there sat Joe resting on a stone. He had slipped around that hill and got behind us."

"Give me that,' he called, indicating the flannel ball. 'You've won.'

"'We didn't think it hit you,' we said.

"'It just barely touched this arm,' declared Joe. 'But it did hit me,' he added solemnly.

"Yes," mused Roger's grandfather as he finished the story. "The Indian boys made the best kind of playmates. For they always played fair."—Junior World.

MARIA AND GRANADA.

By Mildred Elliot.

Maria and her sisters live in Granada, the most romantic city in Spain. Once upon a time the Moors reigned there, and they built the most fairy-like palace in the world—the Alhambra. Granada lies in a green, enchanting plain, under the snow-capped range of the Sierra Nevada: and on a hill rising about the city stands the Alhambra.

Marie knows the Alhambra by heart. She has gone there day after day to study it. She is only twelve years old, and she does not know anything about architecture or about the Moors. She does not even know how to read or to write, for Spain does not give her children so good an education as does America. But Maria knows all about the decorations of the Alhambra, for she weaves them into lace.

The sisters sit every day and make the beautiful Granada lace. It is beautiful because it is copied from the exquisite Moorish ornamentation of the old palace. The ceilings of the Alhambra are mostly composed of cedar wood inlaid with mother-of-pearl, looking something like a honeycomb or stalactite roof in a cave. The meshes of the lace can imitate the patterns, and Maria knows most of the beautiful old designs by heart.

Then there is the marvelous Moorish tiling, in patterns like frostwork, and the daintily chiseled arches and niches and pillars, which were once gilded and colored and still have traces of color. There are wonderful screens and casements, in such gossamer framework that they look like lace draperies, and these Maria and her sisters have studied out and have copied over and over again. If they get tired of one pattern, all the girls have to do is to go up and take another look at a screen or a tile, and try a new design.

One thing is left out of the lace, though. Maria cannot even read Spanish, so she cannot understand the Arabic inscriptions that are interwoven with the Alhambra decorations. They often are only one short word, such as "Blessing" or "Welcome." But in the Court of the Lions, where the alabaster fountain with its basin cut from one solid block and resting on the backs of twelve sculptured lions, stands in the center, there is a long inscription cut around the edge of the basin.

Maria is not a bit like the Moorish princesses who used to live in the palace. Often she does not get enough to eat. Bread, onions, garlic, fruit, cheese, and sour wine are the best that she knows. But she has all the pride of a Spaniard in her city and its beauty.

As she weaves her lace, she thinks how the tourists will exclaim over its loveliness, and buy it at a good price so that some day, perhaps, she can have a guitar of her own and a silver comb for her black hair, to hold the graceful mantilla. The mantillas and the combs are beautiful, and the tourists buy them when they can. Maria never intends to sell hers, and she hopes some day to be the best lacemaker in Granada.—Queen's Gardens.

THE BAFFLING BUT UPHOLDING BOOK.

I would say with gladness if I were offering an opinion, that a sure mark of the inspiration of the Scriptures is that they forever baffle us. We always know they are too big for us.

I believe a brain can get cogent enough and severe enough in its logic process, and ample enough in its might, to be able to comprehend everything that Francis Bacon wrote. I think our brains would be brawnier than their wont if they so did. It can be done.

But no mightiest intelligence that ever fronted facts could ever in its normal moods of loudest self-appreciation deem itself great enough to grapple with these ineffable propositions of the Book of God.

There are geometries whose theorems are not possible to see through. There are geometries whose axioms baffle angels. The self-evident truths are so immeasurable by human understanding that on the low ground of the axiom our mathematics are staggered, dumbfounded, and lost.

It is the glory of this preacher, as the glory of any other preacher, that in handling naked-handed this colossal Word of Life he is always dealing with matters beyond him But as a boat, though it be little, can be rowed over the deepest sea, and the depths bewilder it but billow it up, even so on this incredible Book of God a small craft may adventure and not be destroyed by the depth, but be imperiled by it and upholden.—Bishop Quayle.

A MODERNIST INDICTS MODERNISM.

about an unrevealed God rises to the level of real Christian worship.

Liberalism does not furnish the conditions for such true worship. Hence, as Dr. Spence frankly confesses, "liberalism chills religious enthusiasm" and causes liberalists "to abandon the house of prayer." How could it be otherwise?

Men must worship the God of the Bible, or they will cease to worship at all.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Miss Elizabeth Langford, Louisiana Epworth League Field Secretary, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Wednesday of last week.

We express our thanks to Mr. D. M. Killgore, Lisbon, La., for two subscriptions recently sent in. This makes eight subscriptions recently sent from Libson.

At the recent session of the Kentucky Conference, Rev. Roy H. Kleiser, formerly a member of the Mississippi Conference, was reappointed for the second year to Danville.

Judge Eugene S. Blease, associate justice of the South Carolina Supreme Court, has accepted the general campaign chairmanship to increase the endowment of Lander College.

Dr. G. Bromley Oxnam will be inaugurated as president of DePauw University on Oct. 12. Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, former president of DePauw, will give the inaugural address.

The board of stewards of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., has unanimously adopted a resolution requesting the return for another year of the pastor, Dr. Robert E. Goodrich.

Rev. J. L. Pierce, presiding elder of the North Atlanta District, died suddenly at his home in Decatur, Ga., on Monday of last week. He was a brother of Dr. A. M. Pierce, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

Rev. Earl B. Emmerich, a student in the Candler School of Theology, Emory University, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call on Monday of this week. He will return to Emory in a few days to continue his work.

The annual meeting of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is called to meet on Thursday of this week. The Advocate goes to press too early for any report of the meeting in this issue.

Rev. Robert A. Cross, Jr., preached at the Felicity Methodist Church, this city, last Sunday evening. Brother Cross is returning to Emory University this week to continue his work in the Candler School of Theology.

Sherman Potter, a sixteen-year-old Negro schoolboy of Ohio, has been awarded a Carnegie hero medal and given $1,600 for educational purposes in recognition of his heroism in saving a white schoolmate from drowning.

The "check-up" meeting for the Baton Rouge District, announced to be held at Hammond, La., on Tuesday of last week, was, for good reasons, postponed until Tuesday of this week. Mr. T. Wynn Holloman, Conference Lay Leader, presided.

Bishop J. C. Hartzell, retired, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died on Sept. 6 as the result of injuries received when he was attacked by robbers in his home a few weeks ago. He was 86 years old. He had given many years of his life to service among the Negroes.

We learn from the Tensas Gazette that Mr. Robert Davis and Miss May Davis, son and daughter of the late Rev. R. A. Davis, of the Louisiana Conference, were recent visitors to friends in Waterproof, La., where their father was once pastor. Their home is in Houston, Tex.

Rev. B. P. Fullilove, an honored superannuate member of the North Mississippi Conference, visted friends and relatives in Kosciusko, Miss., recently, and while there preached at the Methodist church at 11 o'clock Sunday morning, on invitation of the pastor, Rev. R. P. Neblett.

Rev. John L. Williams, superintendent of the Louisiana Child Finding Society, assisted Rev. H. W. Jordan, our pastor at Covington, La., in a meeting last week, the services coming to a close on Sunday night. The meeting was well attended and gracious results followed.

Rev. C. B. White, of the Marksville charge, assisted the pastor, Rev. G. D. Purcell, in a successful revival recently at the Hopewell church, on the Oberlin charge, Louisiana Conference, in which there were sixteen additions to the membership of the church on profession of faith.

Dr. Theodore Copeland, evangelist, writes from Jonesboro, Tenn.: "I am here in a great union revival meeting. We are having conversions at every service. Bishop E. E. Hoss was born, converted, and joined the church here. He is buried here. Governor Robert L. Taylor once lived here."

A tent meeting by the Methodist pastors of Corinth, Miss., was scheduled to begin last Sunday. The tent is placed on Speedway, just north of Bunch Street. It is expected that this fall evangelistic campaign will be a great blessing to the churches and the community. The music is in charge of Mr. Ed. Marecle.

The Sunday School Council of the First Methodist Church, Shreveport, La., has unanimously and earnestly requested the official board of the church to work out plans as soon as possible for the erection of a Sunday school building, the present facilities being utterly inadequate for the needs of the present school. According to the statement of the Council, the First Church Sunday school is the largest in the connection.

Carl Frederick Lueg and John Thurlow Barrett, both members of Epworth Church, this city, were licensed to preach last Saturday by the licensing committee of the New Orleans District. Brother Lueg is a member of the junior class at Centenary College this year, and Brother Barrett is entering the freshman class. It is their purpose to apply for admission on trial in the Louisiana Conference after they have completed their educational preparation.

From an article, "Going to Church," by E. H. Cason, in a recent number of "The Big Brother," Greenville, Miss.: "The preacher needs us. He cannot possibly feel the same inspiration in preaching to a lot of empty pews that he does in preaching to a good congregation. Let's help the preacher, for he is human, just like you and me." Worth thinking about by all those who think they have done their duty in attending the Sunday school class without going to the preaching service.

Miss Julia McGowan, representing the Epworth League of St. Mark's, New Orleans, won first place in the finals of the "Know Missions" oratorical contest sponsored by the Epworth League Board and the Board of Missions. The final contest was held in Nashville on Saturday of last week. Miss McGowan received a prize of $100 and a gold medal. Miss Jeanne Davis, Brunswick, Ga., won second place; Miss Dorothy Cooper, West Palm Beach, Fla., won third place, and Thomas R. Strange, Ardmore, Okla., won fourth place.

Rev. G. A. LaGrange, our pastor at Lockport, La., writes: "We were assisted in a revival recently by Rev. A. D. Martin, pastor of the Terrebonne charge. The result for good was very encouraging—seven Roman Catholics united with our church, and two more families are pending. Brother Martin is doing good work on his charge, especially among the Indians at Dulac. Our church has one of the best openings there that we ever had in the French field. It is to be hoped that our church will not sleep before that open door. Now is the time to build a house of worship for them."

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

Possibly in all literature there cannot be found an analogy more beautiful and instructive than the close relation which exists between the shepherd and his flock. To rulers, to pastors, to men having authority over others in church and State, the shepherd of the hills and fields is a vivid standing lesson or example of patience, care, vigilance and needed wisdom to them. Nor time, nor age, nor use, has dimmed the lustre, or taken aught of value from the worth and the ever existent application of this relation. David, the ruddy-cheeked lad, following or leading his flock in the Syrian wild, watching the myriad stars wheeling in rhythmic splendor in fields of glory, or battling for the safety of the helpless ones with bear or lion, has caught the imagination of the world and enshrined his name in its best literature. And God took him from the sheep path and fold and made him "shepherd of Israel and of Jacob, his inheritance." No doubt the wisdom garnered in the great open spaces and anon amidst the beetling crags and rocky hills, contribute no little to the success of his splendid reign as king and father of his people. For, after all, ruling men and building a nation, are by far a greater and even more dangerous task than guarding sheep from the attacks of bear or lion. Pastor, pastorate, shepherd of Christ's flock, how the term has woven itself into the very heart and history of the church! The Bible again and again uses this relation. The Master thereby expressed his intimate love and care for his own. I leave the old, yet ever new lesson with you that seeing you may see, and hearing you may understand. If there were need, I might say more.

Disregard for law, organic and legislative, in the end means disregard for the rights and privileges of our citizens. For you cannot escape the conclusion that the sanctions of law depend upon a moral force for execution. We accuse some of our Central American republics of submitting to the rule of a dictator—the man in the saddle—and yet we endure most open and scandalous violation of the fundamental principles of our State Constitutions. About the only difference between a dictator in one of the Latin countries and a dictator in the United States is, they shoot their opponents, and the American dictator murders the law.

Edward Everett has well said, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This precious boon was purchased at the price of tears, suffering, and death on the part of our forbears. And every true citizen of this great commonwealth is constituted by the law of the land a keeper and guardian. Let every true American be on guard.

POLITICAL TEXTS.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

Choice.

Ask and it shall be given.
Ask—ask.
And if you ask a stone,
Expect not bread;
And if the stone glitter like a caught star,
And shine on a warm, soft breast,
And you have tossed your soul away,
To see it in that nest,
Yet is it still a stone—not bread.

Seek and you shall find.
Seek—seek.
And if you go to the crowded street,
Look not to find the hills;
And if the shops sit gay along the way,
And laughter fills the air,
Still—you have lost the hills.

Knock and the door shall open.
Knock—knock.
Two doors are there, beware!
Think well before you knock;
Your tapping finger will unlock
Your heaven or hell.

—Ellen Coit Elliott, in The Christian Century.

We often abuse the promises of the Holy Scriptures, and none is quite so imposed on, as it were, than the verse, "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you." We do not stop to question, "Ask what, seek what, knock where?" In no place is it said that the sinner, unless he be seeking for forgiveness, shall ask and receive. It is the effectual, earnest prayer of the righteous that availeth much. Only too often we ask for temporal blessings, for fame and fortune; we seek the things of this world; we knock at doors that we think will open unto us untold joys of a worldly nature. If we ask of our Father bread, he will not give us a stone, but only too often we ask for the stone. Maybe it is a precious stone we desire instead of the bread of life; maybe it is a stone that will make a great mansion; maybe it is a stepping stone to success. That is not what our Savior meant when he said, "Ask and ye shall receive." Rather he meant that we should ask of him wisdom, and counsel and advice and spiritual blessings. When we ask these in faith, he will give us such an abundance above all we can ask or think.

And what shall we seek? Plainly it is told us, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you." Was it not so with Solomon when he asked for wisdom? He was given riches and honor and fame. We are told to seek the Lord while he may be found and to call upon him while he is near. Alas, we are so busy seeking the things we think will make us happy—wealth, amusement, diversion—that we do not realize there is some one else going about seeking whom he may devour.

And then if we will only knock at the right door! There are so many that will open to us, and inside there are many alluring, tempting things; but we must remember there is a door that will lead to our doom. One of the most beautiful pictures is that of Christ standing knocking at the doors of our heart. If we will but open to him and let him come in, then indeed he will stand by our side when we knock and will let us enter in with him to the joys he has provided for all who love him and keep his commandments.

MEETING, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The Board of Education of the Louisiana Conference is called to meet at the First Methodist Church, New Orleans, at 10 o'clock a.m., Tuesday, Sept. 25. The purpose of the meeting is to consider the educational situation of the Conference, with special reference to the Conference Educational Bond Issue, and to take such action as may seem wise. Bishop Warren A. Candler will be present. All the presiding elders, all the chairmen of other Conference Boards and all others interested are cordially invited to attend this meeting.

H. T. CARLEY, Chairman,
Louisiana Conference Board of Education.

CALL FOR MISSISSIPPI STATE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION.

The Forty-Second Annual Convention of the Mississippi Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in Jackson, Oct. 10-11-12, 1928, in the Young People's Auditorium of the First Baptist Church. All State officers and superintendents should attend and give reports of their work. Each local union is requested to send its full quota of delegates.

All who expect to attend are requested to send their names to Mrs. R. L. Ezelle, 1002 Arlington Avenue.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union stands for Total Abstinence and Prohibition because, "We believe in the Gospel of the Golden Rule, and that each man's habits of life should be an example safe and beneficial for every other man to follow."

The purpose of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as set forth in the Declaration of Principles, written by Frances E. Willard and adopted in 1874 is as follows:

"We declare our purpose to educate the young; to form a better public sentiment; to reform, so far as possible, by religious, ethical and scientific means, the drinking classes; to seek the transforming power of Divine grace for ourselves and all for whom we work, that they and we may willfully transcend no law of pure and wholesome living; and finally we pledge ourselves to labor and pray that all these principles, founded upon the Gospel of Christ, may be worked out into the customs of society and the laws of the land."

We affirm our loyalty to these principles and invite the attendace and co-operation of all who are in sympathy with them.

ADMISSION ON TRIAL.

There seems to have been some confusion in the matter of the texts on which applicants for Admission on Trial into the traveling connection of the North Mississippi Conference were to be examined. The committee before whom the candidates come has taken the matter up with Bishop Candler, who says: "You are only examined upon the books laid down in the Discipline."

This means that the "Tongue of Fire," by Arthur, and "Personal Salvation," by Tillett, will not be required for passing this year. Only the four texts mentioned in the Discipline on pages 416-417, and the written statement as there required, will be necessary to report on to the committee.

Certificates from the Correspondence Schools will be accepted, provided the grades are satisfactory; or the candidates may take the written examination before the committee at the session of the Conference at Pontotoc.

A LITTLE SILVER.

A parable taken from a Jewish folk-play, presumably "The Dybbuk," follows:

"One day a certain old rich man, of a miserly disposition, visited a rabbi, who took the rich man by the hand and led him to a window. 'Look out there,' he said. And the rich man looked out into the street.

"'What do you see?' asked the rabbi.

"'I see men, and women, and little children,' answered the rich man.

"Again the rabbi took him by the hand, and this time led him to a mirror. 'What do you see now?'

"'Now I see myself,' the rich man replied.

"Then the rabbi said: 'Behold—in the window there is glass, and in the mirror there is glass. But the glass of the mirror is covered with a little silver, and no sooner is the silver added than you cease to see others but see only yourself.'"—The Churchman.

On Friday, Sept. 7, the home of Mrs. Celia L. Leftwich was made sad by the news received at her home at Denham Springs, La., that her only son, LYSLE, had been killed in a car wreck while going to California. Everybody says that Lysie was an exceptionally good boy. He joined the Asbury Methodist church in Los Angeles when only 15 years of age. Since then he has been true to his church vows, and a consistent follower of his Lord. Dying at the age of 21 years and 9 months, without doubt, it may be truthfully said by all who knew him that now he is beholding with rapture his Redeemer, who said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." May the Holy Spirit comfort the mother and the other members of the family who mourn his passing.

A GOOD MEETING AT PECAN ISLAND.

Dear Advocate: We closed a union Methodist and Baptist revival meeting at Pecan Island last Wednesday night. Rev. C. B. Melancon, Baptist pastor and co-worker, of Crowley, La., cordially furnished a tent for the meeting. He has proved to be a fair preacher of Christianity, and we can truly say that the Christian fellowship was the best during all the meeting. Rev. F. N. Sweeney, of Franklinton, La., helped us in the preaching. All his sermons carried the evangelistic note, experimental religion, and the true doctrines of Wesley and Methodism. We received four members on profession of faith to our church. At the last service one young man 17 years old came forward for baptism, and was received on profession of faith, and also dedicated himself as a candidate for the ministry of our church. He has one more year of high school, and desires to enter college in 1929. Over forty persons came forward during the meeting for prayer, seeking salvation, and we have faith in God that many found forgiveness of their sins. Some 1,200 chapters in the Bible were read during the meeting.

Our activities as French missionary among the 14,000 white people living in St. Martin Parish are encouraging so far this year. Some new work has been started since early in the summer. We are still, however, the only Protestant preacher living in the parish for the white people. Truly the "fields are white for the harvest, but the laborers are few." Brethren, pray for us. There are 350,000 French people living in South and Southwest Louisiana, and only eight French preachers in the bounds of the Louisiana Conference.

Cordially,

A. M. MARTIN, P. C.

FROM SICILY ISLAND, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: We have just closed a ten-day meeting in Sicily Island, La., Brother Charles E. McLean, of Gibsland, La., doing the preaching, and doing it well.

The congregation and the pastor both have been strengthened by his Gospel messages. His application of the Gospel to life and conduct was simply great. I don't think he left any doubt in the minds of our people as to whether they were living right or not before God, and had fulfilled their obligation to Him and to the church to which they pledged their allegiance.

Would to God that we had more men of like honesty, faith, and passion for the souls of men. If any of our pastors are looking for a blood-and-thunder sort of a preacher to hold their meetings, don't get this godly man; he is of a different sort. Brother McLean is a safe, sane, and constructive preacher—the kind that the church of to-day is sadly in need of.

Brother Mc (as I often call him for short) is a friend to man, and that includes the pastor. Oh, how we pastors long for the love and sympathy of our fellow-pastors. There are times when the evangelist, in his zeal and passion for the salvation of lost souls, forgets that the saints and the pastor are hungering and would be satisfied with even the crumbs that fall from his table of love.

Another characteristic of Brother Mc is that he does not bring the revival with himself. So, when he leaves, he doesn't tote the revival away and leave the pastor with an empty bag to hold.

E. V. DUPLANTIS, P. C.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AT THE SEASHORE CAMP GROUNDS.

Dear Dr. Carley: I thought perhaps the Advocate readers woould be interested in the report of our Sunday school at the Camp Grounds this summer, for we think it has been well worth while. For three months we have held Sabbath school regularly, our smallest attendance being forty-eight and our largest 134, averaging somewhere in the nineties. Our offerings have been wonderful, totaling about $80, which, with a balance from last summer, has enabled us to buy all of our literature, including papers for each department; keep the Tabernacle clean; have the piano tuned; make a contribution to the camp meeting, and give to the Cuban Mission, Wesley House, Moore Community House, Back Bay Mission, MacDonell Wesley house, a Mission in Natchez, and aid an old lady in the vicinity. Besides the money, we had a "make believe Christmas" and showered Moore Community House with toys to be kept until Dec. 25.

Each class has had a party or some form of entertainment. We have had splendid teachers all during the summer, some one coming each time to take the place of those who had to leave. Dr. George S. Brown has taught the Bible class all summer, and it has had the largest enrollment of all departments. We were fortunate in having with us Miss Clara Chalmers, our own missionary from Cuba, to take charge of the Young People, assisted by Mr. J. O. Carson. Mrs. Ballard, from Little Rock, and Mr. J. R. Ables, of Ponchatoula, had the Intermediates; Mrs. McGhee, of Franklin, and Mr. A. W. Luehrmann, of New Orleans, had the Juniors; Mrs. Quiller Scott taught the Primaries, and Mrs. Rowan, of Natchez, the Beginners. Mr. Alvin Carpenter taught the Intermediate boys for a month, and Mr. George Carpenter and Miss Virginia Loughridge filled in for absentees. Mr. Girard Davidson and Miss Katherine Hardesty were secretaries. Mrs. Loughridge was the pianist, assisted by Mrs. Rhodes and Miss Mignon Smith. Mrs. A. J. Boots, of Memphis, was song leader during her stay.

Of course our Sunday school could not be exactly modern and up-to-date, but the older classes found plenty of room in the spacious tabernacle, and the younger classes were held out under the shady trees. There is something inspirational about the entire Sabbath school assembling together for worship. As the people scatter to their various homes throughout the towns and different States, we feel that they can but carry with them some of the seed sown by our summer school and pray that these seed may bear fruit an hundredfold in the years to come.

Our Story Hour is also worthy of mention. It started some years ago, primarily for the children; but we have no other service Sunday nights, so when the old tabernacle bell rings, everybody comes, and there are far more grown-ups than children, sometimes as many as 150. Visitors are very generous with the talents God has given them, and so besides stories told by children as well as grown people, we often have beautiful music, instrumental and vocal, and most inspiring readings. Verses are repeated from the Bible, and there are prayers and songs, and the evening is always one of delight.

It is indeed a privilege to worship in this most beautiful spot on the coast, and the wonderful results from the feeble efforts made can but inspire us to realize that this could be made a great religious center if we but had men of vision, of determination, and of activity.

A NEW AND INTERESTING BOOK ON MISSIONS.

Mr. Stanley High, Associate Editor of the Christian Herald, has lately returned from a world cruise which he made for the purpose of studying Christian missions. The results of this investigation he has summarized in a book just published by the Abingdon Press of New York. It is called, A Waking World: Christianity Among the Non-White Races. It is said to throw much light upon missionary policies and furnishes material calling for free and frank discussion, while affording a vital contribution to such discussion.

MISS NELL DRAKE HONORED.

The friends of Miss Nell Drake, irrespective of her creed, gathered together on July 31 to bid her farewell and wish her every blessing. The garden of Mrs. R. D. Gage was a beautiful setting for this farewell party.

A well equipped traveling bag and a box of golden coins, love gifts from all her friends, were presented by Mrs. L. B. Allen, who represented the Methodist Missionary Society. Dainty refreshments were served by attractive girls.

A few words of heartfelt appreciation were spoken by Miss Drake.

This gathering and these gifts were only small tokens of the love and interest which Port Gibson friends feel for Miss Drake, and of their good wishes for her as she returns to her chosen field, China.

In 5 Million Homes Tonight

A host of babies will enjoy sound sleep tonight. And their parents will have unbroken rest. Castoria is the cause of this contentment in a multitude of homes.

Good old Castoria! Children cry for it. Mothers swear by it. Not a household where there is an infant should ever be without it. A few drops of Castoria quiet Baby in a perfectly innocent manner. It is natural slumber that follows. Castoria is a purely vegetable product. No opiates. No narcotics. Of any kind.

Now you know why trained nurses give Castoria as often as an infant is ailing, or even restless. And why doctors tell mothers it is the first and only home remedy when Baby has constipation, colic, diarrhea, or other upset. It is made for babies, and safe to give babies, and other things are not.

Fletcher's Castoria is "old-fashioned" if you count its fifty years, but it's an old-fashioned mother, nowadays, who worries along without it. Twenty-five million bottles bought last year! Think of the number of mothers who rely on Castoria! All these mothers can't be wrong! To keep a bottle in the house is a precaution you owe your little one.

Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

HISTORY OF GLENDALE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY, JACKSON, MISS.

The Glendale Woman's Missionary Society is quite young in age, in fact the baby of the Jackson District. We owe quite a bit of credit to our pastor, Rev. C. E. Downer, who has been an inspiration at all times; also, the other churches of the city have been very helpful.

On Jan. 17, 1927, a band of earneet Christian workers met in the home of Mrs. E. E. Britt and organized our society, enrolling nineteen. We have grown some, of course, numbering now forty or more, but of course not all these are regular attendants. We have tried to do, to the best of our ability, everything that has been asked of us, and I think I may say we have come out fairly well in our efforts. We assisted in entertaining delegates to the Annual Conference last fall and entertained the district conference two days in April, serving luncheon both days, also to the Sunday School Institute.

The Missionary Society raised in various ways last year $478 for our church building fund, above dues and other finances of the society, and we hope to raise $500 this year. We are also paying for a piano; we have held a regular Bible lesson, Mission study and voice program each month, and a business meeting, too. We have a Children's Department that represents an enthusiastic number, who recently made their first public appearance, presenting "The Jubilee Birthday Party," which was very creditable. The missionary pageant, "America's Obligation," was very effectively given by our society recently.

Before our church was built, we met in the homes of the members, but now we have a nice ladies' parlor, of which we are very proud. While meeting in the homes, we learned to know each other. As a whole, we are doing a good work in our society, taking into consideration the inactivity of some; we have a number, though, who are very loyal in attendance and service.

Two questionnaires were recently sent out to a group of women of wide experience in missionary work, to discover the place of the Woman's Missionary Society in the church, and its merit, which would be well for us all to read. Sometimes the way seems very difficult and almost impossible, as if we were at the end of our resources; but, as Lanra Haygood says, "For his sweet sake, we may, we will;" yet we must have the right motives always. Motives are indeed elusive things, but a steady underlying purpose and a definite loyalty will motivate our services and there are many things to do. Perhaps there is to-day nothing that we need so much in our relations with one another and with God as utter genuineness of spirit, frankness with our associations, honesty, simplicity and sincerity in social relations. Striving after effect, trying to appear what we are not, is wrong.

A great poet has said, "To thine own self be true;" so let us be ourselves, do our own work, that our Father may, through us, give to the world the special thought he would have each of us bring.

MRS. L. V. HAMBERLIN,
Corresponding Secretary.

A LETTER FROM A SUBSCRIBER.

Dear Dr. Carley: Although I am within the bounds of the East Oklahomas Conference and the Oklahoma Conferences have a chuhch organ that should suffice, I am again renewing my subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. I appreciate the New Orleans Advocate from various viewpoints; and was made to realize something of how I would miss it when I failed to get a number one Saturday morning. It was like missing a promised visit from an old and tried friend. I found myself looking again and again to see if it had fallen from the mail box. I finally found it beside the porch, where the wind had blown it.

The East Oklahoma Conference will convene in the Masonic Temple, Muskogee, Okla., Oct. 30, 1928. The younger Conference would welcome visitors from the older with fellowship, and trust we will be found not far behind in church affairs as well as State. Muskogee is an attractive little city. Just now, before the frost blights the growth of plants in parks, boulevards, sunken garden, and flower beds in evidence beside drive-ways, it is well worth while driving over. Especially do we think the Soldiers' Memorial Hospital beautifully located, with attractive grounds.

Sincerely yours,
MRS. A. W. GORMAN.
Muskogee, Okla.

FROM THE CALEDONIA CHARGE.

Dear Brother: I am sending you a report of our work on the Caledonia charge. We are serving our third year with these good people, and are having a very good year.

We are in the midst of our revival meetings. We began on the fourth Sunday in July at Steens church, with Rev. W. L. Atkins doing the preaching. He brought us some great messages of gospel truth, resulting in a reconsecration of the church for service and four additions to the church on profession of faith.

On the fifth Sunday in July we began a meeting at Mount Pleasant church, Rev. C. W. Avery, from the Macon circuit, preaching for us. Brother Avery is a good gospel preacher, whose messages were enjoyed by all who heard him. The church people were brought closer to the Lord, and greater zeal for service was kindled in the hearts of our people there.

On the first Sunday in August, Brother W. L. Atkins, of Artesia, was again with us in a meeting at Flint Hill church, great crowds attending the service. Brother Atkins preached with liberty and power the old-fashioned gospel, and as a result fourteen were received into the church.

On Wednesday, Aug. 15, we began our meeting at Piney Grove, celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of our church there. Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, presiding elder of the Greenville District, preached the opening sermon at 11 o'clock Wednesday, preaching again at the night service. The pastor preached on Thursday morning and afternoon, Rev. S. A. Brown, from Pickens, preaching at night. Friday at 11 o'clock Rev. W. C. Gaiceran, of Leland, preached for us. He was accompanied by his son, W. C. Gaiceran, Jr., the pastor then preaching through the afternoon service Sunday. At the afternoon service Sunday the history of the organization and important events of the church through the century was read by Brother O. P. Brown, one of the senior members of the church. We had with us people from Texas, California, Mississippi, and Alabama. It was a great occasion and enjoyed by all who had the pleasure to attend the services.

Sunday night, Aug. 19, we began our meeting at Caledonia church. Brother W. N. Duncan, our presiding elder of the Columbus District, came to us Monday night, and preached for us through Friday night, bringing to us some great messages in his zealous and earnest way. Our church was revived and twenty-two were added to our church.

We will begin our meeting at New Hope church next Sunday. Rev. H. H. Wallace, of Noxapater, will be with us there. We will also hold a meeting at Murrah's Chapel, beginning the fourth Sunday in September.

We are hoping to finish our year with everything in fine shape.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Readers of the Advocate saw the picture of the new church building at Brooksville in the last issue of the paper. It is an architectural gem. The pastor, Rev. Seamon Rhea, and his loyal people have wrought well in this enterprise. It is a monument to their love and zeal for childhood and youth. It was the pleasure of the writer of these notes to participate in the opening of this new building recently. The day was perfect, the congregation filled the house, the music was of a high order, the sermon was short and appropriate. The Sunday school workers are ready to go forward and do all that is necessary to reach the people with the truths of the Christian religion. Mrs. Rhea, the superintendent of the Cradle Roll and Beginner Departments, has agreed to circulate the booklets of the American Home Series pertaining to the care of little children among the parents. The school will observe Childhood and Youth Week early in October. Brother Rhea is closing his fourth year at Brooksville, and many of the best people would be glad to have him and his wife another year.

The school at Kosciusko, under the wise leadership of Mr. B. G. Webb, is going forward with the plans of the Sunday School Board, leaving nothing undone that will help build the kingdom of God in Kosciusko. This school undertakes every item of the Program of Work, striving to improve each year. Would that we had a hundred superintendents like unto B. G. Webb! Between trains, I made visits to the workers at Artesia and gave encouragement and help to these faithful workers. The pastor and his wife were looking after some friends who were in sorrow.

Mrs. Ernest Moore, of Clarksdale, writes: "I know you will wonder why you are getting two checks for Sunday School Day. The reason is this: After I had written the check for $45, Mr. Brooks phoned me that the Young People's department had put in a check for $25. Be sure to give us credit for $70 for Sunday School Day." With unbounded joy we give credit and say: "Thank you, Young People's department of the Clarksdale Methodist church. God bless you a thousandfold."

Here is another piece of good news: Mrs. Bob Farrell, Superintendent of the Intermediate-Senior department of the Greenwood church, writes: "I know you will be happy over this collection. We are thrilled, for we think it is a wonderful contribution from our boys and girls, and I'm sure you are interested to know the plan we used—'Movie Missionary Sunday.' The idea was for everybody to deny themselves the movies and bring the admission to the movies as their offering. As our movie has had various prices, we feit it would be fair to the boys and girls who were not abie to bring a big amount. Every teacher called on each pupil and explained it to them and urged them to attend. We blocked the second entrance with a beaver board screen and had a table with flowers on it and a pretty girl to sell tickets, just like a real movie. The tickets had a verse of Scripture on them, which we all stood and read, each verse being different; then we had our missionary program. The cost of putting on the program was 15 cents, the price of the cardboard out of which we cut the tickets. The notice in the paper was free. And my, how they did enjoy it."

This department under Mrs. Farrell sends a contribution regularly for our dual-special in addition to the offering sent by the school. Items like the two above give heart, and hope, and courage to go on.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. Robert W. Vaughan, Superintendent of our Orphanage, is hard at work, getting Louisiana Methodism ready for "Harvest Day," Oct. 14.

Mrs. G. R. McDonnell, Elementary Superintendent in the West Texas Conference, is booked for four schools this fall in our Conference.

Mrs. R. E. Smith reports in the Amite School the finest class on "Young People" she has had in Louisiana Methodism. This week she has a class of eighteen in "Pupil Study" in the Winnfield School.

Dr. A. S. Lutz will teach the Bible course in the Monroe School. He was four years in Monroe as presiding elder and one year as pastor at West Monroe. A hearty welcome awaits him.

Rev. A. K. McLelian, Dual Extension Secretary, reports the largest "one-class school" for 1928 in the re cent school at Rosedale, La.

Rev. A. D. Simons, the pastor on the Selma circuit, writes: "I begin work in a meeting with Brother Bamburg, of Trout, Sunday, and it will be impossible for me to be with you at Winnfield; but I am writing my people at Pollock and Liberty Chapel. We now have a Sunday school at Liberty Chapel."

Mr. J. E. Hearn, Sunday school superintendent at Olia, La., was recently licensed to preach and will appiy for admission in our Conference this fall.

Two Training Schools last week and two this week keep your Conference Superintendent on the go. The Alexandria School issued fifty-six credits and planned a better and larger one for next year at the same date—"the week before school opens."

Your writer has spent this week in teaching a course in the Winnfield Training School. Louisiana Sunday school leaders remember Winnfield as the home of the State-wide Conference of 1924. We have enjoyed during the week fellowship and hospitality at the parsonage. Rev. C. C. Wier is pastor and is in fine favor with his people.

C. D. ATKINSON,
Conference Superintendent.

FRENCH MISSION SCHOOL.

The MacDonell French Mission School at Houma, La., opened Monday, Sept. 3, 1928. Boys and girls from Bayou Blue, Point au Chene, Eagle Island, Lockport, Labadieville, Gibson, and from other rural communities came trooping in Sunday afternoon in spite of the rain and mud. Some came bringing new pupils with them; and how happily all came! Old friends were greeted; and new acquaintances that will soon ripen into warm friendships were made.

Each pupil was glad that the Misses Ella Hooper, Helen Smith, Ione Gandy and Lena Lang were going to be with them again. But of course all were eager to meet the new teachers. Some of the boys and giris had met Mr. E. C. Landis during the Bible school, which was held in June, but very few had met Miss Louisa Diggs, one of Scarritt's recent graduates, so she was welcomed in a special way. Every one was sorry to learn that Miss Laura Stillweil had to postpone coming, because of illness, but Miss Margaret Bisland, who was with us last year, saved the day by agreeing to substitute.

Surely the Lord has been with us! Let us thank him for bringing these spiendid teachers and earnest students together. May each pupil purpose in his heart to be true to the ideals of the school, and may many be trained for places of Christian leadership in this section. This is the prayer of sincere friends of MacDoneil French Mission School.

LETTER FROM YOUNG PEOPLE OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE TO THE ADULT AUXILIARIES.

Young people like to be up and doing, something new, something challenging. Consequently this summer, for the first time in our Mississippi Conference, a series of separate district rallies was held, Aug. 13-18, as follows: Meridian and Newton Districts—Laurel, First Methodist Church, with the Young People's, Mrs. Ben Sutherland and Mrs. C. E. Lawson as hostess; Jackson District—Jackson, Capitol Street, with Mrs. W. E. Phillips (District Secretary), the Young People's and Mrs. B. E. Walk as hostess; Vicksburg District—Vicksburg, Gibson Memorial Church, with the Young People's, Mrs. G. P. McKeown (District Secretary), Mrs. J. C. Lowry (District Young People's Leader), and Mrs. B. B. Calender (local superintendent) as hostess; Brookhaven District—Brookhaven Church, with the ladies' local auxiliary, Mrs. J. F. Decell (District Secretary), Mrs. Van Saunders (District Young People's leader) as hostess; Hattiesburg District—Hattiesburg, Broad Street Church, the Young People's and Mrs. J. W. Thompson as hostess. At each of these places, the presence and co-operation of many pastors and presiding elders was very gratefully appreciated. The lovely hospitality and the noonday lunches were features that added to the enjoyment of these meetings. For all of this we express our appreciation to the adult missionary workers—always our co-workers.

These daily meetings, including business sessions and inspiring programs, were usually presided over by the young people. Devotional services, missionary stories, pageants, discussions of the work made days of information and inspiration, which we earnestly believe will result in a new day in our Mississippi Conference, for they touched more than three hundred of the youth of our church. The careful planning and earnest prayers of our district leaders, with that of our Conference executive members, have meant much in the success of our work.

Miss Julia Lake Stevens, Council Superintendent of Young People, native Mississippian, charming, consecrated young woman, having served three years as missionary teacher in our Hiroshima Girls' School, Japan, brought a very stirring missionary message. She was valuable in the discussions of methods and plans in promoting our program of missionary work.

Our national visitor, Miss Hamaka Hirose, Japanese girl 22 years of age, educated, consecrated, proved to be a high light in our meetings. As a little 12-year-old mountain girl, Hamaka (as we call her—being our sister and one whom we love) won a schoiarship over thirty girls in her home county to Hiroshima Girls' School. Her father was very anxious that she go to the city for higher education, not knowing that he, a Buddhist, was sending his daughter to a Christian school. Christianity is sweeping the city life of Japan, but as yet the rural life is practically untouched. For this reason, Miss Nannie B. Gaines, principal, used gift money, sent by a friend, in establishing a rural scholarship, which Hamaka won. Attending Sunday school (as required) for the first time along with daily Bible classes, Hamaka soon realized she was in a Christian school, and found Jesus as her personal Saviour in her school life. At this age of high ambitions, Hamaka felt to accept Jesus meant to give self. Throughout the eight years of high school and college work, this ambition grew. After graduating, she became English teacher for two years in the school. Then it was that a dream came true, Hamaka was given a three-year scholarship to America, to Central College, Missouri, where she now has two remaining years of preparation. She will then return to her native land as a missionary Bible teacher. The responsibility of leading her immediate family, the Japanese people, to Christ is ever before Hamaka. Will you not join us in praying for her and for the work that she finds in the future? Being privileged to know Hamaka, our young people have been drawn nearer to Japan, and to Hiroshima Girls' School. Hirose San (meaning Miss Hirose), in her gentle, sweet manner won the hearts of all with whom she came in contact, increasing their faith. In native costume, telling of Japanese customs, of her conversion, of her glorious privilege in being in America, she made this statement, which made our hearts rejoice:

"I believe that America is great—not because of her wealth, her education, her commerce, but because of her Christian spirit. Not all foreign students have been privileged to know your great people, your Christian leaders. I thank God for this privilege. I thank you for the opportunity that you have given to me and other Japanese girls through your great school at Hiroshima. I believe it is for me to take back this same spirit I find here, to my people. Pray for me."

Would that we had space to bring Hamaka Hirose's full message, her appeal to our youth to appreciate the missionary heritage of Christian homes and country. We are grateful that Miss Stevens brought Hamaka to us. To know her is to love her. We are now better prepared to make a study and freely give of our means this year to Hiroshima School—our foreign special.

Do you know anything about our Young People's Missionary Society? First a small band, we, too, were pioneers, organizing very soon after the women, in response to Mrs. Lambuth's appeal. Now, we are more than 30,000 young people in thirty-nine Conferences, paying more than $43,000 annually to missions. Our motto, "Loyalty to Christ;" our watchword, "Each One Win One." This year we, too, are celebrating our Jubilee with an unusually fine program, which deepens the spiritual life of our young people through prayer leagues, Bible and Mission study, and reading circles, where we use such books as: "The Way of Jesus," Hodgkin; "Spiritual Adventuring," Conde; "Memories of Scarritt," Marla Lang Gibson; "Bell Harris Bennett," Mrs. R. A. MacDonald, and "Women and His Kingdom," Mabel K. Howell.

This year we are piedging $579 for our Conference for missions. In addition to local and social service plans, we are planning to send boxes of food, clothing, etc., trying to help the needs as listed in our Conference Minutes, for the Wesley Community House, Meridian; Wesley Community House, Biloxi; Moore Community House, Biloxi. Also, we plan to write to and co-operate with our rural special, Miss Alberta Wilson, of Sardis, Miss.

In October, we will use as our Mission study, "Women and his Kingdom," by Miss Mabel K. Howell. We are hoping that our young people will study and meet the requirements as found in the minutes, so as to obtain recognition of this work from the Council, receiving certificates as we do in our Sunday School Training Courses.

The first week in November, we will have an interesting program and empty our Jubilee thank offering boxes, in observance of this Week of Prayer. The last day, we will be privileged to meet with our adult ladies. May our gifts be of real gold.

If you will read our September Young People's Bulletin, you will find detailed plans of a most interesting project, a Poster Contest. May our Conference win the blue ribbon and have the honor of having our poster on exhibition in Washington, at Council, and having our poster presented to the Council body! Be sure to lend your encouragement and help. Urge all young people to enter their talents.

Looking forward, we dream of a Young People's Missionary Society Conference Summer Camp at Camp Ground, Biloxi, June, 1929, for at least one week. Furthermore, we hope to send local delegates to Council in Washington, and to Annual Conference in Jackson. Help us to plan, to save, to succeed! If you want to know more about us, watch the October issue of the Missionary Voice.

May we use this opportunity of expressing our appreciation to the Advocate, to our missionary mothers and fathers, to our beloved pastors and presiding elders and their wives, and to our own Conference officers for their deep interest, their prayer, their beautiful co-operation? You are making possible the growth and progress of this great missionary movement.

As young people, we are old enough to appreciate our great missionary heritage; yet young enough to be citizens of to-morrow. Through study, prayer, service, we hope to be prepared to "carry on" the great work that you have begun. We believe that some of our number will hear that higher call of definite missionary service. Will you continue to hold our hands, believe in us, pray for us?

Mississippi Conference Superintendent of Young People.

FROM THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETARY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: After spending several days at the office in Alexandria, I am now beginning my tour of the district. It is my plan to reach every local chapter in the Conference in some way before Christmas.

Last Friday night I had the pleasure of meeting with "The Grambling Union" at Elizabeth, La. This union, recently organized, is made up of the Oakdale, Glenmora, Oberlin, and Elizabeth Leagues. Miss Mary Lyles, of Bunkie, who teaches in Elizabeth, is the president of the union. We were very fortunate in having over seventy-five young people present. After a devotional and business meeting at the church, the Elizabeth Leaguers invited us to the park, where we enjoyed a fellowship hour of games, after which we were served with delightful refreshments by the boys of that League, who made fine waitresses in their yellow and white aprons. On the first Friday of next month the Grambling Union will meet in Glenmora.

While in Alexandria I visited the Standard Training School being attended by the Pineville and Alexandria Sunday schools, and enjoyed very much listening to their splendid instructors.

On Saturday I left for New Orleans, where I had the fortune of meeting with a number of the New Orleans chapters. Early Sunday morning I went with the Carrollton Avenue Leaguers to the Convalescent Home, where we conducted a short devotional service. I attended church services at Louisiana Avenue Church, where Rev. B. C. Taylor is pastor. In the evening I enjoyed going to St. Mark's Hall and being with those fine Leaguers during their supper hour and League program. After League hour I went to night services at Second Church, and enjoyed hearing Rev. A. M. Serex. Were it not for some of the New Orleans Leaguers, I could not possibly have enjoyed such a varied program in one day. Mrs. R. P. Jackson, Jr., and Mr. Alfred Hanson were most cordial in arranging plans for me. On Monday night I visited the Epworth Church Leaguers in their council meeting at Mr. Frederick Lampas. Tuesday night the New Orleans City Union met at Carrollton Avenue Church for its monthly union meeting. After a real live business meeting, which showed that the city union Leaguers are "doing things," the Carrollton Avenue Leaguers entertained with a school day social hour, consisting of games and stunts, and followed by delicious refreshments.

Miss Julia McGowan, our oratorical contestant, will go to Nashville on the fourteenth to compete in the finals on the night of the fifteenth.

Your Field Secretary,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD.

THE "C2. D. S." SUB-DISTRICT UNION.

Several months ago, a sub-district union was organized in the Minden District, with Campti, Coushatta, and Davis Springs as charter members. At the time no name was chosen, and organization was very incomplete.

On Sunday, Sept. 2, this union met at Coushatta and completed its organization. Unfortunately, Campti was not represented, but there were twenty-two Coushatta Leaguers present and fifteen from Davis Springs. For the name of the union, they decided upon "C2. D. S.," representing the three chapters. The aim of the C2. D. S. Union is to promote really efficient League work. An attendance banner has been ordered, to be presented to the chapter with the best attendance record for six months. The president of the union is Mr. Frances Mangham, of Coushatta.

There are now three sub-district unions in the Minden District: The "E. L. Boosters" Union, with Miss Carmen Moffett, of Selma, president; the "C2. D. S." Union, Mr. Francis Mangham, president; the "J. O. Y." Union, Miss Eris Monzingo, of Springhill, president. I feel that the work throughout the district will greatly prosper through the efforts of these splendid unions. For in "Unions there is strength," as applied to organized League work. Each union has taken as its biggest aim to reach a high percentage on the Standard in each chapter, and then to organize new chapters, to re-organize dead ones, and to help weak ones with their program. With such an aim as this, and a purpose true to our motto, we cannot fail.

MARY SEARLES,
District Secretary.

EPWORTH LEAGUE PROGRESS IN THE RUSTON DISTRICT.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: I would like for you to know something about the work Ruston District is accomplishing. Heretofore we have been called the "Baby District" in Epworth League work, but I feel that we are fast outgrowing that name.

I want to report four chapters that are newly organized: Bear Creek, Longstraw, Calhoun, and Bryceland. The Bear Creek League is scarcely three months old, but they have just conducted a young people's revival by Rev. Lamo Napper. That shows the wonderful inspiration those boys and girls possess, and I'm sure they are going to build their chapter up to the 100 per cent standard, as I hope all the chapters in my district will. Owing to its small membership, Bear Creek's pledge to Conference Promotion and Field Work was small, but it was the first League in my district to send its pledge to the State treasurer.

We owe our inspiration to our State worker, Miss Langford, whom we had the honor of having as instructor in the three-night institutes in July. Although we didn't get to have several of the schools, I know Miss Langford helped us very much, for there has been a marked improvement in every League she visited. I wish we could keep Miss Langford with us until we are fully straightened out, but there is such a great demand for her all over the State, we were fortunate to have her during the short time she was in our district.

I'm sorry that Ruston District was not represented at Mount Sequoyah this year, but I am hoping that she will supply her share of the delegates from Louisiana next year. We are proud of the success Miss McGowan met in the oratorical contest, and I am certain it was made possible through the prayers of the many Leaguers back home.

May God's richest blessings be showered on the Epworth Leaguers of this State, and may it be a bigger and better year of service for our Lord and Savior.

Leagueriy yours,
BETH MURPHY,
Ruston District Secretary.

FROM MONROE DISTRICT SECRETARY.

My Dear Leaguers and All Who Read This Department: Having just returned some few days ago from Mount Sequoyah, Fayetteville, Ark., where our Western Epworth League Assembly is held, there is within me a keen desire to return next year. Also, I deeply regret that each of you could not attend this year, but know that if you attend once you will make every effort possible to return again.

Four of us from Louisiana attended, but next year I'm hoping there will be twenty-four. Texas seemed to have more delegates than all other States combined, but quality was there from each State, splendid young people and older ones, too, ones that you could never forget.

Mount Sequoyah is located in the northwest part of Arkansas, surrounded by a range of mountains making an ideal place for those who come to rest, also desiring to know their Master better. The instructors are men and women deeply desirous of helping to develop young men and women to the extent that they will always put honor over riches and fame, love for God and fellow-man over worldly lust, and peace and goodwill over war and strife. You should know these good people, for to know them is to truly love them.

I'm sure you would be greatly interested in the eats, too, wouldn't you? Well, they're done cafeteria style, and best yet, Arkansas fruits and all. Dormitory life? Yes, two of them—"Boys and Girls"—also "awake and asleep." Mostly awake in the boys, though there are numerous cottages for reasonable rent, also tourist park that will help to remedy the necessity of sleeping during the class hours or Tabernacle talks. And we surely had some interesting lectures, illustrated and otherwise, "The Man in the Moon" being illustrated.

For recreation we played games, hiked, kodaked, and slept. Come next year and bring your parents or get them to bring you. You'll certainly never regret it, and will return home more able to serve and with greater desire to serve in an effort to bring about peace on earth and good will towards all men.

Yours for a greater representation from Louisiana next year,
MRS. L. McDUFF,
Monroe District Secretary.

FROM COTTON VALLEY, LA.

Dear Brother Carley: As we have recently closed the revival meetings for the season on this charge, will give some of the results.

The first was a two-weeks meeting at Cotton Valley, conducted by Rev. Jimmie Smith, general evangelist. Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Fraser were in charge of the music and children's work. This evangelistic party rendered good service; the preaching was of a high type, fearless and strong. We were glad to have him and his co-workers with us. We feel sure that some of the results will be lasting. There were quite a large number who professed to have renewed their covenant with Christ, and purpose henceforth to do His will. There were a few additions to the church.

The second meeting was at Pleasant Valley. The preaching was done by one of our pastors, Rev. W. F. Roberts, who did some real gospel preaching and teaching. He is good help in a meeting, and all seemed to enjoy his preaching so much. The church membership was greatly revived, and the attendance and spirit were fine all through the meeting. A few additions to the church.

The last meeting was at Bethel, and owing to a change in date of the meeting, it fell to the lot of the writer to do the preaching. The spirit and interest were fine all through the meeting. The people said it was a very helpful meeting. There were eight additions to the church.

Upon the whole, we expect to have a good report for Conference, for we believe our people are going to work to this end.

Yours in his service,

E. L. CARGILL, P. C.

A WORD FROM THE PORTERVILLE CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Carley: This is to send you a word from our charge. Meetings have been held, in which spiritual benefit came to many people.

At Porterville there were five "repentents" and professions of faith in Jesus Christ, and they became members of the Invisible, and accessions of the Visible church. My father, Rev. R. E. Rutledge—whom I am always anxious to have—did the preaching.

At Chapel Hill, Rev. D. P. Yeager, a good friend of mine, did the preaching, and there were large crowds, and many received benefit. He was the former pastor for four years.

At Union we had a very fine meeting; two infant baptisms, with three more to be, four conversions and members five, one of which was by certificate. I recommend Rev. Charles Assaf for Christian service to any one. We had a severe testing of hearts.

At Briggs' Chapel Rev. George G. Yeager, a long-time good friend of mine, did the preaching. A good meeting, with one boy with new and kindly light on his face, who was converted, the results.

At Mount Hebron, Brother Waldo Moore, of good, urgent and sincere preaching ability, did the preaching. A faithful meeting; a searching hour for all of us.

The people are hospitable, and have sent four or five poundings, one of them last Saturday, when some of our loved ones, the Graves, of Union church, were here.

Yours fraternally,

E. J. RUTLEDGE.

FROM FLORIEN, LA.

Dear Mr. Editor: Would be pleased to say a few things concerning our work and its progress this past year. We made one of the finest starts in the beginning of the year I believe I ever experienced—things moved along nicely, every interest of the work seemed to take on new life.

As stated above, things were going forward in a splendid way; but about the middle of April my second girl at home was stricken down with measles, which caused her to become paralyzed all over. She could not move at all, and in this condition she remained for about four months. For a long time there seemed no hope for her recovery; but, thank God, through the prayers of friends and the good work of doctors and nurses, her life has been spared thus far. We are so thankful to our many friends for their kindness shown us.

So we might say that the first part of the year as to real work was lost. We kept up our appointments, but this was about all. I have held two meetings, and both were successful meetings, about twenty accessions, nearly all on profession of faith and baptism. Many of the older citizens say they were the best meetings ever held in the community. Truly, they were great meetings.

We are now considering a meeting at Peason, which will begin the fourth Sunday in this month, which will be our last meeting for the year. We will also begin to round up for Conference in a few days, trusting to bring up a good report.

So, brethren and friends, I am of the opinion that we have done exceedingly well, and can truthfully say, after all we have a good year.

Our girl is now at home, but unable to walk. Our heavenly Father, smile on us.

C. B. POWELL, P. C.

A FINE REVIVAL AT FERRIDAY, LA.

On Thursday evening, Aug. 30, there was brought to its close one of the very best revival meetings ever held in this community. Rev. J. O. Hanes, general evangelist, did the preaching, and Mr. H. M. Scott, evangelistic singer, had charge of the music. Both of these brethren are masters in their respective fields of labor.

The attendance taxed the seating capacity of the church from the very first day, and continued to the closing hour. A splendid interest was manifested throughout; the best spirit prevailed; we have heard none of the criticism which so often attends or follows such meetings, and the result in the quickening of the church life and general spiritual uplift of the community cannot be estimated.

From time to time points of high light were reached, as when on a Sunday afternoon a service for men only was held. There was a large number of men and boys present and great interest was manifested in the sermon, many responses made to the propositions, and all expressed great satisfaction at the services. Another high light came when on Wednesday evening families were requested to sit in family groups and a flower was presented to each group where every member of the family was present, and a large bouquet was presented to the largest family present. The preacher took for his text the words of Joshua, "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord," and preached a powerful sermon on the home.

The climax came on Sunday after the meeting closed, when the pastor received a class of twenty-nine persons into the Methodist church, several persons joining at this Sunday morning service; and there are several others yet to be received who for some cause were absent from the Sunday service.

Brother Hanes is too well known throughout the church to need any recommendation from this writer. We desire only to say that a more brotherly man, a more consecrated man, a man of greater faith it has never been our privilege to know. Mr. Scott is a young man, perhaps not so well known, deeply consecrated, a genius in his profession, quiet and unassuming, and one who attends strictly to his part of the program.

Our church is enriched and our community will be a better place in which to live because of the brief sojourn of these godly men.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. South Carolina Lady Then Tried Cardui and Says She Noticed Remarkable Improvement.

Anderson, S. C.—"I suffered a long long time, before I tried Cardui, and my only regret is that I did not know about it sooner," says Mrs. Lillie Pruitt, 130 "K" Street, this city.

"I was badly run down in health. My nerves 'went to pieces', and I had to go to bed. I was not able to do my house work for many months.

"I got so bad off, I could not bear to have anybody walk across the floor of my room. The least little thing upset me. Sometimes I became hysterical. I had bad pains in my back and sides, and my head and limbs would take spells of aching, which almost set me wild.

"One day I was reading and I saw where a woman, who had a trouble like my own, had been relieved by Cardui. I decided at once to try it; so I began on a course of the 'Home Treatment'.

"It began to help me from the very first. I took Cardui regularly, for several months, and my improvement was so remarkable, that my family and friends were delighted.

"Cardui has no equal, in my opinion. I gladly recommend it to others."

CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Vol. 75—No. 39. Official Organ of the Louisiana, Mi. issippi, and North Mississippi Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South Whole No 3720

HENRY T. CARLEY, D.D., Editor NEW ORLEANS, LA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1928. CHAS. O. CHALMERS, Manager.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE NEW EDITOR.

The Publishing Committee at its meeting on Thursday of last week elected Dr. R. H. Harper as editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate for a term of four years.

Dr. Harper is a native of Louisiana, son of the late Rev. J. D. Harper, of the Louisiana Conference. He was educated at Centenary College, being graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He was admitted into full connection in the Louisiana Conference in December of 1907. He has from the first been efficient and sucessful in his ministry, filling important appointments. He served the First Methodist Church of New Orleans for seven years, going from that important appointment to the presiding eldership of the New Orleans District, where he is now serving his third year. Dr. Harper is secretary of the Louisiana Conference; he was a delegate to the General Conference at Memphis, and he is a member of the General Hospital Board.

The new editor is qualified by temperament, training, and experience for the important position to which he has been called. He has decided literary gifts, as the readers of the Advocate already know, and an acquaintance with literature and literary affairs that gives him a broad foundation for his new line of work. He has oratorical ability of a high order, being in demand not only as a preacher, but also as a speaker on special occasions.

It is needless to say that Dr. Harper is thoroughly grounded in Methodist history, polity, and doctrine, and that he is a loyal servant of the church. In announcing his election to the editorship of the Advocate, we bespeak for him the loyal support, sympathy, and active co-operation of the great constituency he will serve. He will take up his editorial duties at the close of the Louisiana Conference, which meets in Lake Charles on Nov. 21. The present editor will continue to serve until that time.

MORAL ISSUES.

The church and Christian people are bound to be concerned about moral issues of all kinds. If they are not, they might as well not be concerned about anything. The mere fact that a moral issue is involved in a political situation no more releases the church and Christian people from concern about it than if it were involved in social or economic or industrial conditions. A moral issue is always the thing about which the church must be concerned, anywhere and everywhere. If it were not so, the church could soon be reduced to a state of innocuous desuetude on the plea that this issue and that was involved in a political situation and, therefore, the church must hands off. It would be like a rabbit, chased by a dog, declaring that the dog had no right to catch him because he was running through a cotton field instead of a cornfield. With purely political matters, the church, as we view it, has no concern; but when a great moral issue, like prohibition, is in the very forefront of a political campaign, it is as useless to expect the church and Christian people to stand idly by as it would be to expect a father to stand with folded hands when his child was drowning, even though the child was in swimming with a company of friends. The child's life ought to be saved no matter what company it was in. If the politicians insist that the church and preachers and Christian people ought to let politics alone, the church and preachers and Christian people have a right to demand that the politicians let them alone. A moral issue is never settled till it is settled right; and when the politicians are ready to let the church help settle such issues, the church will be willing to let them settle purely political affairs among themselves. The church was in the fight for prohibition when the politicians smiled blandly at their supposedly hopeless task; now that the nation has committed itself to the policy of prohibition, they need not suppose the church will supinely stand aside and let its hard-won victory be treated with contempt and turned into ignominious defeat. The church did all it could to keep prohibition from becoming an issue in this campaign; but it was forced upon the church deliberately and without equivocation. The church is in the fight for this moral issue—and it will stay there till it is settled and settled right. The religion that put rocks in the coffee, sand in the sugar, and water in the milk and then knelt in prayer has long since been abandoned

REV. ROBERT H. HARPER, D.D.,
Newly Elected Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE MAIN ELEMENTS IN CHARACTER-MAKING.

There is not the slightest doubt but that heredity and environment have tremendous influence in the making of character; that they are the determining influences, however, cannot be proved either in theory or practice.

The influence of heredity is expressed in the old saying, "Like father, like son." Everybody knows that physical characteristics are transmitted from parents to children; and the presumption is very strong that intellectual and spiritual characteristics are likewise transmitted. The present is linked with both the past and the future through the operation of the law of heredity.

The influence of environment is sometimes expressed in the saying, "Man is the creature of circumstances." We sometimes express our sympathy for an unfortunate person by saying, "Poor man, he never had a chance." Environment does play a large part in the making of character; but it is not the determining influence.

The will is more powerful than either heredity or environment, or of both of them combined. The world is full of men who have overcome a bad heredity and have emerged from the grasp of an unfavorable environment by the exercise of their will power. No man has to be what he does not want to be. Perhaps a better way to express the truth is to say that any man can become what he wants to be if he is willing to pay the price. An indomitable will is the ladder up which the climb to success must be made. Can a man make a decision and stick to it through thick and thin? If he can, he will arrive.

But in the making of Christian character there is another force that must be taken into account—the grace of God. It is the grace of God that makes the good attractive, that supplies the motive power for righteousness, that sustains the flagging spirit and strengthens the weary soul.

We do well to live in such way as to give to future generations a heredity that will help them on the upward way; we do well to labor constantly for the establishment of an environment that will make it easier for men and women to do right. But we fail at the most important point in the making of Christian character when we neglect to emphasize the tremendous power of the will and when we set small store by the grace of God as revealed and made available for all men through Jesus Christ. If and when we consider man simply the product of his ancestry and the creature of his environment, we dethrone God and make the world victim of a relentless blind force. Happiness in such a world would be impossible, and the hope of salvation would be a mockery.

FOR A COUNTRY CHURCH.

If I were God,
How tenderly I'd cherish
Every country church,
Every little parish.

They seem so modest,
So humbly dressed in white,
Raising a tiny cross
As if to catch his sight.

The trees peer through
Clear panes of window glass,
The altar can be seen
Should an angel pass.

With meekly folded doors,
I'd bless, if I were God,
Every country church
Kneeling on the sod.

—Ruth Langland Holberg.

DO THE MEEK INHERIT THE EARTH, OR DO THEY GET PUSHED OFF IT?

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

There is a Wesleyan minister in England, the Rev. Percy C. Pegler, who writes often in the Methodist Recorder, and his articles help me very much. To him I am indebted for this question, and he has helped me to answer it.

If anybody but Jesus had assured us that the meek inherit the earth, we should have dismissed it as nonsense. Because the assurance came from him, most of us accept it; perhaps in the same spirit as the man who was asked if he believed in God, and replied, "Oh yes, there must be a sort of a something somewhere." We don't pretend to understand what such a challenging statement means. As a matter of fact, most of us, whatever we say or pretend, don't really believe that the meek inherit the earth.

So far as experience and observation go, it looks very much as if they got pushed off it, and never inherit more than sufficient to bury themselves in. What a lot of people would like to say, if they dare, is, "Blessed is the man with a long arm and a big fist and a thick skin, for he shall get most in the scramble."

A friend of mine in North Louisiana, whom I esteem very highly, is my informant that Mark Twain used to make great fun of this Beatitude. For did he not say that if any one doubted that the meek really did inherit the earth, he only need to consider John Bull, and then consult a map of the British Empire? And there is no doubt that many besides Mark Twain would like to sneer at this great word if they dare, and if they said what they really thought.

Perhaps there was more truth in Mark Twain's sorry jest than he knew. John Bull had his limitations, but he is not easily provoked; his bulldog may look aggressive, but they tell me that bulldogs are really patient and unaggressive creatures. They don't let go; but they don't snap. After all, the typical Britisher is not easy to affront, he is not given to talking about "affairs of honor." There is a proverbial patience about the fellow, a deep-rooted dislike of getting excited, and a contempt for the man who bullies and swaggers, that has something to do with the British Empire after all. History does seem to suggest that a touchy temper and a swaggering gait never inherit much.

If Jesus had said that the meek inherited heaven, we should not have been surprised. In fact, we should have thought it not unlikely. It would have been quite nice to comfort ourselves with the reflection that the poor fellow pushed so ruthlessly out of the way would come out on top somewhere else. But when Jesus says, not that meek people go to heaven, but that they get the earth, people are inclined to say, as a dear old lady once said: "They tell me heaven is a very nice place, but I know more about down here."

If we are to be clear about this matter, we need to do two things. We need to be quite sure that we know what Jesus meant by "meekness," and what he meant by "inheriting the earth."

When we say that a man is meek, we generally mean that he is the sort of man who does not push or shout; who can be elbowed out of the way with impunity; who can be taken any kind of advantage of and trusted never to retaliate or make any attempt to get his own back. We confuse the meek man with the proverbial worm who never turns.

Well, there is a meekness of that sort. The proper name for it is weakness. And it was not in the least what Jesus was thinking about.

Some people are meek from disposition. They are complaisant people who believe in "anything for a quiet life," and they will agree with everybody, and put up with anything rather than have a row; that sort of man does not, as a rule, inherit anything. It is other people who inherit the mess and muddle that he leaves behind him.

Others are meek because they are cowards. They believe that a soft answer turns away wrath, and always have that kind of an answer on their lips, because they don't want their heads broken. There are people who are meek because they are not sensitive. They don't resist insults because nature has given them the hide of the hippopotamus. There are those who are meek, because they are "too proud to fight." Quite a lot of people never get angry with their opponents because they are supremely contemptuous of them and tell you they are not worth powder and shot. They are only slightly objectionable.

I have a feeling that meekness that Jesus meant is such humble confidence in God that one quietly accepts difficulties and rebuffs as part of a divine ordaining, and goes to meet and tackle them, conscious that unless God guides and directs us, and helps us to control our temper, we, with our ignorance and weakness, with our love of our own way, and our liability to get huffy, shall probably make a mess of things. It is out of that humble submission to God, out of that meek dependence upon him, that meekness towards one another grows.

The man who has that kind of meekness will submit to provocation, not because he does not feel it, or does not resent it; certainly not because he is afraid of it. He will control his temper neither from fear nor pride, nor policy, nor scorn. He will accept provocation as the will of God for him, just then, as a discipline which he needs and as an opportunity for showing a little bit of divine love and patience.

Really, people who are meek as Jesus wants us to be meek, are not quick-tempered and vindictive; they do not retaliate and stand up for their rights; they are not quick to take offence, because God is not like that, and they want to show a little bit of his spirit.

They try to keep controlled because they are sure that God has something to teach them. They try to keep humble because they know that pride and standing on one's dignity distorts one's vision, and the first thing that happens when you go red in the face is that you cannot see out of your eyes.

They try to keep their tempers, not merely because to lose your temper is the last way to gain your point, but because they want to keep the spirit of love in their heart, and they know perfectly well that they will never understand the fellow they are up against, unless they love him enough to feel as he feels and to be quite as anxious that he shall not be hurt as that they shall come out of it top-dog.

If that is meekness, it is a fairly big proposition; it is frightfully difficult to carry yourself like that. If anybody doubts it, let him try it the next time he gets into a mix-up. There is no bigger mistake than to confuse meekness with softness. It takes a strong man to get the victory over the hot desire to retaliate, to refrain from saying to himself, "There is another day to-morrow, old chap." It takes a strong man to keep personal feeling out of a difference of opinion, to say, "My dignity does not matter a rap," to take all that by the scruff of the neck and say: "Just keep out of it until the matter is settled; I would rather be hurt; I would rather lose my point and eat humble pie, than risk a quarrel for the sake of getting my own way, and standing on my dignity." As a matter of fact, you have got to have so much downright pluck to say that that most of us don't say it.

Christ is putting no bar on righteous anger in a word like this. To be meek is not to be a peace-at-any-price person; if we have the spirit of meekness, we are bound to keep the peace where our own personal feelings and private interests are concerned. But when it is a question of right against wrong, or of defending the weak, when the interests of the kingdom of God are called in question, it may be a matter of standing up to certain people and letting there be no mistake about it.

"I am meek and lowly of heart," said Jesus, and yet there must have been quite a lot of people who doubted it. The Pharisees, for instance, and the traffickers in the Temple, would hardly have described him as that. "When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not." But if you offended against the helpless, perhaps being thrown into the sea was too good for you; if you trafficked in holy things, you had to go. And if you were a pious humbug, you were told so with a plainness of speech that left no room for misunderstanding. There was that side to Jesus. And yet he was never self-assertive, never touchy; you could do anything to Jesus, but you could not provoke him. That is meekness, a very wonderful thing. It is the power of a man to control himself because he knows that he is in God's hands, and knows that he can afford to submit himself to all to which it may please God to subject him.

Gentleness has a way of overcoming, when bullying and hectoring only harden opposition; force never overcomes force. You can knock a man down if you don't agree with him and are a bigger fellow than he is, but when he gets up he will be more your enemy than he was before, and the next time you try to knock him down, you will probably have to knock down a whole row of his friends as well. What so often beats proud and uppish people is that in the end they make enemies faster than they can knock them down. The fact of the matter is, we don't win in life's battle by slaying our rivals. Jesus says the meek are "blessed," that meekness makes not for success, but for happiness.

Bunyan knew what he was talking about when he made the Heartsease grow in the Valley of Humiliation, and when he made the shepherd boy sing:

He that is down need fear no fall,
He that is low no pride;
He that is humble ever shall
Have God to be his guide.

MY PURPOSE AND WORK IN JAPAN.

By Toyohiko Kagawa.

Eighteen years ago I began work in the slums of Shinkawa. Japan's population is the densest in the world for its arable area. As 85 per cent of the total area is mountainous, only 15 per cent can be cultivated. There is a population of 2,572 per square mile of arable area, which is twice as dense as the population of Belgium, its nearest rival. As a consequence the death rate is high—among the poor who live in Shinkawa it is 51 per 1,000. Tuberculosis, leprosy, trachoma and sexual diseases are the four worst national diseases which we are attacking. We have organized the White Cross Society to attack tuberculosis and the mission to lepers to face the problem of leprosy. There are probably 60,000 lepers in Japan, the largest number in any civilized nation, and the six Christian leper houses in the country can take care of only 650 of them. The Government takes care of 2,000, leaving the great majority uncared for.

I have been attacking these diseases by addresses and also by writing fiction about them. Two years ago there were printed some passages from my novels about the slums in pamphlet form which were distributed in the House of Peers. This led to the Government's taking up the tenement problem and appropriating twenty million yen on a ten-year program to destroy all the slums in the big cities of Japan. I am projecting a book of fiction about the poor lepers and am writing a novel about politics, and want also to write a piece of fiction about syphilis. The infant mortality rate is exceedingly high. Free clinics were started about ten years ago, conducted not merely for charity work, but as laboratories and experiment stations, endeavoring to find plans for the uplift of the nation.

To relieve the destitution caused especially by such diseases, I have been trying to organize Mutual Aid Societies such as have succeeded very well in Europe. As they succeed I hope to establish them throughout Japan.

Some may think religious education is unnecessary. But religion is not fictitious or visionary; it lies in the hearts of men and is the power of vital life. Marxianism is very popular in Japan now, but I stand for idealism and religion. I never criticise Buddhism unless it becomes necessary, but it is true that Buddhism is onesided. Christianity is more inclusive, more universal. It is Life, Love, Redemption. I take it not categorically nor doctrinally, but as Life.

When I received money for my fiction I gave five thousand yen to establish a night school for laborers, which is probably the best night school for this class in Japan. Other schools have been established for peasants. While I was doing earthquake relief work in Tokyo, the school at Nigata Ken became Marxian, for, as you know, among the laborers Marxianism is more popular than idealism. It is exceedingly important that these schools are founded on Christian and idealistic principles. I started the Shikanjima Settlement as a fortress against Marxianism and the Japanese of Los Angeles give two hundred yen a month to this work.

As I was called upon to organize Labor Federations and Peasants' Unions I thought it necessary to investigate the labor parties of Europe, so when I was invited to lecture to the students of the Pacific Coast I went farther and studied these political movements in the various countries. But while I was away for eight months, sovietism came into my Peasants' Union. It became necessary to cut the Communist party, and finally we had to start a new peasants' movement, the old one deteriorating into chaos. They are now asking us to join with them again. Sovietism has a clever and fearful way of fighting in Japan. But I stand for humanitarianism of Kingsley, Maurice, Hardie and Macdonald. As Wesley's movement saved Great Britain from a revolution when France had its great one, so we are looking to the kingdom of God movement to save Japan.—Issued by Foreign Missions Conferences of North America.

MEETING OF ABERDEEN DISTRICT METHODIST MINISTERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Aberdeen District Methodist Ministers' Association met in the beautiful new church at Amory, Thursday, Sept. 13. Brother Young read us a good sermon at the 11 o'clock hour, after which the ladies served a most wholesome and delicious luncheon, which was enjoyed by every one.

The subject for the afternoon program was "Ministerial Ethics," the discussion of which was entered into freely by almost all present. Brother Parks, the host, came in before the program was over and was asked to make a talk on the subject being discussed, but declined giving a dramatic demonstration.

A vote of thanks was left for the pastor for the use of the church, and the ladies were thanked graciously for the delightful luncheon.

"LIQUOR CONTROL IN CANADA."

(Review of "Liquor Control in Canada," by Ben H. Spence; published by Canadian Prohibition Bureau, 450 Confederation Life Building, Toronto, Canada, at 25 cents.)

By Ernest H. Cherrington, LL.D., Litt.D., Director of Department of Education, Anti-Saloon League of America.

Ben H. Spence's book, "Liquor Control in Canada," which is being distributed by the Canadian Prohibition Bureau, 450 Confederation Life Building, Toronto, Canada, at the nominal price of twenty-five cents, is one of the most timely volumes that can come to a reader's table in the present year. Crammed with data gathered from the official records of all Canadian Provinces, it sets forth with a wealth of phrase the utter failure of the so-called liquor control system wherever tried by our northern neighbors. There are few volumes which would be stronger weapons in the hands of the friends of prohibition wherewith to combat the insidious and utterly false propaganda of those who seek to rivet again upon the American people the chains of the legalized liquor traffic which we hope have been cast off forever. Mr. Spence says:

"'Liquor Control' in the Provinces of Canada is a huge success from the standpoint of those who make, and wish to derive a profit from the sale of liquor; and those who buy, and wish to derive sensations of intoxication from the consumption of liquor; but, from the standpoint of those who seek to remedy the evils of alcoholism, it is a tragic, ghastly failure.

"Writ large in the experience of these Canadian Provinces is the truth, which ought to be self-evident, that the ravages of a plague cannot be remedied by arranging for the dissemination of disease germs, nor can the evils of alcoholism be prevented by providing facilities by which people may obtain alcoholic beverages."

The smuggling and rum-running scandals which have developed under the various systems of "liquor control" in Canada are set forth by Mr. Spence, who quotes from the official reports of the Royal Commission which was appointed to investigate an illicit traffic which grew to be so great that the so-called liquor control boards seemed helpless to combat it. Mr. Spence also sets forth from official reports the evidence of the corruption and the fraud practiced by the brewers, distillers and liquor interests of Canada.

The development of vice, the stimulation of underworld activities, the growth of crime and drunkenness are given in this volume with elaborate and exhaustive citations gathered from the official records.

Two factors in the economic and social problems of Canada are stressed by Mr. Spence. One of these is the enormous drink bill, which is draining away the very life blood of commerce and industry, seriously affecting legitimate trade and imposing needless burdens upon the wealth and industry of the provinces. The rapid increase in value of brewery stocks which he shows hardly compensates a province for the loss of productive industry. The increase in motor accidents, to which he pays considerable attention, demonstrates that under "liquor control," as under the obsolete license system, intoxicants wipe out that margin of safety which is so highly essential in this high-powered and swiftly moving civilization. Mr. Spence, who, Prof. J. Gibson Hume, head of the Department of Philosophy in the University of Toronto, in a foreword, says is "the best known and most fully informed man in Canada in regard to prohibition," speaks as one with authority. In this work he has avoided propaganda and has confined himself almost entirely to presentation of uncontrovertible facts. Every citizen should read this book as an antidote to the liquor group's claims that "Control" is superior to prohibition.

WASHING AN INTERNATIONAL ELEPHANT.

More than a million American women rolled bandages and made surgical dressings during the great war. Why not carry on for the lepers? The medical staff headquarters won't fuss at you if the bandages vary one-eighth of an inch from regulations, and you can feel, in the immortal language of a recent song-hit, that you are washing one of the largest elephants of all time.

The war may be over, but leprosy isn't, although the American Mission to Lepers is bending every effort to secure the world co-operation of governments, of scientists, and of all intelligent and considerate people to put an end to this age-old menace. While the wheels are turning to bring about these large results, the intimate needs of the destitute lepers in rescue stations in twenty countries must not be overlooked. One of the greatest of these needs is for bandages.

To stand by a doctor's side and watch the number of dressings required for even one patient makes one wonder just how a missionary doctor manages 12,000 miles from "Johnson & Johnson" and with insufficient funds to buy dressings locally, even if they could be obtained. Yet they do manage, and incipient cases of leprosy are being cured and the suffering of incurable cases is being eased, and the sound bodies of little children of lepers, who fortunately do not inherit leprosy, are being safeguarded in separate homes.

If these doctors, serving without special compensation and handicapped by lack of equipment and trained assistants, are willing to carry on, the women of America who pride themselves on leading in so many good causes will surely be willing to help them.

Strong bandage material for outer dressings can be washed and used again and again. Any firm cotton or linen cloth is suitable for this. Old sheets and table linen are excellent—cut into two-inch strips, rolled, and fastened with that great national instrument, the safety pin. Even the pin will be used. It will sparkle like a brooch while it holds together the edges of a shawl pinned across the pain-racked shoulders of some leper recipient of your generosity.

If you are willing to prepare a parcel of bandages or merchandise material, let the American Mission to Lepers send you the address of a medical missionary to whom you can ship direct by parcel post.

Write for a free circular, "Material Gifts for Lepers," to W. M. Danner, General Secretary the American Mission to Lepers, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

A Presbyterian preacher stopped at a Kentucky mountain cabin one day, where a gaunt, ragged woman leaned on the dilapidated gate. "Where is your husband to-day?" inquired the preacher.

"Out huntin'."

"Any Presbyterians around here?"

"Wal, now, thet I don't know, stranger, but the hide of every kind of animal thet my husband ever killed is tacked up yander on the back of the smoke-house. You might step thar an' look."—Exchange.

REV. ALEXANDER TROTTER.

Rev. Alexander Trotter was born near Quitman, Clarke County, Miss., Oct. 10, 1840; and died at Matherville, Miss., May 18, 1928. He received his higher education at the University of Mississippi, and Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn., graduating from the latter institution in 1860.

He was among the first to enlist in the cause of the Confederacy at the breaking out of the Civil War, and served throughout the struggle. He made an enviable record as a soldier, serving at different times as lieutenant, captain, and adjutant of the Fourteenth Mississippi Regiment.

On March 6, 1866, he was married to Miss Matilda Pickens, grand-daughter of Governor Pickens, of Alabama. This proved to be a long and happy union of congenial spirits, blessed with seven children, six of whom survive the deceased, as follows: A. P. Trotter, Pensacola, Fla.; Mrs. T. L. Mather, Matherville, Miss.; Mrs. E. Q. Mather, Coffeeville, Ala.; W. L. and George J. Trotter, Maxie, Miss.; and I. W. Trotter, Shubuta, Miss. His companion and one daughter, Mrs. Wm. Hicks, preceded him to the better land a few years ago.

A peculiar circumstance was instrumental in his change from an athetist to a Methodist preacher. His wife became seriously ill, and the doctors pronounced the case hopeless. With all the earnestness of his nature he prayed: "If there is a God and he will raise my wife to health, I will serve him henceforth." At once there came the assurance that his prayer was answered. True to his vow, he began to search the Scriptures as the revelation of the God who heard and answered prayer. He was called to preach, and for a short time was a member of the Mississippi Conference. He located because of the condition of his wife's health, but there was not the least abatement of his interest in the church, or of his zeal in the Master's service. As one of God's true noblemen, he was always capable, conscientious, unselfish, humble, and withal courageous in doing what he conceived to be his duty.

Through his sacrificial efforts in the poverty-stricken period following the Civil War, many young men and women were given the opportunity of an education. These he taught without money or price, instilling into their minds true Christian ideals.

As a preacher of the gospel he was unique. His sermons though short—rarely ever over twenty minutes in length—were Scriptural, thoughtful and always interesting and inspirational.

Throughout a wide area he was a leader in religious, educational and political matters, and moved as a veritable prophet among the people, and when he fell at a ripe old age, God having called to well earned reward, he left a lonesome place against the sky. He still lives in grateful memory of a large company who will see that the lessons of his remarkably virtuous and unselfish life are transmitted to the generations to come.

On the first circuit I served it was my good fortune for four years to be associated with this man of God, and his prayerful interest, and intelligent and friendly criticism are abiding values in my life. With grateful heart I pen this feeble tribute to his memory.

"Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy."

THE PIONEER.

From the Baccalaureate Address of President Clarence P. McClelland to the Graduating Class of Illinois Woman's College.

Jesus was the pioneer of life, and supremely so in that life to him was a great adventure. Lindbergh had a conviction regarding the importance, the desirability, and the practicability of flying across the Atlantic Ocean. Others felt this, too, and sent forth a challenge to aviators and offered a reward. Lindbergh at great personal risk accepted the challenge. He demonstrated that it could be done. He showed the way—others have followed and will follow in his train.

Here is a world of men, ignorant, wandering, lost. Who will go to save the world, to show men the way out of their misery and sin and get them in touch with God? "I will," said Jesus. Paul in seeking to dramatize this, said, "Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus: who, existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servaut, being made in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross. Wherefore also God highly exalted him, and gave unto him the name which is above every name; that in the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things on earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Think of it! Jesus believed that he, one man, could save the world.

Some one has imagined Jesus starting out all alone on his mission to save the world. "Are you prepared to pay the price," God asks, "to leave all you have, home and friends and loved ones?" Jesus replies, "I am." A little later God asks, "Are you still willing to go on with it, to watch the crowds deserting you, to face censure, ridicule, and shame?" Without hesitation. Jesus answers, "I am." Then looms the cross. "Will you go on?" God asks. "I will," replies Jesus. And then they nailed him to the cross and left him there to die, with nothing done, without one person who really understood him, his whole plan falling into utter ruin, his dream become ridiculous. "Dare you pay the full price for it?" asks God, and Jesus replies, "I will." And it is only because he did not turn back, but paid the uttermost it would cost, that the world is being saved, is finding its way to God.

Oh, the Christian life lived at its best is an adventure!

You may remember how the man with the stout countenance in Pilgrim's Progress, after weighing the difficulties of the Christian life, went forward and said: "Set down my name, Sir, for I have looked this whole thing in the face, and cost me what it may, I mean to have Christlikeness and will." This is the spirit of the Christian pioneer. What is Christlikeness? It means a life free from anxiety, a life morally clean; it means pioneering, engaging in the great adventure of saving the world, of saving men from sin, from slavery, from poverty, from ignorance, from war; living cleanly, unselfishly, lovingly, generously.

Well worth remembering also are the last words of Mr. Valiant-for-truth: "'My sword I give to him that shall succeed me in my pilgrimage, and my courage and skill to him that can get it. My marks and scars I carry with me, to be a witness for me, that I have tought his battles who now will be my rewarder.' When the day that he must go hence was come, many accompauled him to the river side, into which as he went he said, 'Death, where is thy sting?' And as he went down deeper, he said, 'Grave, where is thy victory?' So he passed over, and all the trumptes sounded for him on the other side."

Remember! in the end God will not look you over for medals, for degrees, for diplomas, but for scars.—Selected.

THE LENGTH OF THE ROAD.

"How long do you thiuk is the leugth of the road
From Judaea to Nazareth town?"
"There's the soul that I saved, and the brow that I bathed,
And the poor man's load I laid down."
"Don't you mean that the journey to Nazareth town
Is measured by wearisome miles?"
"A traveling God has good deeds for a rod,
When he measures a road set with trials."

"How long do you think is the length of the road From Bethany up Calv'ry hill?"
"There's the garden at night, and my followers' flight,
And the hates of men, burning to kill."
"Don't you mean that the distance up Calvary hill
Is measured as men measure length?"
"Cruel deeds toward a God are the measuring rod,
When he staggers in failing strength."

"How long did you say was the length of the road
From Judaea to Nazareth town?
And how long is the way, up which men pray,
When they climb the hills that frown?
Don't you mean that with miles or feet or yards
Are measured the journeys of earth?"
"No—deeds are the rod, when a loving God
Is measuring length at its worth."

THE WHITWORTH COLLEGE TWIN SISTERS.

Misses Juanita and Oneita Winstead returned to Whitworth College, Brookhaven, Miss, September 18, as members of the Junior College senior class. Miss Juanita has been elected President of the Student Government organization; Miss Oneita is the Editor-in-Chief of the Leofost, the Whitworth College Annual.

These twin sisters, daughters of Rev. and Mrs. T. B. Winstead, of Harperville, Miss., entered Whitworth College in September, 1927, as members of the freshman class. Throughout the school year they maintained a high scholastic record and tied for honors. They were awarded the annual prize of five dollars in gold for the highest average in first-year Latin, and for highest honors for maintaining an average of over 91 throughout the session.

TO THE METHODISTS OF MISSISSIPPI.

The two Methodist Annual Conferences of Mississippi at their 1927 sessions appointed a Commission to look into the matter of making recommendations to the two Annual Conferences regarding the matter of making adequate provision for the moral and spiritual well-being of our Methodist students at the State institutions of learning in Mississippi. We have something like 500 Methodist students at each of the following State institutions: M. S. C. W., at Columbus; University of Mississippi, at Oxford; and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at Starkville. No special provision is made for any of these students that is adequate to their needs save at M. S. C. W. Through an arrangement with the two Woman's Missionary Societies and the two Annual Conferences of Mississippi we have Miss Pauline Wynn employed to look after our girls at M. S. C. W. Miss Wynn is doing a most excellent work for our girls, the value of which is incalculable. Knowing something of the greatness of the work that is being done by Miss Wynn at M. S. C. W., it is desired to accomplish something similar thereto for our Methodist students at other State institutions.

A report of the work of the Commission follows:

The Commission appointed by the North Mississippi and the Mississippi Conferences at their 1927 sessions to look into the matter of making adequate provision for the religious care and instruction of the Methodist students at our State colleges, was called to meet in the early part of the year at Jackson, Miss., in the Edwards Hotel. There were only three of the Commission present: Brothers George Thompson, V. C. Curtis and J. T. Lewis. After organizing, with V. C. Curtis as president, and J. T. Lewis as secretary, the business before the Commission was freely discussed, and the following resolution was passed:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Commission that the two Annual Conferences of Mississippi and the General Board of Education of the Methodist Episcipal Church, South, be requested and urged to appropriate each $800 for each of the following institutions: The University of Mississippi, Agricultural and Mechanical College, and the Hattiesburg Normal, said $2,400 per year for each college to be used to equip and maintain office and meeting place for students and to pay for a student secretary who is to give whole time to looking after the moral and spiritual well-being of our Methodist students at said institutions.

Owing to the fact that we now have satisfactory arrangements between the two Mississippi Conferences and the Missionary Conferences of the two Annual Conferences relative to M. S. C. W., it was decided to let those arrangements stand.

FROM THE PELICAN PINES—PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

By Rev. S. A. Steel, D.D.

There is somebody in New Orleans that ought to be in the lunatic asylum. Why? Because, here is a letter from the secretary of the "Hoover Campaign Committee" telling me that a "mutual friend" gave him my name and address as one who would help to elect Hoover President. Nobody in his right mind would do such an absurd thing as that. Whoever did it is no friend of mine. I never have voted the Republican ticket, and I never will. I do not care to get into politics, especially the nasty sort we have to deal with now; but when such slanders are perpetrated about me, I get indignant. I hope the Advocate will let me deny the outrageous charge that I would vote the Republican ticket. I wouldn't do it if Gabriel himself was the candidate. I don't criticise any one for the way they vote; but I don't want any one to have such a false opinion of me as to think I would go back on my record, prove recreant to my convictions, soil my good name, and tarnish my shield with the smut of the Republican party. I rise to a question of personal privilege, and I hope this plain statement will stop the foolish propaganda that sends me Hoover campaign literature. I throw all these documents in the fire basket.

APPRECIATION.

(Directed to be published by the Publishing Committee.)

The ten years' connection of Dr. Henry T. Carley with the New Orleans Christian Advocate comes to an end at the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference. The Publishing Committee desire to express as best they can their wholehearted appreciation of Dr. Carley. Clean and strong in his conception of what constitutes a man and editor, he has lived up to his high ideals in every particular. He goes from the editorship of the Advocate with the love and appreciation of every member of the Committee. This appreciation goes beyond the personal equation, including his strong and conservative work as editor. Wherever, in the providence of God and by the authority of the church, he may work in years to come, he will carry our love personally and our appreciation of the contributions he has made to the patronizing territory. His friends are legion. He lives in their hearts. He lives and will continue to live by the name he has won for himself and his Lord. The blessings of the Great Head of the church rest upon him and his family!

OUR CHRISTIAN HOPE.

Hope that is born of science and natural evidence awakens no joyful enthusiasm in the masses of mankind. It stands with a question upon its lips, tremulous at times, peering into the future with a troubled gaze, hoping rather than believing, and passing into the future with the peace of resignation rather than the joy of assurance. Christian hope—that is, hope that is born of trust in the person of Christ and belief in the promise of Christ—voices itself in words of assurance such as these: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," II Corinthians 5:1; in words of triumph: "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord," Romans 8:38, 39; in words of victory: "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ!" I Corinthians 175:57; in words of comfort: "Let not your heart be troubled! Ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my father's house there are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also," John 14:1, 2, 3; in words of peace: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid!" John 14:27. Dr. John McDowell.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

Dear Mr. Editor: I desire to express through the New Orleans Christian Advocate my very great appreciation of the services of Rev. E. S. Lewis as a presiding elder and of his sterling Christian character.

Brother Lewis has been my presiding elder for the past three years. He was a member of the committee which examined me for license to preach. He has been in my home and I have been in his home. I have been with Brother Lewis on a great many occasions, and on all of these occasions he has acted like a Christian gentleman. It has been a joy and an inspiration to me to work with a presiding elder like E. S. Lewis.

This is the eighth year that Brother Lewis has served as a presiding elder during his ministry. The office carries with it a tremendous responsibility. It seems to be the office of hard knocks. If the elder does his duty, people say very little about it, but if he makes a mistake, they don't fail to tell him about it. So I just throw this bouquet to Brother Lewis and trust that there may be in it a fragrance that shall make life sweeter for him.

FIDELITY TO HIS OWN PLACE.

Mr. J. W. Chapman is a very well known financial man. He was at one time president of a bank, and kept a small boy to attend the door and run errands. This boy's post of duty was at the door, and he was given a stool to sit on. Two or three days after he had taken up his work at the bank Mr. Chapman was surprised to get word from his secretary that the boy wished to see him.

This is the story as Mr. Chapman tells it: "He said that the boy would not talk to him, but insisted on seeing me. I was busy, but as I believe that all boys have a reason for what they attempt to do, I ordered him shown in. He came directly to my desk and said:

"'Mr. Chapman, you're the president of this bank?'

"'I am.'

"'You can order things done right, can't you?'

"'I believe I can.'

"'Well, sir, that stool they have given me at the front entrance ain't right with the rest of the bank. It's dirty; it ought to be varnished, and it ought to look as good as the doors. The janitor says I'm fussy, and won't help me. I thought you ought to know about it. The bank oughtn't to look cheap on account of a stool.'

"I suppose some men would have laughed. I could not. The boy's desire to have his position and equipment in harmony with all the other parts of the bank struck me forcibly. He got the stool finished as he believed it should be, and not only that, he made friends through his fidelity to his own place.

"In the years that have passed since that place was given him he has steadily gone upward. He shows to-day the same desire to care for his particular place in work that he did when his wages were but $3 a week and his post of dignity a stool by a bank entrance!"—Sunday School Advocate.

THE FACE THAT PREACHED.

A fugitive paragraph whose author is not named tells how a woman, longing for a holy life, asked the Lord to teach her if it were possible. Going to a convention, she saw a face which had upon it the joy and peace of heaven. Day after day she watched the minister, but she saw always the same serenity and glory. She went home praising God that he had answered her prayer and shown her a living example of holiness, and she soon entered into the joy of the radiant life. We are told that she wrote the brother of what he had done for her. It gave him great though humble joy. For the hand of misfortune had been on him. His health had failed. He could work no longer. And yet he had been used of God, because like Moses, his face told the story that he had been with God in the secret place. Our own holy life will some way transfigure our features, if we go hand in hand with Jesus.—Selected.

Four Sunday schools and three language schools for Korean children on the Oakland-Sacramento and Stockton-Reedley circuits in California are doing a fine work. More than seventy pupils are enrolled in the Sunday schools and fifty-five in the language schools. The Rev. C. K. Yim is the Methodist pastor in charge of these two circuits.

SARDIS DISTRICT PREACHERS' MEETING.

Dear Dr. Carley: I am sending the program for the October meeting of Sardis District Preachers' meeting, which will be held in the Free Springs church, on the Tyro charge, with Rev. K. S. L. Cooke and his good people of that splendid church. We are to meet at 10 o'clock a. m., Oct. 9.

10 a. m., Sermon, by Rev. G. W. Robertson.

11 a. m., "What Preparation Does the Sunday School Superintendent Need to Fill His Office?" Round table discussion led by the Hon. H. Grady Johnson, of Hernando. Let each pastor bring his superintendent.

12 o'clock, Lunch.

1:30 p. m., "Ministerial Ethics," by Rev. W. W. Hartsfield, Rev. G. H. Boyles, Rev. H. N. Kibben; "Methodism's Position on the Ordinance of Baptism," by Rev. B. G. Whitehurst, Rev. A. L. Davenport, and Rev. A. C. Johnson; "The Best Book I Have Read This Year," five-minute talks, by our presiding elder, Rev. T. M. Bradley, and C. N. Kinard, and A. T. Clanton.

We held our September meeting with Rev. H. R. McKee and his hospitable people at Hernando, and enjoyed a most pleasant and profitable day. The program committee had arranged a splendid program. The sermon was preached by Rev. M. H. McCall, our pastor at Mount Pleasant. Brother McCall was reared in Hernando and so was on his native heath, and must have been at his best, for he gave us a masterly sermon. It was good to be there.

GOLDEN MOMENTS.

Golden Moments! Golden Moments!
Swiftly passing, quickly gone.
Disappearing like the dewdrops,
Shining on a sunlit lawn.
Golden Moments! Each a jewel
Which we keep or which we lose,
Opportunities that, offered,
We accept or we refuse.

Golden Moments! Gems uncounted,
Jewels priceless and sublime.
Let us save each Golden Moment,
Speeding past on wings of time;
Save, Improve each fleeting second
Whilst we tarry on this Sphere,
For the day is surely coming
When we are no longer here.

HOW ZIBDI KEPT BAIRAM.

Zibdi was a little Syrian girl. Her real name was Zebadi, but she had been nicknamed "Zibdi," which means "butter." That was when she was fat and jolly; but the day before the feast of Bairam she was neither plump nor happy. Zebadi ought to have looked forward to Bairam, but somehow she could not.

This feast is kept by the Mohammedan, or Moslem, people who do not believe in Christ's teachings but are followers of an Arab, Mohammed, who lived about six hundred years after Christ. Bairam consists of three days of merrymaking and feasting. There are swings in the public squares for the children; toys, cakes, and sweets; gay-colored dresses for the girls and new caps for the boys. No wonder the Moslem children loook forward to Bairam.

Zebadi stood sadly in Mrs. Carr's hallway, and waited for her grandmother, who was talking to the American missionary. Zebadi's grandmother had been telling a long complaining story to which Mrs. Carr had listened patiently.

"Money for food and money for clothes for Zibdi," she whined.

"Perhaps I can give you food and some old clothes for Zebadi," said Mrs. Carr.

"But I must have money," said the grandmother. "See, oh beloved! Zibdi's mother died when she was very small. The Turks took her father, my Ahmed, for a soldier, and he died of typhus. I have supported Zibdi a year and cannot afford to keep her any longer. She is ten years old and pretty. If I dress her well for Bairam, perhaps I can sell her for a bride."

"A bride! Ten years old!" exclaimed Mrs. Carr. "You must not think of such a thing."

"She is old enough," persisted the woman. "She might find a good home and I might even get two gold pieces for her. There is a shopkeeper who—"

"No, no. You must not. I will not give you anything unless you promise to wait until Zebadi is at least fourteen."

"Fourteen! That will be four years. How shall we live?"

"If you will promise, I will help you and the child as best I can. If you plan to sell her now, not another para will I give you."

"A bird in the hand," muttered Zebadi's grandmother. After all, the girl would fetch a higher price at fourteen than she would at ten.

"I promise," she said finally.

Then Mrs. Carr found a small bag of lentils for her, and some flour. From a trunk she unearthed warm clothing which might do for Zebadi. The old woman offered profuse thanks and went away with Zebadi following dejectedly but asking no questions.

"She gave us little enough," grumbled her grandmother. "She wouldn't give us anything till I promised you should not be married this Bairam. No, not for four years."

Zebadi lifted her head suddenly, with a new light shining in her eyes. Though she was only a child she had understood what had been her grandmother's plans for her. She knew that after Bairam she might have to wear the shapeless izar, or outer wrap, and a veil over her face when men were present. She knew, too, that then her childhood would be over. No wonder she had not looked forward to Bairam!

So Zebadi did not have the bright pink silk dress her grandmother had desired to get her, nor a flowered head covering, but she was grateful for four more years of childhood.

When the Great War brought sickness and starvation to Syria, Zebadi and her grandmother suffered with the rest of the people. After the first year they were too poor even to think of celebrating Bairam, and by the next Bairam the old grandmother had died.

Zebadi was then twelve. She went to Mrs. Carr and begged for work. She was a thin little girl, but very bright and willing and she soon won the trust of the family with whom Mrs. Carr placed her. They were good Christian people, who taught Zebadi some things she had never dreamed of. Now she is sixteen—and last year she celebrated, not Bairam, but her first real Christmas.—Louise P. Dana, in Over Sea and Land.

CHER AMI, THE PIGEON THAT SAVED THE LOST BATTALION.

During the World War many and varied were the means used to defeat the enemy. Every sort and kind of living creature had their part in this. One of the means used was the employing of carrier-pigeons. Many interesting stories are told of these but none more thrilling than that of Cher Ami ("Dear Friend").

After a hard, tiring day's march, the battalion of 679 soldiers reached their destination, and hoped for rest. With them were five carrier-pigeons, which slept peacefully in their baskets. Early the following morning, to their horror and dismay, they found the forest in their rear alive with the enemy soldiers, and themselves entirely cut off from ally assistance.

Five days of torturing gun fire followed, during which time the men began to perish from hunger and became delirious from their wounds. One by one four carrier-pigeons were released, hoping they would get through with their message, and help would come, but with no avail.

And then came still further disaster, for it was discovered that the Allies, totally ignorant of the position of the battalion, were shelling them from behind the enemy's lines.

"What shall we do, what shall we do, to save our men?" was the agonized cry of the battalion officers.

"We still have one carrier-pigeon left us, Cher Ami. Perhaps he will get our message through. It is our last hope," they said. An officer hastily wrote the message, "For heaven's sake, stop it." Then he rolled this message in the capsule and attached it to the right leg of Cher Ami. The pigeon lingered for a moment in the hand of his friend, then spreading his wings, the little gray soldier was off. A second later it was seen to fall, wildly fluttering in pained surprise. Dully the men stood around watching the agonized flutterings of their last pigeon, their one hope.

But Cher Ami's courage did not fail. Amid shrieking shells and dense smoke, his spirit heard the call "Come home." He raised his head, he spread his wings and soon was once more in the air, on his way. One-half hour later, twenty-five miles away, a sergeant of the allied army saw a small gray speck in the clouds. Nearer and nearer it came, fluttered round and round and finally flew down the landing-board. It was Cher Ami, dripping with blood and staggering with weakness. Then it was discovered that a machine-gun bullet had pierced his breast and torn away one leg, but the message capsule still hung by a clotted ligament. Hastily the message was detached and read. The barrage was instantly stopped and that night the allied army smashed through the enemy's lines, saved the remnant of the lost battalion, and brought 252 men back to safety.

And Cher Ami? He survived his wounds for one year; was brought home on a United States transport, was decorated with the Distinguished Service Cross, and lived out his days, the petted mascot of the signal corps headquarters in Washington. —Homiletic Review.

A POOR "DO."

"O, she swept the room," said sunshiny Rose, getting the end of her broom farther into the stiff, dusty corner, "but it did seem as if she didn't put any energy into it. Some people drag so about their work! They get it done, but"—and she swept the dust into her dustpan with a clean, brisk motion—"but it's a poor do!"

"It's a poor do!" The expression comes back to one over and over again.

"Done, but a poor do," says the grocer who sends his errand boy with a box of eggs and hears that he broke half a dozen on the road. That is a plain case. More eggs must be sent out to the same place. But how about the young fellow whose letter home is a hasty postal card with the cold announcement that he is "all right, but busy every minute?" Done, and a very poor do. That's all.

Then how about the other fellow, who sits through the evening service half asleep; or his neighbor, who reads and whispers during the singing or the sermon or the prayer? That is "going to church." Done, but a mighty poor do.

The lesson half mastered and recited parrot-like, the invitation given in a careless and almost impolite manner, the errand not forgotten but done with such lack of interest that a second trip must needs be taken, the dishes washed but not shining, the fine book skimmed but not appreciated, the word spoken perfunctorily and not from the heart—how the cases of the "poor do's" multiply in our memories as we think of them!

Better no do at all than a poor do. Better refuse to go, in honest laziness or rudeness or selfishness, than to say, "I go, sir," and to do it not.—Forward.

WHAT CAN GIRLS DO?

Some one suggests, in the Girls' World, fifteen things which every girl ought to learn before she is fifteen. Not every one can learn to play or sing or paint well enough to give pleasure to her friends, but the following "accomplishments" are within every girl's reach:

Never fuss or fret or fidget.
Never keep anybody waiting.
Shut the door, and shut it softly.
Have an hour for rising, and rise.
Always know where your things are.
Learn to make bread as well as cake.
Never go about with your shoes unbuttoned.
Speak clearly enough for everybody to understand.
Be patient with the little ones, as you wish your mother to be with you.
Never let the day pass without something to make somebody comfortable.

The girl who has thoroughly done all this might be called a mistress of arts.—Selected.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE:

Louisiana Conference—Rev. W. W. Drake, D.D., Rev. R. H. Harper, D.D., Rev. S. J. Davies.

Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. T. Leggett. Rev. W. H. Saunders, Rev. J. E. Gray.

North Mississippi Conference—Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. J. W. Dorman, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb.

DIRECTIONS:

All checks and money orders should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Communications pertaining to subscriptions and other business matters should be addressed to the Manager, or to the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Printed Label on a paper shows the date to which a subscription is paid. It is as good as a written receipt. When renewal is made, if the date is not moved forward after four weeks, notify us, and we will make it right.

Communications intended for the Editor should be directed to him at 512 Camp Street. Correspondents will observe the following rules: 1. Write on only one side of the paper. 2. If you have a typewriter, by all means use it; otherwise use a good quality of black ink. 3. Leave a space of at least two inches at the top of the first page; leave a margin of at least one inch on the left-hand side of the page; do not crowd the words and the lines together. 4. Take special pains to write proper names correctly and legibly. 5. Use letter paper if you can get it—not note paper. No attention will be paid to rolled manuscripts.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

On Thursday, Sept. 20, 1928, at 9.20 a. m., the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate met in the office at 512 Camp Street, New Orleans, La.

Rev. R. H. Harper, presiding elder of the New Orleans District and chairman of the Publishing Committee, called the Committee to order and Brother J. W. Dorman, of the North Mississippi Conference, made the prayer for the guidance of the Spirit in the deliberations of the meeting.

All the members of the Committee, three from each Conference, were present, as follows: Rev. R. H. Harper, D.D., Rev. W. W. Drake, D.D., Rev. S. J. Davies, of the Louisiana Conference; Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. W. H. Saunders, Rev. J. Early Gray, of the Mississippi Conference; Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. J. W. Dorman, and Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of the North Mississippi Conference. Some of these brethren have been on the Committee for several years and have given the best of their thought and attention to this paper to make it the educational agency for the more than one hundred and fifty thousand Methodists in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi.

The reports of the Editor and the Publisher revealed the fact that the paper is in much better condition than it has been in former days; and yet it is far from coming up to the number of subscribers that it should have. Unless the people read and inform themselves in the matters of the church, they cannot expect to take the interest they should. To get the paper into the homes of the people has been and is the problem we have tried to solve. Every move made in these last several years has been for that one purpose—to get the paper into the homes of the membership. Nothing less than the loyal support of every agency, every official, bishop, presiding elder, pastor, editor, publisher, and official members of all the churches can accomplish this most essential thing. If all these do their part, it is quite certain that it can be done. It is every man's job, and we cannot complain if it falls when so many neglect to do their part.

Every member of the committee came with but one purpose in his mind, and that was to do the best thing possible, and it is certain that in everything done and said, that was the honest aim of all.

After settling all the business affairs of the paper and hearing reports and discussions of every feature of the situation, the Committee proceeded to the election of an editor for the next four years. One ballot was taken to ascertain who might be in the minds of the brethren for this position. Rev. H. T. Carley, D.D., the present editor; Rev. P. O. Lowery, Rev. J. T. Leggett, Rev. J. H. Felts, Rev. R. H. Harper, D.D., and Rev. J. L. Decell, D.D., all received nominating votes. Each of the brethren who was present was requested to make some statement of the policy he would adopt for the paper if he should be elected editor; and some one represented those absent. It is certain that all these brethren possess qualifications that fit them to make good editors. In stating his policy, Brother Leggett withdrew his name and requested the brethren not to vote for him.

In the first ballot to select an editor, all those left in the running after Brother Leggett withdrew received votes. After the fourth ballot, Brother Felts withdrew his name, and on the fifth ballot Rev. R. H. Harper received five votes and Dr. Carley received four. This vote made Dr. Harper editor.

Dr. Harper possesses a most delightful personality, social and pleasant in his contact with people. He is scholarly and popular with the masses, holds high fraternal relations with many leading associations of men, and is one of the leaders of his own Conference, which is composed of many of the strongest preachers in the whole connection. He is also a great preacher of the gospel and a very acceptable pastor.

A paper was prepared and read expressing the high esteem and regard held for Dr. Carley, who has held the editorship for ten years and guided the church through some of the trying periods, when issues that stirred the church were involved. He has given great editorials and allowed fair discussions in its columns to those who wished to express themselves on popular questions of the day, affecting both church and State.

The present status of things will remain up to the meetings of the three patronizing Conferences. Dr. Carley will carry the love and high regard of all the people into any other relation he may hold in the church. The whole Committee commends Dr. Harper to all, requesting a royal and hearty reception and a co-operation that will assure great success for the paper.

The matter of arranging for printing and publishing the paper was left to the Executive Committee, which will be consummated in the near future.

The Committee also requests that at some time during the coming sessions of our Conferences special emphasis be given to the Advocate, and that the matter may be impressed on the minds of the preachers.

W. H. SAUNDERS, Secretary.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

We express our thanks to Mr. J. G. Henington, Crystal Springs, Miss., for two renewal subscriptions.

A chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, national honorary fraternity, will be installed in Emory University this fall.

We sincerely thank Rev. A. D. Lemons, Selma, La., for a list of five subscriptions to the Advocate recently sent in.

The annual meeting of the National Council for Prevention of War will be held at the Congress Hall Hotel, Washington, D. C., Oct. 16-18.

Rev. and Mrs. L. R. Nease, Jr., Barham, La., announce the birth of a daughter, Jo Ann, on Sept. 19. May blessings rest upon the little one!

Rev. and Mrs. H. L. Johns announce the birth of a daughter on Saturday of last week. Blessings upon the little lady! Brother Johns is pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city.

Whitworth College began its work last week with the largest enrollment in its history, according to press reports. Dr. D. M. Key, president of Millsaps College, and Dr. J. L. Decell, presiding elder of the Jackson District, were the principal speakers at the opening exercises.

Mrs. R. W. MacDonell, long identified with the missionary work of the church, died at the home of her son, in Yakima, Washington, on Sept. 10. She was buried at Macon, Ga., her birthplace.

We learn from the Grenada Sentinel that revival services were begun at the Methodist church in Grenada, Miss., on last Sunday. The preaching is being done by Rev. J. M. Glenn, of Young Harris, Ga.

Dr. H. F. Brooks, our pastor at Clarksdale, Miss., underwent an operation at the Methodist Hoepital, Memphis, on Thursday of last week. His many friends will pray that Dr. Brooks may be fully restored to health.

Rev. and Mrs. P. M. Caraway announce the birth of a daughter on Saturday of last week. May blessings abide upon the little one! Brother Caraway is pastor of Parker Memorial Methodist Church, this city.

The Triennial Convention of the Episcopal Church will be held in Washington, D. C., Oct 9-27. It is expected that 25,000 people will be in attendance. This great convention met in New Orleans a few years ago.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Felgar Brooks announce the marriage of their daughter, Elizabeth, to Mr. Edgar Lee Anderson, Jr., on Friday, Sept. 14, at the First Methodist Church, Clarksdale, Miss. The Advocate extends all good wishes to the happy young couple.

Rev. Alonzo Monk, Jr., one of our most effective general evangelists, will be in a meeting with Rev. W. R. Lott at West Point, Miss., until Sept. 30. On account of the postponement of a meeting in New Mexico, Brother Monk has open dates from Oct. 14 to Nov. 11.

Mrs. Frank L. Wells, wife of our pastor at First Church, Baton Rouge, La., is in the Baton Rouge General Hospital, where on last Thursday she underwent a serious operation. She is improving rapidly, and it is considered that the operation was in every way successful.

We learn with regret of the death of Mrs. Eugenia Box, at her home in Shubuta, Miss., on Sept. 14. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. J. Dawson, assisted by Rev. J. M. Phillips, with interment in the Odd Fellows' cemetery at Quitman, Miss. The Advocate extends sincere sympathy to the sorrowing family and friends.

Rev. Eugene Wedgeworth, Lucedale, Miss., requests us to announce that the camp meeting will begin at Salem Camp Ground on the first Sunday in October and continue through the second Sunday. Rev. Luther A. Horn, evangelist of the Alabama Conference, will do the preaching. A cordial invitation is extended to everybody to attend the meeting.

Proof readers—"one of whom the editor is which"—are not infallible. A good illustration of this fact is the caption of a very fine devotional article in last week's Advocate, written by Mrs. George S. Brown. As it appeared, the caption was, "Political Texts;" it should have been, "Poetical Texts." We are sure the readers wondered where the "politics" came in.

We have come across a little book recently that is exactly what we have wanted for a long time—"The Complete Sayings of Jesus." This little book contains all of Christ's recorded words, assembled in sequence, without comment or any other matter except just enough of the New Testament context to make the connections clear. The book is published by D. H. Pierpont & Company, Williamsburg, Mass. It is inexpensive in price.

Rev. W. B. Jones, pastor of the Fifth Street Methodist Church, Meridian, Miss., requests us to announce that Bishop U. V. W. Darlington will lay the corner stone of the new church building on Saturday, Sept. 29, at 3 o'clock p.m. Former presiding elders and pastors are most cordially invited to be present, as well as all the preachers and friends in the district and the Conference who can come. The public generally is also invited.

Miss Ora Hooper requests us to publish the following announcement: "Mrs. C. H. Debterly, 125 East Boulevard, Baton Rouge, La., is the district librarian of the Baton Rouge District. Any one who has books to contribute will please send them direct to her. Mission and Bible study books are especially needed. Any one desiring books from the library will please call for them at Mrs. Debterly's home. She lives across from the First Methodist Church, to the side."

Mr. F. L. Sensabaugh has been appointed director of religious education in the Boston Avenue Methodist Church, Tulsa, Okla., one of the greatest churches of the connection. Mr. Sensabaugh is favorably known throughout the church through his connection with the General Sunday School Board. Dr. Claude M. Reves is pastor of Boston Avenue, and Dr. P. P. Claxton, formerly United States Commissioner of Education, is the general superintendent of the Sunday school.

From the Grenada Sentinel we learn that Grenada College began its seventy-seventh session on Thursday of last week under the most auspicious circumstances. The freshman class is one of the largest the college has ever had. The Sentinel says: "One hundred per cent of the young women graduates of last spring in Grenada County are enrolled in the college." Short addresses were made at the opening by President Countiss; Rev. R. L. McLeod, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church; Rev. E. S. Lewis, presiding elder of the Grenada District, and Rev. J. H. Holder, pastor of the First Methodist Church.

Rev. J. C. Jackson, pastor at Van Cleave, Miss., writes: "The New Prospect camp meeting of the Vancleave charge, Mississippi Conference, situated six miles north of Vancleave, will begin on Tuesday night, Oct. 16. Rev. Luther A. Horn, of Mobile, Ala., Conference evangelist of the Alabama Conference, will do the preaching. The music will be in charge of Rev. J. Ray Watson, of Holt, Fla. Both these brethren are strong in their fields of labor, and all who attend the camp may be assured of hearing the gospel both in preaching and in song. A cordial invitation is extended to all who can attend the meeting."

Group meetings of Conference Missionary Secretaries are being held throughout the church in preparation for the great missionary convention to be held in Memphis, Jan. 1-3, 1929. Brother W. D. Hawkins, so well known in Mississippi—and throughout the church, for that matter—has been appointed by Dr. Cram to act as general director of these group meetings. Rev. J. G. Snelling, Louisiana Conference Missionary Secretary, attended the meeting in Atlanta last week. The Memphis convention is expected to be one of the greatest in the history of the church. The Memphis Chamber of Commerce will provide all facilities for the meeting and take care of all local expenses. It is expected that there will be an attendance of 5,000 at this great inspirational gathering.

From the Bulletin of the First Methodist Church, Baton Rouge, La.: "Mr. Charles H. McEuen, our new Director of Student Work, comes to us from the University Methodist Church, at Austin, Tex., where he directed the work of that church in its contacts with about eighteen hundred Methodist students. Mr. McEuen brings to his service here, not only his valuable experience, but also a deep and friendly interest in all students. He has chosen this as his life-work, and his success in other fields makes us glad that we have been able to secure him for our church. Let all students, not only those in our University, but also high school students and those in our Junior High School, feel free to consult Mr. McEuen concerning any of your problems. You will find in him a friendly and wise counselor."

HIS RIGHTFUL PLACE.

Only when Christ is given his rightful place as Sovereign in the soul can there be rest and true blessedness. Only when the senates of the nations have acknowledged his rule, only when the individual Christian sets out to make Christ sovereign of the personal life and then of the whole wide world, can the fruits of salvation be gathered.

The church of God exists for this very purpose, for it is composed of women and men who have themselves given public acknowledgment of the crown of rights of the Redeemer. They are meant to spread the knowledge of his love and of the will divine to the distant places of the earth; they are likewise intended to bring Christ's ideals before men, and to bring his principles to the work of redeeming society. Alas, sometimes we have been too much engrossed with our own petty affairs, and have spent time and strength in carping at one another when we ought to have been assailing the triple alliance of the world, the flesh and the devil, smiting it hip and thigh. We have been kept so close to the minor details of organization and the rest that we have failed to see Jesus crowned with glory and honor.

Yet when the Christian has seen this vision, whenever the church has realized the dignity of her position, what has followed? She has gone forth to heal the soul-sick, and to pour the light of celestial day upon darkened minds. She has never appeared more noble than when she has attempted what has been rated as a quixotic quest, or when, in the name of the Crucified, she has gone forth to subdue lawlessness and exorcise the spirit of evil from the breasts of mankind. The day of his sovereignty shall yet dawn. Christ shall yet reign. And the reason? The eternal principles that underlie his sacrifice and his claims can never be abrogated.

Sir Frank Dicksee in "The Two Crowns" has shown us a young king entering his capital amid the plaudits of the populace. Banners flutter in the air. The folk at the windows fling flowers in his path, while he rides proudly on. His crown flashes in the morning light, scintillating with its myriad gems, while his whole bearing is eloquent of kingly dignity and the splendor of temporal supremacy. But even as he canters through the gateway of the city, his eyes catch sight of a figure of Christ, hanging upon the cross. Instinctively he realizes that while his power must wane, the sway of this divine Master must increase, for his star is ever in the ascendant. Christ's kingdom is founded on love. Rev. J. W. G. Ward, in "His Last Week."

A KID'S TRICK.

The Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church of Minneapolis has recently put on a tin can campaign to raise money for an indebtedness. The scheme was to distribute tin can banks in which the members of the church were asked to place their contributions for this cause.

One man who evidently did not like the idea of carrying the bank remarked: "It makes me feel like a seven-year-old boy to carry this bank home. It's a kid's trick." The church paper used his retort as the basis of a brief editorial which appeared under the caption, "A Kid's Trick."

Maybe that man knows now how the pastor has felt and how members of the finance committee have felt when somebody came to collect a bill and we did not have the money. It may be a kid's trick to fill a little tin bank, but it is a man's trick to pay the church's bills and get it out of the woods. If anybody feels ashamed of a little bank, let him put in a check that nobody will be ashamed of. That will save all humiliation—Exchange.

OUR WHITE LIST.

Everybody else is making a black list. Let us make up the great American white list. Who will go into it? Here are our suggestions:

1. The man who is sufficiently American to know that our Indepedence was won by a revolution and not by regularity.
2. The fellow who hates war and isn't afraid to say so.
3. The person who is enough of a friend of mankind to protest against the exploitation of human lives to enrich the pocketbooks of over-fat corporations.
4. The individual who loves little children and would rather pay taxes to build schoolhouses than cannon.
5. The statesman who prefers a clean conscience to a job.
6. The citizen who understands that the United States is a constitutional country.
7. The preacher who listens for the call of the voice of God instead of the jingling of coins in the pocket of the trustees.

What other nominations have you?—"Church Management."

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

The Hattiesburg District Standard Training School was the best school we have ever had in the Hattlesburg District—109 were enrolled and we had ninety-seven credits. This is both a fine percentage and comes within three of being our goal.

All three of the churches in Hattiesburg had large numbers in the school. This was gratifying, and we trust will mean a great deal to the work in each of the schools.

This school was conducted in the Religious Education building of Main Street Church. This is the best plant for the educational work we have. We trust that the workers in this church will learn the best use of this building and make its use contribute to the bringing in of the kingdom. There is a great place in the future for this church, and we trust that Main Street will enter in with determination.

The Mission money is coming in slowly. We are still trusting that there will be a large increase over last year. We need the money, and the Sunday schools need the information about missions. We are hopeful that more of our schools will put on the program and thus give missionary training to an ever-increasing body of our people.

God really means for the Southern Methodist people to take an active interest in saving the world. Here is the point of beginning. God help us to take advantage and make a showing that will bring joy to our missionaries and the Board of Missions.

Just a short time now before Conference. It looks as if we will fall of our goal of 100 preachers taking credit this year in Leadership Training. We regret this, as we had set our hearts upon it. Last year we had seventy-five; it looks now as if we won't even reach seventy-five. We have two more schools. Pray that the Lord will put it into the hearts of the preachers to take the units even this late in the Conference year.

Our efforts for 200 superintendents taking credit looks as if we will have about 100. Perhaps we set our goal too high to begin with. We hope that this will be a starting point and that from now on this list will continue to grow.

Sunday School Day: Some of our best friends have not observed the Day. We are still hoping they will. The program this year is good and will stimulate all the interests of the Sunday school.

Childhood and Youth Week: Write to Miss Dorris Alford, 401 Millsaps Building, Jackson, Miss., for supplies for the observance of this week. Each year we have made progress along this line, and this year we are again depending upon the workers in the Sunday schools to observe the week. It is the greatest opportunity ever offered in beginning the new Sunday school year right.

Pray for the work and the workers.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, Sardis, Miss.

Numbers of the better schools have ordered programs for the observance of Childhood and Youth Week. Your school will be better after you have done this piece of work. Drop me a card saying you want a half dozen programs and two posters. You can prepare the program in thirty minutes. It will take more time to have all the homes visited. The time will be well spent in going into the homes and giving an invitation to the service.

Your school will make a big mistake if it fails to order the new Cokesbury Record Books. They are as near perfect as anything we have prepared for our schools. If you are making history, it is worth recording properly. They can be used by any school, large or small. The thing to do is to order them and use them.

Surely you have not forgotten to order copies of the Workers' Council and the Elementary Teacher. These are tools the teachers must have if they do their work effectively. If you do not have the money, ask the parents to give what is needed. Practice economy somewhere else, not on the religious instruction of the children.

Rev. Sam Ashmore, pastor of Carrollton charge, in remitting for Sunday School Day, says: "We have observed the day in five churches and hope to have the last school on the circuit do likewise. The offerings amount to near $50 for the five schools." This faithful pastor has done a fine piece of work for his own schools and has rendered assistance to all the schools of the Conference. The man is the thing that counts in extending the kingdom. May his tribe increase.

I went with Brother T. M. Bradley to Wesley, east of Batesville, Sunday. To our sorrow, we found no school at this historic church. All around this church the other denominations are doing something for the children. We had the promise of a few to undertake the organization of a school to begin the first of October. The difficulty is not with the children and young people, but with the parents. We spent the evening at Enid, where a half dozen denominations are conducting a union school. Good work is being done by these parents for their children.

If you care to have your school checked before Conference, say the word, and we will do our best for you. It takes some courage to face facts, but we will never get anywhere until we are willing to be honestly appraised.

As we go along let us remember that the self-centered man is not a Christ-centered man; the self-seeker is not a Christ-seeker.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES.

Promotion and Training Day, Sept. 30—yet, how few schools will observe this day!

Mr. L. R. Garrett, superintendent of the Hall Summit Sunday school, writes: "Will you please send me a copy of your 'Promotion Day' program for the last Sunday in September?"

We appreciate invitations received recently to "Home-Coming" Day at Greenwood, Shreveport District, and at Cheneyville, Alexandria District. One of the invitations read: "Good fellowship, good music and an inspiring message. A barbecue dinner served on the grounds."

Pineville, across the river from Alexandria, was well represented in the recent Standard Training School at Alexandria. Dr. A. S. Lutz writes as follows about the school: "We had the best school in our history. Interest in this type of work is growing constantly. We will have another school about this time next year."

On Thursday of last week we were in Ruston for a few hours. They were in the midst of their Training School. We heard each member of the faculty speak at the noon hour, as guest of Dr. Drake at the Kiwanis Club.

Miss Mary Skinner, of Nashville, writes: "I find that I failed to take note of the date which you mentioned in connection with your Conference-wide Sunday School Conference next April. I believe I tentatively agreed to be present, but I am writing to ask you to give me the date in order that I may not arrange a conflict in my schedule."

Many nice things were said at the closing of the recent Training School at Winnfield. The class in "Pupil Study" was one of the largest ever taught. In this class the pastor, as well as the superintendent, took a credit. Mrs. J. T. Wood, superintendent of the Beginner Department, received her fourth credit in Beginner Specialization, giving her a Gold Seal Diploma. We congratulate her on this fine record.

POSTPONED.

On account of revival at Roswell, New Mexico, being postponed from October 14th to November 11th, am now available for one or two revivals.

Close your Conference year with a revival; it will help in many ways.

Address: West Point, Miss., September 15 to 30; Crockett, Texas, September 30 to October 14; Texas Christian Advocate, Dallas, Tex., any time.

Dr. A. S. Lutz, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, was a welcomed visitor in our office this week. He reports that the different leaders were working up their Fifth Sunday Institutes, which are to be at Oberlin, Lecompte, Opelousas and Robeline. Brothers P. O. Lowrey, L. C. Wilson and L. E. Crooks were also welcomed visitors this week.

Your writer spent Sunday, Sept. 16, at Ennice, arriving there in time for the Sunday school session, in company with the presiding elder of the Alexandria District. Eunice is at the edge of the rice belt, and its population is mostly French. We have a small membership in our church there, but a very faithful and loyal group of members. The pastor, Rev. I. T. school has some fine leaders in it. They have laid the foundation for a Sunday school building.

The presiding elder insisted that the Conference Superintendent should preach at the evening service, after which we returned home that night. The hospitality showed us at the parsonage was most gracious.

The last issue of the Sunday School Outlook was a special Mansfield College number. We are planning to make the next issue a "Childhood and Youth Week in Louisiana Conference" number. We hope each superintendent will send us results of "Childhood and Youth Week" in his Sunday school.

"A DAY IN THY COURTS."

Dear Dr. Carley: As we near the close of our second very happy year in the ministry of our Lord, we heartily feel with the Psalmist that "a day in thy courts is better than a thousand years." Although only a doorkeeper, I had rather serve in that humble capacity than dwell in tents of wickedness.

Yes, we view with pride and thanksgiving the fruits of our labors on the Waterford charge. Here in the town of Waterford the Lord has bountifully blessed us with a church in which to worship, and has increased our membership nearly fourfold. Through the generosity of our Board of Church Extension, we have recently repaired our church, and we have high hopes of seeing it painted in the near future. (A hint to the membership.) We must also have chairs for our Sunday school rooms.

Some good revivals have been held on the charge during the year. George Baker certainly did some good work here at the home church, where six fine young people were converted and united with the church. J. O. Dowdle held two splendid revivals at Harris Chapel, and at Chulahoma, where two junior Sunday school boys came into the church. R. B. Pearson, of Ashland, came to us at Lebanon, and although only one soul was added to the church, a fine young lady, Brother Pearson inspired all of us with his preaching.

At old Asbury church our presiding elder, Brother Lewis, brought us two great messages on Sunday. We greatly regretted that Brother Lewis could not remain with us through the entire week of the meeting.

We are still in the meeting, but as we have only seven appointments (part of three counties), we hope soon to be through, so that we can raise the collections, of which we have seventy-five per cent subscribed. We also have a good subscription on the Superannuate Endowment Fund, but very little cash.

A great many things are yet to be done, and "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work."

THE LOUISIANA FIELD SECRETAY IS BUSY—AND HAPPY.

Dear Epworth Leaguers: I'm sure that the best news I have for you this time is that the finals in the "Know Missions" Oratorical Contest are over and that our contestant from Louisiana won first place. Three cheers for Julia! She went all the way through with flying colors, and we are proud of her for what she has done. For delivering the finest oration on "Know Missions" in Southern Methodism Julia won first place and one hundred dollars in gold.

I have had a very interesting week in the field. On the 12th I went from New Orleans to Houma, where I spent a day and night at our MacDonell Mission School and met with those fine young people in their League work. I wish that more of my Leaguers might spend a day at this school and see the splendid work being carried on by Miss Hooper and her workers. Rev. B. H. Andrews is serving his first year at Houma, but in this short time he has endeared himself to the hearts of these children in their assocations together.

On the 13th I went to Morgan City, where I met with the Patterson and Morgan City Leaguers. After a business meeting at the church, we went to the parsonage and enjoyed a social time together with Rev. and Mrs. J. C. Rousseaux, Rev. R. L. Clayton and Mrs. Clayton, from Patterson, were also with us.

I went back to New Orleans on the 14th, and met with the Carrollton Avenue Hi Leaguers that evening in their business meeting. The Hi and Junior Leaguers of New Orleans have organized a City Union and are planning to increase in membership and organizations in the city.

Last Sunday morning I went to Slidell, where I attended Sunday school and church and met with the Leaguers for a short time after Sunday school. Mrs. S. O Salessi,of Slidell, is assisting Rev. S. A. Seegers with the Leaguers. She very cordlally entertained me at dinner in her home. I then went on to Covington, to be with Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Jordan and their Leaguers. I met with the Covington Leaguers at their League hour and went to Mandeville with the League president to church services that night. I enjoyed so very much being in Brother Jordan's home and appreciate his interest in our young people and their work.

I am now in Bogalusa, at Brother Tucker's home. These Leaguers here will go to Franklinton to-night, where we will meet together in a business and fellowship program.

The October Eras are out, and most of the Era is concerned about the Young People's revivals to be held in Octoher. Such a great advance was felt in our young people's work last year because of the young people's revivals, and I am hoping that still more Leaguers and churches are planning to hold them this year. The spiritual development of our Leaguers is growing larger all the time. You cannot do hetter, in your entire League program, than hold a Young People's revival by your young people and for your young people.

Sincerely,
ELIZABETH LANGFORD,
Fleid Secretry.

MEETNG OF J. O. Y. UNION.

The J. O. Y. Union of Minden District met with the Bethel League on Sunday, Sept. 16, with sixty-eight Senior and Hi Leaguers present from Sibley, Haughton, Doyline, Minden and Bethel.

Devotional was led hy Paul Cassels, and one talk was given by Miss Mirlam Cox, the new president of the Bethel League, which has been reorganized only a few months. This talk was orlginal and splendidly rendered.

The husiness meeting was also presided over hy Mr. Cassels, in the absence of both president and vice president. Many matters of business were brought before the house. The new "Watch" committee was explained, also the Standard of Efficiency; and the Young People's revivals were stressed.

It was decided to hold the next meeting at Haughton. Delicious refreshments of cream and cake were served.

MARY SEARLES,
District Secretary.

STOCKING TIME.

Saturday afternoon and the first week of school! The sewing teacher, who had been busily engaged inspecting "Sunday clothes" and supplying missing necessities, closed the door of the sewing room with a tired sigh and sank into a chair on the porch.

"How glad I am that this is the first Saturday and there will be no calls for stockings," she thought, "for the stocking box is nearly empty."

Seeing a wistful-eyed little girl standing expectantly near she asked, "What can I do for you, Yvonne?"

"I need some stockings," was the timid answer. Then, in a quaint, Frenchy way, "My papa bought socks, him."

By the time Yvonne was fitted, several others had gathered around, all needing stockings, and each giving a different reason for wanting them.

"I washed all mine and they are wet," said Lucina.

The teacher, glancing at the child's feet, noticed that she had on shoes but no stockings. On inquiry it was found that she had only two pairs, and as three are really needed, another pair was found for her.

Marie spoke next, tugging at her scant hose in a vain endeavor to make them reach her knees. "I went at grandma's and she bought these with a man, and they are too short."

The teacher, smiling at this rare use of English prepositions, found a pretty pair of tan stockings and fitted them on the happy child.

"How much they are?" asked Evest in very business-like tones as he received his allotment.

"Twenty-five cents."

Twenty-five cents! Two and a half hours of work! (The children are taught to earn what they use and are paid for their work at the rate of ten cents an hour.) After thinking seriously a minute he said, "I work them now, me. What you want for I do?"

Work was assigned him and the scene continued until the stocking box was emptied of all its contents except one bundle that was too small for any of the school children. These were laid aside to be taken to some small children whose father was ill and unable to provide for his little ones.

Stocking! Stockings! And more stockings! The cry is never-ending. Stockings apparently melt away, or, like Eugene Field's calico cat and gingham pup—"They just eat each other up." "Now what do you really think of that?"

"I think we need a Miraculous Stocking Box," said one, "like Hawthorne's Miraculous Pitcher."

But a Miraculous Box is not really needed, because the Young People of the Baltimore Conference and the Juniors of Louisiana usually keep that box supplied so that the boys and girls of the MacDonell French Mission School who are doing their part to fit themselves for service in the kingdom of God can have new stockings when they need them.

MRS. CORDLE'S DAUGHTER LIKE A DIFFERENT GIRL

Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

DAUGHTER OF MRS. G. H. CORDLE
833 Hazel St., Macon, Georgia

Macon, Ga.—"I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and feel much relieved and I am giving it to my daughter, too. At twelve years of age she was so pale that even her lips had no color. She couldn't hold out to do any work to amount to anything. I gave her the Vegetable Compound and now at 13 years of age she is like a different girl. We are willing for you to use these facts for a testimonial as we cannot praise the Vegetable Compound too much. We will continue to take it and tell of its wonderful value."—Mrs. G. H. Cordle, 833 Hazel Street, Macon, Georgia.

Will Answer Letters

"I am a young mother, eighteen years of age. From early girlhood I suffered terribly because of a run-down condition. My mother advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see if it would help me, as she was worried. I did, and now I feel fine. After suffering for five years like I did and then taking nothing but the Vegetable Compound, you may be sure I am recommending it to others. I am willing for you to use anything I say as a testimonial and I will answer letters from any woman wanting to know about the medicine."—Mrs. Dewey Moore, 827 Broderick St., Columbus, Ohio.

FROM LAUDERDALE AND ELECTRIC MILLS.

Dear Brother Carley: We are now nearing the close of another Conference year. Our work on the Lauderdale and Electric Mills charge has been pleasant and I trust profitable this year. There has been some advancement on all lines in the charge. In the spring we had the mission study class and pageant at each appointment; later, we have had a Cokesbury study class, studying the book "The Small Sunday School," its plans and work.

Our union meeting was held at Electric Mills, May 27 to June 10. We were assisted by Rev. W. M. McIntosh, D.D., of Columbus, Miss., who did the preaching; and T. C. Green, also of Columbus, was choir leader. We all know Dr. McIntosh as an effective and successful evangelist, and it goes without saying his work with us was, as usual, of high type, strong, impressive and meeting with good results. T. C. Green also did his work well. Eight were received on profession of faith, two by certificate in the Methodist church, about fifteen into the Baptist church, most of them by letter, and two into the Presbyterian church.

Our Lauderdale meeting was held beginning July 23, closing Aug. 1, with Dr. C. W. Crisler, our pastor at Hazlehurst, assisting us. He is also well known in Mississippi and Louisiana as one of our best preachers. His work here proved to us his great worth in the work of the Master, a strong gospel preacher that brought good results. Six were received on profession of faith.

In both places the church has been built up. We have had a well attended prayer meeting in Electric Mills, organized in April; also, we are enjoying the benefit of an Epworth League organization at Electric Mills just beginning to work. The Woman's Missionary Society has almost doubled its membership this year.

Our fourth quarterly conference was held Sept. 9 at Electric Mills. At this conference all claims were paid in full—Superannuate Endowment five years quota all in hand—our quota for Mission Special paid. So, financially, we are able to say "level columns" for all purposes.

We praise the Lord for the measure of success we had on the work. To him be all the glory.

For the people of this charge I must say that I appreciate the privilege of serving them as pastor. They take pride in doing things.

We love the Advocate, and always welcome its visit into our home. Blessings on the work and the workers.

J. T. ABNEY, P. C.

SPOTS BEFORE EYES

Miner Had Dark Spots Before Eyes. Felt Dull, Tired, Achy. Doesn't Get Down Any More.

Somerset, Ky.—Telling how he had known of the merit of Thedford's Black-Draught since he was a boy, Mr. Albert Garland, of this city, recently said:

"I used to work in the mines, but lost quite a bit of time on account of the sick spells I had. I would get to having a bad taste in my mouth, and a very dull, tired feeling and ache. I would have dark spots in front of my eyes, and I would be so dizzy I would stagger like I was drunk.

"I took medicine, but didn't seem to get any better.

"My mother told me to try Black-Draught, which I did, and after a few doses I felt much better. Now I take it as soon as I feel the least bad, and I don't get down. I certainly can say that it has done more for me than any other medicine I have ever taken.

"I never get without Black-Draught. If I go on a visit, I take a package along in my suit-case. My health is better now than it has been in years, and I believe it is the use of Black-Draught that did it."

Black-Draught is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, of highest quality. Try it. NC-195

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois.

REVIVAL AT EPWORTH CHURCH, BILOXI, MISS.

Rev. Chas. Assaf was with the pastor of Epworth Church, Rev. H. L. Daniel, in a revival meeting from September 2 to 14. This is the fourth meeting that Brother Assaf has held in this church, and it was by far the best of them all.

Forty-seven new members were received into the church; eight babies were baptized, and many came to the altar and reconsecrated themselves to the Lord and his work. The community was helped in general. Brother Assaf preached real gospel sermons each service. One man 82 years of age was received into the church by baptism that never has been a member of any church.

The pastor and congregation are very happy. We are serving a very appreciative people. Epworth Church is planning to send their pastor to Conference with a full report.

8 RECORD-BREAKING MONTHS!

Greatest August in Willys-Overland history—68% gain over last year!

NOW August has added its sweeping plurality to Willys-Overland's impressive total for 1928. Eight consecutive months have broken every record for the corresponding months in all of Willys-Overland's 20-year history.

Last month 68% more people bought Whippet and Willys-Knight cars than in August, 1927—a gain of more than two-thirds!

Experienced motorists are quick to appreciate the superiority of the Whippet Four, with its many engineering advantages never before brought to the light car field;—the Whippet Six, the world's lowest priced Six, with 7-bearing crankshaft and other costly car features;—and the Willys-Knight Six, which now, at the lowest prices in history, brings the unmatchable smoothness, silence, power and operating economy of the patented double sleeve-valve engine within easy reach of thousands of new buyers.

THE ARCHEOLOGISTS AND THE EVOLUTIONISTS.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

The archeologists were never so busy and successful as they are now.

They have exploring expeditions at some point or points on every continent on the globe, and they are making most interesting discoveries.

Every discovery made by them tends to confirm the Holy Scriptures and to confute some theory proposed by modern skeptics,

From the archeologists the Christian churches have nothing to fear; for they seek and uncover facts, rather than spin ingenious speculations apart from facts.

Almost daily appear press reports of recent discoveries by the archeologists, in which intelligent men of piety find reasons for the establishment of their faith.

During the past six months archeologists working in Asia, Central America, Mexico, and in the western parts of the United States have exhumed remains of buried civilizations which shed light on the origin and habits of prehistoric man.

Without exception all these archeological discoveries tend to show that primitive man was not a savage, as the evolutionists do vainly affirm; and that man, as far back as any traces of him are uncovered, is always a man, and not a monkey or any other sort of brute. After all these uncoverings of the things that were present in the far-off ages of prehistoric times, "the missing link" is still missing; and it is likely that it always will be missing. No fossil remains supply the slightest evidence that it has ever existed.

Some of the archeologists who have been unearthing during the past year remains of very ancient civilizations have been bold enough to tell how many thousands of years have elapsed since the men of those remote ages lived on earth. Such calculations, of course, are the merest speculations of little, or no, value.

Indeed when the men of science give figures to express the duration of past ages and the date of the beginning of the existence of the planet called Earth, they always make themselves somewhat ridiculous and incur by their folly more or less discredit. No two of them agree, or can agree.

Dr. H. F. Osborn, of the American Museum of Natural History, reckons that man has been on the earth a million years. Prof. Frederick Tilney puts the figures at half a million years. Prof. J. W. Draper sets the mark at two hundred thousand years. Prof. Driver concludes that the age of man on earth does not exceed twenty thousands years, and Professor Morris Morris, Professor of Geology in Melbourne University, declares that "there is nothing to show that man is older than five or seven dozen centuries," that is, six to eight thousand four hundred years.

If the names of all the scientists who have spoken upon this subject were called, it would be found that not one agreed with another. Therefore, when they give us figures to tell the age of the world, or to express the length of time which has passed since man appeared on the earth, we may well laugh at their absurd dogmatism. They simply know nothing about the matter.

The evolutionists wish to get as long stretches of past time as they can in order to get play for their unproved hypotheses. They desire space for the transmutation of species through all the links of an imaginary chain extending from amoeba to man.

But there is no evidence that any such transmutation of species has ever taken place.

Professor Joseph N. LeConte says, "The evidence of geology to-day is that new species seem to come into existence suddenly and in full perfection." To the same effect speaks Professor Louis F. More, saying: "Radically new types have suddenly appeared in great abundance." In the "Life and Letters of Charles Darwin" we find this statement: "We cannot prove that a single species has changed" (III, page 25).

Why then call that science the keystone of the arch of which cannot be supported by any proof whatsoever, and which Dr. LeConte affirms is disproved by the facts of geology? What would be said of a theologian who was guilty of such proofless dogmatism?

Robert Etheridge, F. R. S., Curator of the British Museum, speaks almost contemptuously on the subject, saying: "In all this great Museum there is not a particle of evidence of the transmutation of species. Nine-tenths of the talk of evolution is sheer nonsense, not founded on observation and wholly unsupported by fact. This Museum is full of proofs of the utter falsity of their views."

The speculations of the evolutionists which have gathered around the finding of bundles of ancient bones at several places in the world have been shown to be as equally unproven as their theory of the "transmutation of species."

They have talked much of "the Neanderthal Man," which they asumed to reconstruct from a fragment of a human skull found in a gorge of that name in Georgia in the year 1857. They have made much ado also over the "Cro-Magnon Man," discovered in 1868 in the Cro-Magnon Cave in France, and the "Piit-down Man," imagined from a portion of a skull and jaw bone unearthed at Piit-down, England, in 1913.

But all these bones have been shown to be fragments of remains of men just like the men of today and with no greater variations than exist between present-day skeletons of different men who have died in recent times. There is no color of reason for claiming them to be the remains of apes or ape-like ancestors of man. They are merely bones of men, the like of which might be found on a modern battle-field or dug up in a village cemetery.

The most ridiculous find of the evolutionists is that which they have called by the pretentious name of the "Pithecanthropus Erectus," the history of which is about as follows: In the years 1891 and 1892 there were found, in Java, at different times, five bones, namely, the top of a skull, part of a left thigh-bone, and three teeth. These bones were not found together, but scattered around and apart, the thigh-bone being some forty-five or fifty feet away from where the skull was found. Numerous other fossilized bones of animals were found also in the same area. Six eminent scientists pronounced the skull that of a man, six others said it was that of an ape; while seven others declared that the remains belonged partly to an ape and partly to a man. Nevertheless, the evolutionists, excessively eager to find support for their evolutionary theories (they have more than one) made a bronze bust of the creature which they imagined once possessed these bones; put the composite bust in the "American Museum of Natural History," New York; and dogmatically declared that the "race of ape-men" had been discovered to have existed 500,000 years ago! And this image of the fiction of their imagination is now printed in some school books to show children that evolution is true to facts!

The whole thing is no more worthy of credence than the case of "the second Java man" found, more recently, near the spot where the five bones were exhumed and then bundled together by the evolutionists to make "the Pithecanthropus Erectus." Two eminent scientists in England accepted "the second Java man" as the companion of the first, and heralded the find as the most important discovery of the decade! But unfortunately Dr. A. Hrdlicka, of the Natural Museum at Washington, D. C., examined the skull (supposed to be a skull by the English scientists), and said of it, "A critical examination of this supposed million-year-old near-human skull has revealed beyond doubt that it is an extinct elephant's knee."

It would seem that it were about time to cease rattling these old bones which no more establish any theory of evolution than they prove the moon is made of green cheese, or that "the milky way" is a lacteal current, flowing from Jupiter's dairy.

Young professors, afflicted with the traditionalism which accepts instantly whatever a conspicuous scientist may say, will do well to suspend their enthusiastic teaching of any theory of evolution until the archeologists have more nearly finished their work. Archeology and geology are sciences which are not excessively harmonious with Darwinism or any other theory of evolution.

TRUST.

By William N. Robertson.

I know not whence the wind doth come,
Nor whither it may go;
I only know that toward my home,
All winds and breezes blow.

The stars in heaven that shine at night,
In multitudes so vast,
Reveal to all Creation's Light,
That will all life outlast.

The clouds that float so high in air,
And careless seem of harm,
Tell men that thus may all their care,
Be carried on his arm.

When skies are blue and sun is bright,
Nor storm, nor rain portend,
The soul takes heart in every plight,
And trusts e'en to the end.

The trees that grow with spreading limb,
Draw life from air and soil;
So man with power and heart may climb,
In faith and hope may toil.

POETICAL TEXTS.

By Mrs. George S. Brown.

"The Lord is not slack concerning his promises, as some men count slackness; but is long suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."—II Peter 3:9.

Pinning the Promises.

"The teacher was standing before her class
And smiling a welcome to each little lass.
She said in her gentle and winning way,
'Another sweet promise we'll learn to-day.'

"'Our Father has given them all, you know,
To comfort his children while here below.
Oh, there are so many in his dear Book,
We're certain to find them if we but look.'

"So many! to count them we will not try;
But think as you look at the stars on high,
Each beautiful star that our eyes can see,
May count for a promise for you and me."

Did you ever, after a busy, a wearisome, a trying, a discouraging and disappointing day, when endeavoring to compose yourself to sleep, try repeating the promises of God as found in his Holy Word? They really are as many as the stars that greet us in the sky, and we can pin a promise to each star, knowing that he who promised will surely fulfill. Are we tired of the heat and the burden of the day? "Come unto me all ye who labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Do we need comfort in sorrow? "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." Are we in need? "Ask and ye shall receive." Are our sins and our mistakes and failures grievous to us? "As far as the east is from the west, so far will he remove our transgressions from us." Have we a load too great to carry alone? "Cast thy burden on the Lord and he will sustain thee." Do we feel unworthy and sinful? "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Do we need sympathy? "As one whom his father pitieth so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Are we hungry? "Trust in the Lord and do good. So shalt thou dwell in the land and verily thou shalt be fed." Are we afraid? "Fear not for I am with thee." Do we doubt that the victory will be ours? "To him that overcometh will I give a crown of life."

We must do our part and we may be sure that God will do his. We cannot count the promises, they are so many, and when we repeat just a few, we know that we indeed have a loving Father and one who cares for us.

LAYMEN PLEDGE SUPPORT TO MISSIONARY PROGRAM OF CHURCH.

By Dr. Elmer T. Clark.

Pledging co-operation with the Board of Missions in the church-wide January-February campaign for Missionary Maintenance, the Board of Lay Activities of the church at its annual meeting held at Lake Junaluska in August went on record as affirming devotion to the cause of missions and a willingness to do all in its power to further the missionary work of the church. The resolution was signed by a committee composed of J. C. Guilds, lay leader of the South Carolina Conference, and G. W. Pardee, lay leader of the Little Rock Confrence.

The Stewardship Committee of the Board of Lay Activities went on record as recommending the hearty co-operation of the Board of Lay Activities with the Department of Evangelism of the Board of Missions in its evangelistic plans for the ensuing year. This resolution was signed by J. C. Guilds and T. W. Holloman, lay leader of the Louisiana Conference.

The full text of these two resolutions, adopted unanimously by the Board of Lay Activities, follows:

Co-operation With Board of Missions in Maintenance Campaign.

"We desire to re-affirm our devotion to the great cause of missions and pledge our hearty co-operation to the General Board of Missions in its leadership in this supremely important field. We deeply regret that the conflicts of engagements on the part of so many of the Board, with the December date, prevent the holding of our mid-year Council in connection with the Church-wide Missionary Conference. We wish to express our genuine sympathy with the worthy objectives of the Conference and our readiness to encourage the attendance of laymen upon the same, and we hereby express our willingness to co-operate with the General Board of Missions, both individually and collectively, in the January-February missionary maintenance campaign."

Signed, J. C. Guilds, G. W. Pardee.

Supplemental Report of Stewardship Committee.

"We recognize that Stewardship as related to all life is vitally connected with Evangelism, and hence, from the viewpoint of both Evangelism and Stewardship, the Board of Lay Activities regards the evangelistic task of our church as primary and fundamental. We therefore recommend that our Board co-operate heartily with the Department of Evangelism of the Board of Missions in the evangelistic plans for the ensuing year."

Signed, J. C. Guilds, T. W. Holloman.

SAFETY SIGNALS.

By Rev. S. J. Davies.

My friend said: "Brother Davies, why not write a story? This will make your contributions more attractive."

Well, life is a story, a tale that is told. It scintillates with never-ceasing warmth, light and interest. It is the greatest serial ever penned or printed, an ever continued one, crammed with all the comedy, tragedy, joy and sorrow of pulsing, moving, living men, women and children of men. Far flung on the vast screen of the ages, its action is the procession of years, its possibilities are uncounted, its privileges the envy of angels, its destinies in the hands of God, who gave it to men.

If it were given to me the genius to write fully life's story, my name would rank among the immortals and my fame go sounding through the vast corridors of the centuries, and down the vnices of those who hold the seats of the mighty among the famous. No, I can only touch life here and there with my faltering pen, and perchance in the wee bit of space I hold, by God's grace, offer some counsel, lift some burden from weary hearts, or give new courage to some congenial spirit, who may read, and dream my dreams of life's best things, and then rejoice on the way to a larger life story.

Well, here is my trial for a story. It is a sad, tragic story. But I said life is tragic. A fair girl has just completed her senior year in a great university. In this school of modern thought, old and new theories and philosophies of life and life's meanings were taught.

"Your mother," said a kindly friend, "denied herself of many comforts, even of necessities, made untold sacrifices, and at times suffered from the fatigue and pain of toil that you might study and complete your education."

"Yes, mother did all this and more."

"Then you owe a lasting debt of gratitude to her, and with the promise of a larger life than was her lot, and a wider field of usefulness in the world by virtue of your education and training, no doubt, you will do much to lighten her burden, and bring fuller joy to her life."

"I do not see it that way. My theory of life, as my professor puts it, is altogether self-centered. Mother simply did all these things, bore all these deprivations, because she willed it. It was her choice, I owe her nothing by way of recompense. Each individual is responsible only to one's self. The doctrine of sharing the good things you win in life is effete, belongs to an age now past."

The friend left this young woman. Such a view of life had never dawned on her up to this hour. She could scarcely understand how a human heart could harbor such selfishness, but finally concluded there was no appeal from the heartlessness of this view of life.

Behaviorism, you term it. Pay no attention to ethics or morals. Just take nature as it is, analyze, weigh it, test it—it is only skin, flesh, blood, nerve, bone; lay it bare, uncover every organ, part and parcel of the animal man, he is only brother to fishes, fowls and beasts, and you will go to hell before breakfast.

Shreveport, La.

THE MEANING OF REFORMATION DAY.

(Statement by the Federal Council of Churches.)

Reformation Sunday, which falls this year on Oct. 28, commemorating the posting of Luther's Ninety-nine theses, means more than the recurrence of an anniversary. It is a landmark from which the ground covered in helping to re-enforce the European churches that owe their birth to the Reformation may be surveyed and their continuing need emphasized.

It is true, of course, that only a portion of the Christian world is organized along the lines laid down by Luther, but if any single act may be said to have inaugurated the Reformation as a whole, so diversified in its aspects, it was the challenge which Martin Luther sent forth from the church door at Wittenberg. Hence this is an appropriate occasion to remind the American churches of their fellowship with the evangelical churches of Europe and to urge attention to the needs of those churches which suffered so severely during and after the World War.

During the first three years of its existence, the work of the Central Bureau for the Relief of the Evangelical Churches of Europe (with which the American Federal Council enthusiastically cooperates) was wholly emergency relief. And in spite of the great improvement in European economic conditions, this still constitutes a major part of its program. A single example will illustrate the situation.

Last spring Dr. Charles Kulisz, the head of the Polish Evangelical Church, came to this country to appeal for help in an acute crisis that threatened the very existence of a splendid piece of work which his church has been conducting on behalf of the orphans, aged and homeless in Polish Silesia. Under the new land laws of Poland, the ground which was leased from the government for this welfare work had to be purchased before June 1, or the lease would be cancelled and the property forfeited. As a result of an emergency effort, the Central Bureau was able to send to Poland by the date set the initial payment of $3,000 required by the government, thus saving a farm and equipment worth $60,000 to the Polish church, and preserving to a hundred orphaned children and seventy destitute aged people their only refuge.

Other instances of urgent appeals for help could be multiplied, calls having come during 1928 from sixteen different countries, viz., France, Belgium, Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Latvia, Lithuania, Esthonia, Russia, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Bulgaria and Greece.

The need is too great for any one denomination. It can only be met by an international and interdenominational effort of the Christians of the more prosperous parts of the world to stand by their brethren in distress and help them go forward in their new opportunities.

A program looking toward the building up of a new Christian leadership in Europe is, in a sense, an outgrowth of this relief work. The loss of endowments by colleges and seminaries, the shrinking or total disappearance of scholarship funds, severely handicapped the churches in the recruiting of young men for the ministry and in maintaining a high standard of scholarship in the theological schools. To meet this need, the Central Bureau established more than a score of scholarships at once. Traveling libraries have been developed and many pastors and institutions supplied with religious literature published in America. A limited number of fellowships for study abroad have also been granted. The following tribute to the importance of this phase of the Bureau's work has come from Archbishop Soederblom, of Sweden:

"The great need of proper training of the future Christian leaders of the world, the necessity of taking them out of national and denominational isolation and of letting them come into intimate contact with life and thought in other countries and in other sections of our western civilization, belongs to the program of the excellent and admirably organized work of the European Central Bureau. I cannot recommend the development of that institution warmly enough."

As the Central Bureau is now extending its activities to include the Eastern churches, it has been glad to co-operate in granting fellowships to three Eastern church students, enabling them to study at first hand the life and work of the American churches.

For such constructive assistance the European churches must turn to America, their own resources since the war being hopelessly inadequate. Pastor de Saint Andre, the President of the Executive Commission of the Synod of Central France, sums up one phase of the situation by saying:

"We can deal with the new Paganism, or rather we could if . . ."If . . . if we had men enough and money enough! You cannot realize how handicapped we are in all branches of religious activities, by the consequences of the last war. We had to rebuild nearly all the churches, rectories, parish houses and manses of the invaded area—one-tenth of French territory. Impoverished by the fall of our exchange, we are stopped dead by the nearly prohibitive cost of building as soon as we try to go forward again."

The American churches are urged not to let Reformation Sunday go by without making some mention of the significance of the day. If it is not possible at this time for a church to consider a financial contribution, it can at least remember our sister churches of Europe in its prayers and extend to them the hand of Christian fellowship and sympathy.

The Federal Council of Churches, or the Central Bureau for Relief of the Churches of Europe, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, will gladly send suggestive literature on the observance of Reformation Day, free on request.

UNCLE GABE AND THE POLITICIAN.

By Rev. H. M. Ellis.

Honest, big-hearted, common-sensed, outspoken Uncle Gabe Carter had a wonderful influence out in his community, so, at the close of his long and vigorous speech, the big politician running for office, was pleased to be introduced to him. He was also pleased with the twinkle in Uncle Gabe's eyes, his broad, honest smile and his quiet little chuckle. He grasped Uncle Gabe's big hand and shook it heartily, smiling back warmly.

"I proved my point, didn't I, old Sport?" he confidently and boastfully demanded.

"Well, ef ha'f you sed is so—en I ain't here to 'spute it, that other fellow shore ain't fitten fer the office," Uncle Gabe laughed back.

The candidate gave vent to a satisfied burst of laughter, tightened his grip on Uncle Gabe's hand, gave it half a dozen enthusiastic up-and-downs, and then exclaimed delightedly:

"I knew I'd win the vote of a good, sensible man like you!" And again he indulged in great hilarity.

Uncle Gabe smiled back and chuckled; and then, with a sly wink, replied: "Well, I ain't said so much es that. You see that other fellow was out here nigh on to two weeks ago, and he proved 'bout es much on you es you just now done proved on him."

For a moment the politician was nonplussed; then a hot flush leaped into his face. He dropped the old man's hand, shook his finger in his face and shot back in angry tones: "I've heard a plenty of that dirty scoundrel's lying charge. They're a pack of lies, every word of them!"

Uncle Gabe's smile broadened and his chuckle was much more noticeable. "I 'lowed es much when he was er talkin', just same es I 'lowed while you was er talkin' 'bout him. 'Pears like both of you keep so busy bemeanin' one another that thar can't narry one of you take time to show the voters somebody fitten for the office."

THE METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis.

The Methodist Orphanage was opened on a high hill in southeast Water Valley thirty-five years ago with one little child. The total value of the plant was not over $10,000.

To-day, in the city of Jackson, there is a three-story girls' dormitory with administration offices, dining room and chapel; a two-story boys' dormitory; a two-story brick school building; central steam-heating plant and laundry; stables, garages and other outhouses.

Five miles in the country we have a 320-acre farm having on it a two-story brick boys' dormitory, outhouses, machinery, etc., making a total valuation of Orphanage of nearly $400,000. Instead of one child, we have 200 boys and girls, with over 3,000 girls and boys, our own children, scattered over the State.

To care for this large crowd calls for $3,000 per month. This is 50 cents a day for salaries, food, clothing, schooling, etc. A common school is maintained on the ground for our children, but all junior and high school children attend the city schools.

Boys and girls desiring and capable of attending college are given a college degree and business profession.

The Home is supported by volunteer monthly contributions from Sunday schools and churches and individuals. Each Conference has endorsed the plan of presenting this claim to each congregation one Sunday each month, they making a prompt remittance to the office in Jackson. In addition, each October a Work Day offering is asked of each congregation, and individual friends throughout the State. Work Day this year will be Oct. 11.

The Work Day and monthly offerings ran the Home nicely until the new building was erected, but the income has not been sufficient to meet the calls since.

Earnest efforts to have a general observance of Work Day this year are being made. Our goal is every church and Sunday school observing the day; and a $30,000 contribution is earnestly desired. The Big Brother.

MOORINGSPORT, LA.

We have just closed a delightful series of services at Mooringsport. As very few people outside the church attended, we had no conversions, but both Methodist and Baptist people attended well and were deeply stirred; hence there was a genuine revival.

Brother J. W. Sudduth, of the White's Chapel charge, did the preaching; and it was done with remarkable clearness, vigor and effectiveness. He is deeply spiritual, and knows how to move a congregation; and we had some of the most impressive, and, I believe, fruitful consecration services I have ever had part in. He is an excellent singer and choir director, and these elements added greatly to the interest. Mrs. Sudduth came with her husband, and kindly served as pianist. She is a very fine Christian character, a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. E. G. Sewell, of Bunkie. She is a Kidd-Key graduate, and holds the degree of Bachelor of Music from Southern Methodist University. These qualifications, combined with a most charming personality, made her service at the piano an inspiration and benediction to us.

Our little church has sailed through rough seas all this year. But, forgetting adversities and disasters that came through no fault of theirs, our people rallied during this meeting, and are hopeful of closing the year with victory and a fine outlook. The whole town fell in love with the splendid young couple who helped us; and I doubt if any two people ever visited this community for so short a time, and left behind so many friends, and so deep, abiding and wholesome an influence. We are deeply grateful to our Heavenly Father for the present blessing and brightening prospects.

ENGLAND AND PROHIBITION.

By Rev. F. B. Hill.

I read Brother Allen's travel letters with much pleasure; they were very fair and interesting. Those sordid things he speaks of are true, and if one looks for them he can find them. A London paper, the Express, appeared last Sunday with flaming headlines, "England Going Dry," and gave these figures: "The consumption of liquor in England during the last fiscal year was less than a third of that consumed at the beginning of the century, according to figures just issued. The 1900 consumption of spirits in England was 32,239,522 gallons as compared with 10,412,921 gallons last year. Before the war there were two million total abstainers, where now there are ten millions."

Merryville, La.

A DANGEROUS CONSTITUTIONAL PROPOSITION.

By Rev. A. C. Millar, D.D., Editor, Arkansas Methodist.

The last General Conference submitted a proposition to the Annual Conferences and the bishops decided that the vote on it should be taken at the round of Conferences held this year.

The proposition is: "That, if any representative elected to the General Conference ceases to be, for any reason whatever, a member of the Annual Conference which elected him in the interval of holding the General Conference, the alternate shall automatically take the seat in the General Conference in the order of their election."

This is badly worded, and, if it is adopted, it will be a pity to mar the Constitution with such careless language. However, that is a small matter, and I shall not quibble over it.

The argument made in its favor is that, occasionally, a delegate who has been elected by one Annual Conference is transferred and then, if he sits in General Conference, does not represent the Conference that elected him, and two cases are cited. At first thought this argument seems plausible, but it will not stand the test of sound reasoning.

1. The General Conference legislates for the whole church, and it is unusual that any measure concerns one Annual Conference more than another; hence the delegate is as well qualified to legislate on general questions when he happens to be in one Conference as if he were in another. In England a member of Parliament can even be elected from a district in which he does not live.

2. The traveling connection is one, and Annual Conference, unlike States, may be changed by the General Conference, and indeed, a whole Annual Conference may be eliminated; consequently it is evident that an Annual Conference is not a permanent territorial district; but the itinerant preachers are in Annual Conferences only because they are convenient administrative units, and a ministerial delegate represents the whole traveling connection rather than any particular Conference.

3. It is argued that the change would cause our General Conference to be made up like Congress and Legislatures. That is a mistake. The Constitution of the United States reads: "No person shall be a representative who shall not have attained to the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of the State in which he shall be chosen."

This simply requires that a member of Congress shall be an inhabitant of the State "when elected," and a Congressman may move from one district to another or even to another State without forfeiting his membership.

The Constitution of the writer's State (Arkansas) provides that a representative shall be a resident of the county electing him for one year at the time he is chosen, but does not forbid his removal to another county, and many cases could be cited in which a representative has actually represented the county that elected him when he was at the time living in another county.

Thus we have analogies in both nation and State for the present status, and the argument that the change would bring us more into harmony with the conditions under which we live is not pertinent.

4. However, there are far more weighty arguments for maintaining our present conditions which do not force a delegate to lose his place if he is transferred to another Conference before the General Conference meets. The bishops have the unrestricted right to transfer a traveling preacher from one Conference to any other without his consent or the consent of any Annual Conference; consequently, if a delegate loses his membership in the General Conference when he is transferred, it would be possible for the bishops by a free use of the transfer power to eliminate certain preachers from the General Conference, or even to change the whole personnel of a General Conference. It may be said that they would never attempt to do such a drastic and undemocratic thing. Granted; but is it wise to make possible such an undesirable thing?

5. This change would greatly embarrass the bishops in their administration; because it might, after an election and adjournment of Conference, become very necessary for a bishop to transfer a preacher, and yet he might be unwilling to do it because it would mean the loss to the General Conference of a man greatly needed in the Conference. Thus the transfer power would be impaired, and bishops would be unwilling to make needed transfers solely because of their unwillingness to deprive a General Conference of the presence of that preacher.

6. Instead of getting better representation for the Conference from which the preacher was transferred, it might often result in giving that Conference much poorer representation; because, as a rule, the ablest members are elected delegates and not much care taken in the election of alternates; hence a man might be elected by his Conference for a specific purpose and because he had been transferred that Conference might be deprived of the very man it had chosen for a purpose. There is just as much danger of this as there is of a Conference being misrepresented by a man who had been transferred.

7. Not merely would the bishops have the power thus to eliminate men from the General Conference and change the personnel of the Conference, but if a bishop should transfer a man who had been elected for a specific purpose or who might be under the bishop's displeasure, the bishop would be under suspicion of doing it for unworthy motives. It is not fair to our bishops to put them in this delicate position when it becomes necessary for them to transfer delegates-elect.

Conclusion: Since the purpose to be served by this proposed amendment of our Constitution seems to have but one end, to secure better representation, and it is seen that it would frequently result in worse representation, and since it would give the bishops, if they choose to exercise it, the unrestricted power to change the whole personnel of a General Conference and bring them under suspicion when they transfer certain men, it is clear that we would lose far more than we would gain and embarrass the episcopacy; consequently the proposed amendment should be overwhelmingly defeated.

AT THE TREATY SIGNING.

One lone representative of the women of America had a great thrill on that memorable day—Aug 27—when the Multilateral Treaty plan for the renunciation of war was signed. She was Mrs. James W. Morrison, of Chicago, former vice president of the National League of Women Voters. Mrs. Morrison had the distinction of being one of the lucky twenty-odd women who were included in the United States' group to witness the signing. In a letter written on that very day to Miss Ruth Morgan, Mrs. Morrison tells us, in her picturesque way, what the scene meant to her:

"When the wire came that there was a ticket for me for the signing I rose at 4:30 for my ride across the sea to catch the train for Paris. It was one of those ineffable, shy dawns you get sometimes over the water, not the smashing kind, but delicate, elusive and very beautiful—and yet light came steadily and surely. I thought of the dawn of a spiritual day for women, that Mrs. Catt had done so much to bring about, and all her labors and yours for this greatest of all enlightenments, which to-day's event makes so definitely nearer.

"Flags of all nations flew above the Quai D'Orsay, the German conspicuous. The lesser guests were in the Galerie de la Paix and we could look through the big arches into the sumptuous Salon de L'Horlage, while the press and the battery of cameras were at the back, facing the horseshoe table at which the plenipotentiaries were to sit. The Salon was about half full of a very impressive gathering. One recognized a great may figures—Herrlot, with his kindly, humorous eyes; Poincare, small and looking rather chubby and rosy, as compared with the harassed figure hurling denunciations at his enemies which I saw in the Chamber last year; M. Clandel and his charming wife; Loucheur, with his animated expressions that somehow play over the surface of his face without connecting with his thoughts and feelings; then the signers—gray Aristide Briand; small white-haired Kellogg; Streseman, pale and ill, but pluckily steady; Lord Cushendun, towering a full head above the rest; my old friend Uclada, grown quite gray; Cosgrave, and all the rest.

"We all arose, of course, while they took their places, and then Briand made his speech. There was a little ripple of appreciation at his reference to Kellogg's comment that the neighborhood of the Place de la Concorde seemed a good place to sign the Pact, but of course no applause until the end. It was too sophisticated a crowd to be very demonstrative, but there was real enthusiasm when Mr. Stresemann was escorted around the big table to the little one, where the Pact, very sumptuous in blue leather and gilt tooling, lay awaiting signatures with a foot-long pen, presented by the town of Havre. The applause lasted until he took his seat again; then came Kellogg, also warmly welcomed, and the others in order.

"The newspapers make much of the fact that Stresemann is the first German Minister of Foreign Affairs to come to Paris in sixty-one years, and it is a real tribute to his sincerity and will to peace that he was greeted at the station by a very large and very enthusiastic crowd of French."—Council of Women for Home Missions.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Please send to me the name and address of each member of the Missionary Committee appointed for each church of your charge, indicating the chairman of the committee, and the agent for the Missionary Voice. (I refer to the agent for the church and not the Missionary Society.)

You may have appointed the same committee you had this year, or you may have a different one. In either case, give me their names and addresses. I should like to have your list as soon as they are appointed.

I thank you very much for your co-operation during the year and trust everything goes well with you in closing up the year.

Yours very sincerely,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Missionary Secretary.

SUNFLOWER MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION.

The Sunflower Ministerial Association met in Indianola, Tuesday, Sept. 11. The beautiful new church is a credit to the town, and gives evidence that the Methodist people of Indianola love God and take great interest in advacing his cause and kingdom. Under the leadership of their very capable pastor, Rev. J. D. Wroten, they have wrought well. All honor to them!

The sermon of the day was delivered very forcefully and from a sincere heart by Rev. J. H. Felts. It was a time of spiritual refreshing. Some one asked Brother Felts if he preached like that all the time, or if that was something extra. It was generally agreed, if that was a fair sample, the Greenwood people are fortunate every Sabbath day.

Lunch was served in the church dining hall by the ladies of the Indianola church. As is always the case in Indianola, the lunch was most excellent and the social hour was very enjoyable.

The afternoon hour was filled with very helpful discussions on "The Relation of the Preacher to His Former Charge." The next meeting will be held on Tuesday, Oct. 16, in Isola. The following program was given for the October meeting:

10 a. m., Sermon.

11:30, "How Long Should We Preach?" led by Rev. J. D. Wroten.

Afternoon program:

I. "What attention should we pay to clear and distinct utterance from the pulpit?" led by Rev. A. Y. Brown.

II. "What should be our manner and bearing on the floor of the Annual Conference when reporting for the charges?" led by Rev. J. V. Bennett.

III. "The relation of the preacher to civic and secret organizations in his charge." Round table discussion.
